"Spirit of my departed friend," said he, "is it through thee these better thoughts are rising in my mind? Is it thou who hast shown me, all the way I have been drawn to meet this man, the blessings of the altered time? Is it thou who hast sent thy stricken mother to me, to stay my angry hand? Is it from thee the whisper comes that this man did his duty as thou didst—and as I did, through thy guidance, which has wholly saved me here on earth—and that he did no more?"

He sat down with his head buried in his hands and, when he rose up, made the second strong resolution of his life—that neither to the French officer nor to the mother of his departed friend, nor to any soul, while either of the two was living, would he breathe what only he knew. And when he touched that French officer's ghost with his own that day at dinner he secretly forgave him in the name of the Divine Forgiver of injuries.

The time has since come when the son of Major Richard Doubledick and the son of that French officer, friends as their fathers were before them, fought side by side in one cause, with their respective nations, like long divided brothers whom the better times have brought together, fast united.

Precept and Practice.

Ambassador Has Left

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Aug. 1st.—A despatch from Washington says that a report has reached the White House, that the German Ambassador to Russia has left St. Petersburgh and that Ambassador Herrick, at Paris, had reported that a plan to have United States take over the affairs of the German embassy in Paris was under discussion.

BELGIUM BEGINS HER PREPARATIONS

BRUSSELS, Aug. 1.—With the receipt of the news that Germany had declared war upon Russia, orders were immediately issued from the War office for a hurried movement of troops toward the Belgian border.

Located as she is, Belgium plans to guard her frontier to prevent the centring of fighting between the German and French armies falling on Belgian soil in case France is drawn into the conflict, and Belgium remains neutral.

Kaiser's Game was Called

War Was Precipitated By Russia's Refusal To Cease Mobilization of Troops.

LONDON, Aug. 1st—

The entire ministry was assembled to confer with King George. It was accepted that the fact that Russian mobilization was complete and that France had ordered its entire army to assemble to-morrow had forced the Kaiser's hand. He had given Russia an ultimatum that expired at noon to-day to stop mobilization. The demand had been refused and reports that the German Ambassador had already left St. Petersburg have been circulated since noon.

SKIN SOFT AS A CHILD'S

"I was a great sufferer from eczema and salt rheum for years," writes Mr. John W. Nass, Lunenburg, N.S. "Five years ago three boxes of Dr Chase's Ointment cured me and the old trouble never returned. My skin is soft as a child's now, and I shall always say a good word for this Ointment."

Germany Is Ready To Strike

Kaiser Takes Command of Troops and and Leaves for the Russian Frontier in Imperial Transport Trains.

Berlin, Aug. 1.

The Kaiser is expected to assume his position as Commander-in-Chief as soon as the land operations begin.

Berlin is wildly excited to-night.

The streets are jammed with madly cheering throngs.

The word of fighting on the boundaries is expected momentarily.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 1.—The German Ambassador to Russia, immediately after serving the formal notice of His Majesty's declaration of war against Russia, demanded and received his passports. He then returned to the Embassy, where his official staff was in waiting.

All of the Germans then went to the railway station, where the Imperial train, guarded by infantry, was in waiting. Its trip to the frontier was begun.

PARIS, Alg. 1.—It was stated that the German Army, which has been held in readiness during the last 24 hours, will strike at once.

Orders are also reported to have been sent to the German Fleet to attack the Russian Fleet at once.

Officials believed the report is true, but are trying to secure official confirmation.

BERLIN, Aug. 1. — The German Army mobilization was completed this afternoon. Both Army and Navy are now on a war basis.

FRANCE READY

PARIS, August 1.—France received word that Germany had declared war on her ally—Russia—to-night with equanimity. It has been expected all day.

Simultaneous with the receipt of the news here, the President and his Cabinet held a conference.

It was expected that the German Ambassador would demand his passport immediately.

No attempt was made to minimise the seriousness of the situation.

France expects war, and is ready for it.

BRITAIN HAS SPOKEN

British Ambassador Assures French Cabinet of Immediate Assistance.

PARIS, August 1.—Britain has thrown n her fortunes with France and Russia. The British Ambassador called at the Elysee Palace this evening and formally assured the President that Britain is prepared to stand by her treaties and co-operate with France in connection with the present International crisis.

This announcement placed the burden for an armed break squarely in the hands of the Kaiser.

The British Ambassador called at the Palace during the Cabinet conference. He was at once received by the President. He explained the various moves of the day and recited the development of the conference with the German Ambassador. The British Ambassador then stated that he had been authorised by his Government to say that Great Britain endorsed the position that France has taken, and was prepared to stand by her as promised.

Germany formally declared war on Russia shortly before eight o'clock to-night.

The onus of breaking peace was placed on the Kaiser.

The German Ambassador to Russia formally placed in the hands of the Russian Premier a formal declaration of war. It recited the failure of Russia to comply with the Kaiser's ultimatum, and declared that the only thing left was recourse to arms. The declaration was against Russia.

France's action in ordering the mobilisation of her army to-morrow forced the Kaiser's hand.

The declaration followed a day of unbroken conferences between the Kaiser and his Council.

German diplomatic representatives in Russian and French territory will be recalled at once.

German Vessel In St. Lawrence

MONTREAL, Aug. 1. — Watched grimly all along the St. Lawrence by those who believe her flag will shortly be that of their enemy, the German steamer "Willehad," to-day, with wheat and flour for Germany, is racing toward high sea. She steamed 24 hours ahead of schedule to-day in the hope of getting out of Canadian waters before the expected decaration of war. It will be three days before she can possibly hope to get on the hig sea. Her cargo would be a valuable prize. The Government cruisers around the mouth of the St. Lawrence have been told to keep track of her.

Berlin Frenzied

BERLIN, Germany, Aug. 1—

The populace is in a frenzy of patriotic fervor. Quotations from the speeches of illustrious war generals of the past are bandied about, evoking cheers and patriotic songs. The Imperial Chancellor touched a popular chord when in addressing a vast crowd that clamoured outside his office, he quoted Prince Frederick Charles' words to his troops from Brandonburg: "Our hearts beat for Gemany and our fists on the enemy."

LONDON, August 1.—The King and Cabinet were into conference to-night immediately following the announcement that Germany had formally declared war on Russia at 7.30 to-night.

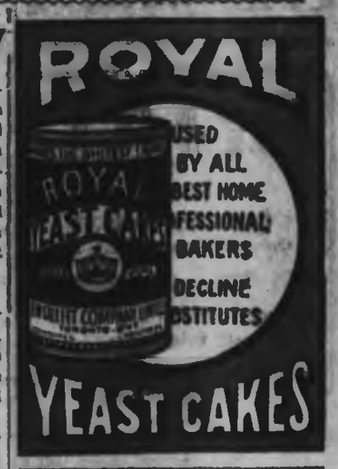
It was expected that a definite statement of Britain's intentions would be forthcoming to-night.

Orders to complete the mobilisation of the entire British Army are known to have been issued, but whether they have been secretly issued is not yet known.

France is Ready

PARIS, AUG. 1.—All Paris appeared to be waiting the news in the boulevards. The informal word passed along by word of mouth even before extras could follow. The notice was blazoned on the bulletin boards and the scene that followed in cars and streets have not been witnessed in Paris in the present generation.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—The great war is on. Germany took the initiative, and formally declared hostilities against Russia to-night. Up to the present moment it is Russia and Servia against Germany and Austria Hungary. France is expected to be included at any moment. Her Army will mobilize to-morrow. Already part of it is in the field. England has not taken formal action. Secret mobilization of the active army has been in progress all day. Railroad companies have massed their equipment ready to turn over to the King. King and Cabinet have been in almost continued conference, but up to the latest moment that Russia and Germany broke, His Majesty was striving feverishly to avert the tremendous catastrophe. Wire communication with the continent is seriously interrupted. All mesages show the earmarks of strict censorship. But enough facts are eft to indicate that the seriousness of the situation has not been over estimated.



LONDON, Aug. 1—Light prices in London for foodstuffs have already soared sky high. In Germany, Austria and Russia, where the government has requisitioned enormous supplies of food for the provisions of its troops, the situation is acute. In Servia and Austria the call to arms brought men from the fields, brown with the harvest. Grain that goes to make black bread of Southern Europe will spoil. Germany cannot obtain her usual enormous quota of the Russian wheat fields. All the nations of Europe to-night were known to have abolished the Customs import tax on foreign wheat.

Order Given For The Mobilization of The English Army

THOUSANDS OF CANADIANS OFFER TO ENLIST FOR BRITAIN

Although No Call Has Been Made For Men, Over 7,000 Have Expressed a Desire to Lend Their Services.

GOVERNMENT IS UNITED

"With reference to your telegram, August 1, his Majesty's Government gratefully welcomes the assurance that in the present crisis they may rely on the whole-hearted co-operation of the people of Canada."

(Signed) Harcourt.

OTTAWA, Aug. 3—The above cablegram was received on Sunday afternoon from the Right Hon. Lewis Harcourt, in reply to Canada's offer of assistance.

The Government, representing all the people of Canada, is taking prompt action to back up that assurance of help. There are no political differences in the present crisis. Sir Wilfrid Laurier sent word that he was cutting short his holiday in Athabaska and starting at once for the capital. He arrived last night and is ready to co-operate with Premier Borden in all necessary measures for the assistance of the mother land, and the defence of the Empire. Other Liberal leaders are here on the same mission.

Entire Cabinet Summoned.

All the absent members of the Cabinet are hurrying back to the Capital in response to a summons sent out on Friday by Premier Borden. At to-morrow morning's session it is expected that all the Ministers will be present, with the exception of Hon. Messrs. Burrell and Lougheed, who are en route from the West; Hon. Dr. Roche, who is convalescing in Rochester from his recent operation, and Hon. George Perley, who is in England. His Royal Highness the Governor-General is speeding towards the Capital by special train from Banff, and is expected to arrive to-morrow night.

Several Thousands Have Volunteered.

At the Militia Department the usual Sabbath quiet has been replaced by hurried preparations for war. Offers to go on active service have been pouring in for the past forty-eight hours. They represent all sections of Canada, and all branches of the militia service. Up to 6 o'clock to-night the number of volunteers, as represented by the offers of their commanding officers, was approximately 7,000. In the list are ten infantry regiments, four cavalry corps, four batteries of field artillery, and three engineering corps.

Arranging for Mobilization.

Col. Sam. Hughes, after attending a Cabinet Council meeting last evening, left on a hurried trip to Quebec to inspect the defence there and arrange for rush orders for ammunition and rifles. He came back to the Capital on a late train to-night. The department is ready to act on a minute's notice in putting the machinery in motion for the mobilization of a Canadian army division. The total number of men that will be mobilized at once has not yet been determined, pending to-morrow's meeting of the Cabinet, and the character of the request from the Imperial Government.

First Contingent Would Comprise 21,000.

According to tentative plans, the Canadian expeditionary force will consist of about 21,000 men, including three infantry brigades or twelve regiments, or 12,000 men; 3 brigades of field artillery, comprising 9 batteries of 36 guns and 1,500 men, a brigade of howitzers with 800 men, one heavy battery with 200 men, a cavalry squadron of 149 men, 2 field companies of engineers of 160 men, an army service corps of 420 men, and 3 field ambulance corps of 760 men. The men of the permanent force will form the nucleus of the first contingent.

If more men are needed the Government has told the War Office that they can readily be supplied. A second and a third army division can be raised in the course of a month.

FIRE IN COAL SHOOT

The Fire Brigade received a call to the rear of Nugent's store yesterday, where a fire had commenced in the coal shoot adjacent to the stock of drugs. A line of hose was laid and the flames extinguished before any damage could result.

Mobilization Has Been Announced

Sir Edward Grey Presents a Cautious and Deliberate Statement of Britain's Position--Troops Called Out For Precautionary Measure.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 3.—When Sir Edward Grey was recognized in the Commons, he declared, amidst frenzied cheering:

"England must now consider this crisis from the viewpoint of British honour and obligation, as well as from her interests. If the German fleet bombards the French coast we cannot stand aside and watch it. We have been given to understand that Germany is willing to agree that her fleet will not attack the northern coast of France, provided that we will remain neutral. The King of Belgium has telegraphed a supreme appeal to England to safeguard his country's integrity. The big question for England now, the question that overshadows all else, is the question of Belgium and her integrity." Grey explained that the final word for peace or war must come from Parliament. Up to the present time, he explained, England's promises to her allies, France and Russia, have been of diplomatic support. This has been given and failed, he said. The Foreign Minister then announced that in accordance with precautionary measures the Cabinet had ordered mobilization.

GREY HINTS AT ENGLAND'S HONOUR

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Sir Edward Grey placed the blame for the break in European peace on Germany. He said there was nothing in Britain's previous diplomatic attitude that restricted her at this moment. He said Britain would suffer little more by intervening than she would if she stood aside and thereby lost the respect of the world; this would more than counterbalance any saving there might be.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—In the House of Commons this evening Sir Edward Grey announced that the Belgian Government had addressed an appeal to Great Britain to preserve Belgian integrity from German invasion The opinion of the press gallery at the moment is that this announcement by Grey is paving the way for Asquith's announcement of the commencement of war between Britain and Germany.

BRITAIN READY FOR CONSEQUENCES

One significant point in Sir Edward Grey's speech was his statement that Great Britain was prepared to take the consequences of using all her strength in this issue, and it might not be long before it would be necessary in her own defence to do so.

OTTAWA, Aug. 3. — It is learned that a naval contractor who had tendered for certain government work under the Laurier navy plans, has been asked by the government if he could undertake certain work immediately.

WILL INDEMNIFY LUXEMBURG

LUXEMBURG, Aug. 3. — The Minister of State of Luxemburg has received a telegram from the German Imperial Chancellor declaring that the military measures taken by Germany in Luxemburg do not constitute a hostile act against the Grand Duchy. They are simply measures, the Chancellor states, to protect a railway connection with the German system against a possible attack by the French troops. Luxemburg will be completely indemified for any damage that may be done to its lines.

GERMAN CRUISERS OFF CAPE BRETON

Persistent Report From Ottawa Suggests a Menace to Canada---Russian Fleet Defeated by Germans--200 German Troops Reported Killed in Alsace-Lorraine.

AFTERNOON DESPATCHES TO 3:30

OTTAWA, Aug. 3.—It is reported here that two German cruisers near Sydney, Cape Breton, contemplate getting possession of the two French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, at strategic points in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The influence of their presence on Canadian shipping transports is of course realized.

In the face of the present difficulty of borrowing from England it is believed that the Canadian banks will be called upon for a supply of money necessary in the case of Canadian mobilization. All indications point at present to a special session of Parliament at an early date.

LONDON, Aug. 3. — (Flash.)—Grey announces the mobilization of the British army and navy.

FRANCE WILL DECLARE WAR

OTTAWA, Aug. 3. — A troop train passed through Ottawa at an early hour this morning. The men were members of the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery, who have been training at Petawawa during the summer. They belong to the regulars and have been ordered to Quebec so as to be ready in case of a quick mobilization. The Royal Canadian Horse Artillery is a formidable body with a good record for markmanship.. Their passing caused considerable excitement.

A GERMAN TROOP TRAIN BLOWN UP

Special Wire to A. H. Stratton & Co.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—A German troop train was blown up to-day in the province of Alsace-Lorraine. Two hundred soldiers were killed, according to a despatch received at the war office.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—A Russian fleet was defeated yesterday in a battle with some German boats off the Aland Islands. The Russian boats put into the Gulf of Finland and are at anchor to-day. Germany has seized the Aland Islands, which form part of Finland.

Finnish fishermen report that a Russian battleship has gone ashore on one of the islands.

WILL CENSOR CANADIAN MESSAGES

OTTAWA, Aug. 3.—If Great Britain declares war the government will at once establish a censorship over the telegraph service of the Dominion. The department of Civil Service will take charge of the wireless stations while the Department of Militia will establish a censorship over the land service. All messages passing through Canada will have to have an official government stamp indicating that it has passed the censor.

COALITION GOV'T MAY BE FORMED

Also Rumoured That Kitchener Will Be War Secretary

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Eng., Aug. 13.—Arthur Bonar Law, Marquis of Lansdowne, and other Opposition leaders, were in conference to-day with cabinet ministers, and this gave rise to a rumour that a coalition government was in process of formation to tide over the present situation. It is also rumoured that Kitchener will be appointed secretary for war.

SOCIALISTS HAVE THREATENED THE ITALIAN GOV'T

CHIASSO, Italy, Aug. 2.—The censorship on press messages, especially those directed to points outside of Italy, has beaten all records. Foreign correspondents are obliged to have recourse to all kinds of subterfuges to avoid confiscation, besides being subject to severe penalties. All this unjustifiable rigour in order to prevent the telling of the truth, viz., that the Government is undecided whether to actively participate in the struggle, or to remain neutral if the situation permits, making, meanwhile, sub-rosa, all military and naval preparations for defence or possible offence, not withstanding the strong agitation by the Socialists, who favour abstention, even from preparation.

The Socialists challenge the Government, saying that if only one soldier or sailor is sent against France this time such a revolution will explode throughout Italy as to overthrow the present state of things.

The panic is causing a great augmentation in the price of food and serious difficulty in the circulation of money. There is strong anxiety among foreigners regarding the realization of letters of credit, and also the means of transportation for home, especially among the Americans, many of whom wish to return before an established time, but find that all the boats are overcrowded.

SUMMARY OF WAR UP TO 3 P.M. TO-DAY

Germany began invasion of France without formal declaration of war. One column entered France via Luxemburg, and another force by way of Belgium, and is reported to have been repulsed with heavy loss.

Mobilization of French army has been completed and forces are being rushed to the frontier.

Italy continues her decision to remain neutral.

Companies of Royal Canadian Regiment left London and Toronto for Halifax amid great enthusiasm.

Reports of British collier seized by Germans contradicted.

Two German cruisers said to have been seen off Capt Briton, ready to seize French Islands St. Pierre and Miquelon.

British cruisers met the German liner Kronprinzzessin Cecilie at sea and escorted her to Southampton. The Kronprinzessin Cecilie has on board $13,000,000 in gold, which was shipped by New York to London and Paris bankers.

The British fleet is in the North Sea ready for battle.

All British naval reserves all over the world have been ordered to return to England for service.

Precautions are being taken in British colonies in all parts of the world against attack.

Complete mobilization of British army ordered "for precautionary measures."

WAS IN HIS 104th YEAR

Prominent English Lawyer Was Relative of Local Lady

Mrs. Wm. T. Wilson, 425 Water street, has received a copy of the Chronicle, Brighton, England, announcing the death of a cousin of her late husband, W. A. G. Hake, of Brighton, in his 104th year. The late Mr. Hake was a prominent lawyer, and was known, by reason of his long years at the bar, as the "Father of the Bar." Both the deceased Mr. Hake, and Mrs. Wilson's late husband, were first cousins to General Gordon, who was killed at Khartoum.

CONVENTION OF MARBLE DEALERS OPENS TO-DAY

Nearly a Hundred of the Members Arrive for Business Sessions—Trip to Rice Lake To-morrow.

THE PROGRAMME

The Ontario Marble and Granite Dealers' Association held the first meeting of their semi annual convention at the Oriental Hotel this afternoon. Representatives from all the principal cities of the Province attended as well as a large number from the Vermont Marble Works. The object of the Society is the advancement of the monumental business in the Province. The whole of to-day was occupied in general business, while to-morrow the members will take a trip to Rice Lake and other points.

The convention opened at 1 o'clock by a meeting of the Executive, the first open meeting being held at 1.30. Addresses of welcome were made by Mr. T. M. Howard and Mr. T. W. Moore. Responses were made by Mr. Jones of Ottawa, and Mr. W. Forbes of London, Ont.

The delegates will also have a drive about the City this afternoon. This evening another business session will be held, when addresses will be delivered by Mr. J. W. Hutchison of Aylmer, and Mr. Geo. D. McKenzie of Toronto.

At the opening of the open meeting at which Mr. Sanderson of Orillia was chairman, Mayor Buller welcomed the convention, as also did Mr. Stratton, Chairman of the Reception Committee. Mr. Jones of Ottawa responded. Messrs. T. M. Howard of the Vermont Marble Company, T. W. Moore of Peterborough, and Wm. Forbes of London, Ont., also spoke briefly before the regular business commenced.

The Chairman of the Executive Committee referred to the matter of the protest against taxes by the dealers in Collingwood, which might culminate in a law suit. The matter was held over for discussion at the evening session.

Messrs. B. Crebar and P. Thompson, both of Toronto, were appointed auditors. The report of the Secretary Treasurer was duly received and the meeting was adjourned until this evening when several addresses will be rendered.

There were about thirty members present, including Mr. McLeod, the President, and Mr. Watson, editor of the "Reporter," of Chicago.

SIR GEO. FOSTER MAY BE CAPTURED BY THE GERMANS?

Report From Ottawa Has Appearance of Exaggeration in Its Probabilities

OTTAWA, Aug. 3.—This is Civic Holiday at the Capital, but it is no holiday for the Ministers of the Crown or he officers of the militia, naval and marine departments. The government has made several ineffective attempts to get into touch with Sir Geo. Foster, who having been in Newfoundland with the Dominion Trade Commission, was due to arrive at Sydney to-day. The report that a German Cruiser has been seen off Sydney has suggested the possibility that Sir George and other members of the commission may possibly be in some danger of capture. At any rate his colleagues of the cabinet are anxious to hear from him.

OTTAWA GROCERS OBJECT TO BOX MEASURE OF FRUIT

The Ottawa retail grocers will appeal to the Fruit Commissioner to have satisfactory legislation obtained in regard to the weight of small fruits in boxes. A resolution to this effect was unanimously adopted last night at the regular meeting of the Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association, which was as follows:

Whereas section 336 of the Inspection and Sales Act, Part 9, provides only for the sale of boxes in which berries or currants may be offered for sale in Canada, but does not specify the quantity said boxes shall contain either in weight or measure, and because of the manner in which these boxes have been poorly filled, causing great dissatisfaction and loss to both distributor and consumer:

"Be it resolved, that we, the Grocers' Association, of Ottawa, bring this matter before the Fruit Commissioner and respectfully request that he give it his serious consideration, and trust that satisfactory legislation may be obtained which will remedy the unsatisfactory condition of the small fruit trade."

Mr. J. W. Edwards and son, H. S. Edwards, 495 Sherbrooke Street, have been the first ones from Peterborough to send their names as volunteers, and will go with one of the early contingents if called upon.

THE NAVAL END OF THE SITUATION.

The news that the British and German fleets are in sight of each other in the North Sea, and perhaps in actual engagement, does not necessarily increase the garvity of the situation. Ie demonstrates preparedness. The British, in placing their fleet where it is, and throinwg out their first line of defence between Germany and the coast of the British Isles, took the first steps in the bottling up process of Germany.

The First Battle Squadron of the Home Fleet consists of eight Dreadnoughts armed with ten 12-inch guns apiece, and the Second Squadrone of eight with 13.5-inch guns. Twenty five battleships in full commission were in home water as compared with a German total of twenty-one, in addition to which Britain had four battle cruisers to Germany's four, one of the latter probably in the Mediterranean. In addition, a squadron of four British battleships is based upon Gibraltar, and four battle-cruisers are supposed to be at Malta. Britain has 98 destroyers in full commission to Germany's 77.

Russia has nine battle-ships, of which probably five are in the Baltic, if not yet in the North Sea, and France has twenty-one. It will thus be seen that Germany is outnumbered by the British, alone and hopelessly overmatched by three Powers combined, while Italy's neutrality leaves Britain fully master of the Mediterranean situation.

THE WORLD-WIDE WAR IS ON.

The dropping fire of he greatest war that has ever threatened the world is heard. All the news we get of details are necessarily fragmentary and comparatively insignificant, except that they have the background of grim facts. Austria's declaration of war on Servia has given Germany the excuse for fomenting and precipitating a general war in which five, at least, of the greatest world powers, will be engaged. Germany, by her declaration of war on Russia, one of the triple entente, has ipso facto drawn in France and Great Britain. If Great Britain has not formally declared war, a state of war exists, and what concerns Canada most is the fact that Great Britain is facing the crisis with dignified calmness. It is expected that the British Parliament will vote unanimously a war credit of 250 millions. There is no doubt that Great Britain is insit, with all her resources engaged. This necessarily involves he other dominions of the Empire. As Sir Wilfrid Laurier said, "When Britain is at war Canada is at war." If Canada is called upon; if our help is needed it will be gladly forthcoming to the extent of our resources. Up to the present there is in Canada no need of panic or hurry. We have evidences that everywhere throughout the Dominion everybody is willing that Canada should join the forces of Great Britain if necessary.

The necessity which it is hoped may not develop, will depend upon the issue of the gigantic conflict that has been precipitated by Germany. To the lay mind and at first thought, it looks as if Germany will have her hands full to even hold her own. She appears to be pretty well hemmed in. Though on land she is the most powerful military nation in Europe, she is in one sense and to appearances likely to be cabined, cribbed, confined. Russia, with her million of soldiers, fierce fighters, attacks her on the east, France with a large army will beset her on the west, and the combined fleets of Great Britain, France and Russia, and possibily in case of emergency, that of Japan, will blockade her coasts on the north. Still it is almost impossible to forecast the full result. The new conditions of modern warfare make forecast more difficult.

But if necessity arises Great Britain can count with confidence upon what help Canada can give. There is so far no need for hysterical excitement. We must face the situation calmly as may be and act without panic. We shall be kept in close touch with events by which to gauge our action. If events suggest the necessity, there might be a special session of Parliament summoned, so that unanimous action on its part may prove an inspiring and cohering element in popular action. We must possess our souls in patience for a few days with an underlying grim determination to do the full measure of our duty in the crisis that confronts the Empire, at home and abroad.

CHAMBERLAIN'S WAY.

"On every committee of thirteen there are twelve men who go to the meetings having given no thought of the subject, and prepared to accept someone else's lead. One goes having made up his mind what he means shall be done. I always make it my business to be that one."

This is what Joseph Chamberlain said of himself. He instanced a truth which is evident in every organization. Usually one man leads, and the others, because they are unprepared and uninformed, follow in the rear.—Lethbridge Herald.

ROOM AT THE TOP.

Of the 170 ranking officers of the Pennsylvania railway system, 163 ((including the president) started at the bottom, sweeping out cars, carrying water for laborers, working on the right-of-way, and other like jobs of the very commonest kind. It is perfectly certain that other men are now travelling the same road to success, but please note that 142 of the 170 have been in the service over twenty years. One essential to success in any business is to remain in it.—Collier's Weekly.

THE ARTISTIC TEMPERAMENT EXPLODES.

The artistic temperament is accountable for many things. Mary Garden possesses it. Which leads to the story of a company with which she sang the leading role in a western city. In the last act but one of "Louise," where Louise is supposed to kneel on the grass and see the lights of Paris, when it came to the situation Miss Garden found no grass and saw no lights. When the drop fell, so it goes, she called to the stage manager: "What kind of a management is this? Here I have had to sing with the midget (pointing to the small and unfortunate tenor). No grass to kneel and and not a d — light in all Paris!"—Argonaut.

AGRICULTURE'S NEED.

(Toronto Star.)

Agriculture needs just about a leader—a man who thinks about it all day, and talks about it and dreams about it. It needs him not only for emergencies like insects and weeds, but all the time. We have magnificent agricultural resources in Ontario, and we are not using them as we should.

Food is dead and scarce; the dwellers in cities are hit hard, and yet the farmer does not prosper up to the measure of his opportunities. Farm labour is scarce. The farmer blames the hired man and the hired man blames the farmer. The whole plan and map of farm life needs to be studied and the conditions improved. The rural school should be improved. There should be better means of marketing farm products. A big man is needed to lead in this work—a man of ideas and energy. It is perhaps the greatest opportunity that offers itself to-day in the public life of Canada.

VICTORIA HOUSE SUMMER RESORT

Tourists continue to arrive in increasing numbers at McCracken's Landing. Its proximity to Juniper Island and the central portion of Lower Stoney makes it a popular point for motoring parties.

The following have registered since last report: Miss Jennie Barrie and Mr William Barrie, Messrs. Gordon McConnell and Robert G. Brown, Norwood; Messrs. H. A. Davis, C. C. Jones and P. P. Bradbury, Toronto; Messrs. Asa Huycke, George Chambers, J. Minicola and W. S. Wilson, Peterborough; Mr. and Mrs. J. Russell Balph, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. K. Hughes, Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Wallace, Masters William, Eugene and Miss Esther, Newcastle, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Gemmell, Masters Neil and Miss Nora, Miss Metcher, Messrs. A. H. Stratton, G. N. Gordon, Wilfrid Stratton and Douglas Huycke, Peterborough; Messrs. L. A. Potvin, and J. J. Downs, Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Hall, Mrs. Hunter, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Goodwill and Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Waram, Peterborough; Misses Dora and Violet Payne, Warsaw; Miss Millie Boydell, New York; Mr. Ben Cardwell, Montreal; Mr. Percy Thompson, Cleveland, O.; Mr. Rufus Payne, Warsaw; Mr. E. V. Cardwell, Toronto, and Mr. and Mrs. Murray Stewart, St. Catharines.

LET CANADA BE HEARD AS ONE VOICE

If Canada is called to speak in the midst of the wild war Babel of Europe let the voice be the strong, responsible, and authoritative voice of the whole Parliament of Canada. If the confidential and reliable opinion and information received by the Prime Minister of Canada from the Government of Britain sustains the rumours and speculations of the newspaper despatches, Sir Robert Borden will be warranted not only in acting up to the constitutional authority of the Government, but also in summoning a special session of Parliament to take such action as the facts may demand. But the decisive action should be not by the Cabinet merely, but by Parliament. The situation is so absolutely without precedent, the questions involved, national and international, are so vast and so vexed, and the issues at stake are so supreme over everything ever faced by Canada in the past, that the one voice competent to speak for all of Canada and for all Canadians should be heard in its steadiest and most impressive tones.

Of one thing let there be no cavil or question; if it means war for Britain it means war also for Canada. If it means war for Canada it means also the union of all Canadians for the defence of Canada, for the maintenance of the Empire's integrity, and for the preservation in the world of Britain's ideals of democratic government and life. When that issue is raised all differences of party and of race merge into one positive and unwavering unity. Before the world Canadians are not divided. With Britain and with all British Dominions we stand. Whatever needs to be done Sir Robert Borden may be confident that the Canadian people are not only loyal to their obligations, but soberly and resolutely ready to do their solemn duty as citizens and as a nation. In the day of testing the voice of Canada will be one voice. —Globe.

Hamilton Took Third Game of Series By 5-3

The Whitemen Took Both Booster Day Games, Getting Long End of the Three Days' Engagement

COULDN'T HIT DOLAR

Hamilton made it two out of three from the Petes on Saturday, beating the homesters 5 to 3. The Whitemen's victory was merited as they outhit and outfielded the home talent. Sterling was found for eleven hits, while three of the four errors the Petes made behind him were responsible for runs, two had throws by Reilly and another by Fox, letting in runs. The Petes could not hit Dolan with men on, and outside of the third innings, when they bunched two doubles, a single and a sacrifice for two runs, he was not in much danger.

Cunningham's long homer over the shed in left field was a feature.

First Innings.

Hamilton—Cunningham drove the third ball pitched to him over the shed in left for a homer. He was given a good hand as he crossed the plate. Corns drove a liner to Byrne. Pendry rolled to King. Ivers singled to right. On the hit and run White drove one to right sending Ivers to third. White went to second on a passed ball and Ivers scored when Kelly made a wild throw to third. McGroarty drove one to Welsh. Two runs, three hits, one error.

Peterborough — Blount walked. Welsh sacrificed, Dolan to Cunningham. Blount sole third. Dolan singled to left, scoring Blount. Dolan went to second on a passed ball. Rooney hoisted to McGroarty. Byrne flied to White. One run, one hit, no errors.

Second Innings.

Hamilton — Baldwin struck out. Fisher lifted to Fox. Dolan fanned. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough — King hoisted to Ivers. Fox walked. Kelly flied to McGroarty. Sterling rolled to Dolan. No runs, hits or errors.

Third Innings.

Hamilton—Cunningham grounded to Fox. Corns singled to right. Pendry flied to Rooney. Welsh dropped Ivers' fly, Corns going to third and Ivers to second. White died on a smash to Fox, a fine play at both ends. No runs, one hit, one error.

Peterborough—Blount doubled to centre, Corns misjudging the drive. Welsh scratched a hit on a bad bounder to McGroarty, the ball striking the shortstop on the chest. Dolan sacrificed, Dolan to Cunningham. Rooney doubled over third scoring Blount and Welsh. Byrne grounded to McGroarty. King died the same way. Two runs, three hits, no errors.

Fourth Innings.

Hamilton — McGroarty fanned. Baldwin singled over second. Fisher flied to Blount. Dougherty beat out a hit to King, Baldwin going to third. Dougherty started to steal and Sterling caught Baldwin between third and home. He got in finally when Kelly's peg hit him on the head. Cunningham fanned. One run, two hits, one error.

Peterborough—Fox flied to White. Kelly Fanned. Sterling flied to Corns. No runs, hits or errors.

Fifth Innings.

Hamilton—Corns walked. Pendry sacrificed, Sterling to Dolan. Ivers hit to Sterling, and Corns was out between bases, Byrne making the put out. White was out on a smash to Fox. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough—Blount rolled to Cunningham. Baldwin grabbed Welsh's fly. Dolan singled past Pendry, and stole second. Rooney was out, McGroarty to Ivers. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Sixth Innings.

Hamilton—McGroarty grounded to Fox. Baldwin dropped a Texas Leaguer back of Fox. Fisher singled over second. Dolan bunted a fly to Sterling in trying to sacrifice, and Baldwin was doubled off second. No runs, two hits, no errors.

Peterborough—Byrne grounded to McGroarty. King rolled to Dolan. Fox died the same way. No runs, hits or errors.

Seventh Innings.

Hamilton—Cunningham fouled to Kelly. Corns doubled to right. Pendry fanned. Ivers flied to Rooney. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterborough—Kelly grounded to McGroarty, Sterling was out. Dolan to Ivers. Blount was safe on Pendry's fumble. Welsh grounded to Dolan. No runs, hits or errors.

Eighth Innings.

Hamilton—White singled over second. McGroarty sacrificed, Kelly to Dolan. Baldwin grounded o Sterling. Fisher singled to left, scoring White. Dolan fanned. One run, two hits, no errors.

Peterborough — Dolan flied to Corns. Rooney died the same way. Byrne fouled to Pendry. No runs, hits or errors.

Ninth Innings.

Hamilton — Cunningham walked. Corns sacrificed. Sterling to Dolan. Pendry hit to Fox who made a wild toss to third, Cunningham scoring. Ivers flied to Welsh. White walked. McGroarty died on a smash to Sterling. One run, no hits, one error.

Peterborough—King died on a smash to second. Fox died on a hard one to Dolan. Kelly singled over second. Miller batted for Sterling and forced Kelly at second, Pendry to Cunningham. No runs, one hit, no errors.

FRANCE HAS BEEN ENTERED

German Troops Invade Republic at Two Points—One Body Repulsed

NO DECLARATION

LONDON, Aug. 3. — A German force traversing Luxemburg is marching on the French fortress at Longwy, according to an official despatch received here shortly after four o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Longwy is a fortified town of France, on the Belgian frontier, 40 miles north-northwest of Metz, in Germany.

Germany declared war on Russia Saturday night.

One German force crossed the French frontier near the village of Cirey, between Nancy and Strassburg, and another German detachment, probably the 29th Infantry, Saturday night invaded the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, neutral territory between France and Germany, and continued its march on the French fortified town of Longwy. A despatch from Brussels said there was good reason to believe that this force later in the day entered France.

The German force which came into France near Cirey, which is 40 miles from Nancy, is reported to have been repulsed with heavy losses, but this has not yet been confirmed.

Apparently the German army is duplicating the first movement of the Franco-Prussian war. It was on Aug. 2, 1870, 44 years ago yesterday, that the French and Germans clashed in the first battle of that war at Saarbrucken, where the Prince Imperial, under the orders of the Emperor, received his famous "baptism of fire."

It would appear to-day that Germany is taking the fullest possible advantage of her supposed superiority in rapid mobilisation over France. The plan of the German Emperor, according to military observers here, is to vanquish or attempt to vanquish France in the interval before Russia will be able to create serious trouble on her northern frontier. It is supposed that Russian mobilisation will take about three weeks.

All telegraphic and telephonic communication between Brussels and Luxemburg has been severed.

By the treaty of London, signed in 1867, the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg was declared neutral territory. Its integrity and independence were guaranteed.

A train full of German soldiers arrived at the station at Luxemburg during the night. The troops seized the station and the bridges on the Treves and Trois Vierges line in order to secure the regular passage of military trains across the Grand Duchy.

According to an evening newspaper published at Liege, twenty thousand German troops crossed the French frontier yesterday morning near Nancy. They encountered French forces and were repulsed with heavy losses. This news, however, lacks confirmation.

The French Embassy yesterday issued the following statement:

"French territory has been invaded at Cirey, and German troops are marching on the fort at Cirey. This act has been committed without a declaration of war. The German Ambassador is at present in Paris."

Germany declared yesterday that she was unable to answer the question put by the British Ambassador at Berlin as to whether she is prepared to respect the neutrality of Belgium.

This statement appeared in a communication issued by the French Embassy.

The neutrality of Belgium has been guaranteed by Great Britain, and she is bound to protect Belgium for her own safety, as Belgium under German rule would be a never-ending menace to England.

No Hostile Intent.

LUXEMBOURG, Aug. 3. — The Minister of State of Luxembourg has received a telegram from the German Imperial Chancellor declaring that the military measures taken by Germany in Luxembourg do not constitute a hostile act against the grand duchy. They are simply measures, the chancellor states, to protect a railroad connected with the German system against possible attack.

Delcasse War Minister.

LONDON, Aug. 3. — A Paris despatch to The Central News, by indirect route, reports that Premier Viviani has made changes in the French Cabinet, whereby Theophile Delcasse becomes Minister of War and Eugene Georges Clemenceau, the ex-Premier, joins the Ministry.

ITALY STEPS OUT.

She Is Not Bound to Help In Offensive War She Says.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—A despatch from Rome says that Italy formally notified the German Ambassador there yesterday evening that she will remain neutral. The text of the despatch follows:

"It is authoritatively announced that the Marquis di San Giuliano, Italian Foreign Minister, has informed the German Ambassador at Rome that Italy will remain neutral, her obligations under the Triple Alliance treaty applying only to a defensive war. Italy, therefore, considers herself released from her engagements, the war waged by Austria-Hungary, supported by Germany, being essentially an offensive war."

The Cabinet Council yesterday ratified Italy's declaration of neutrality.

A further despatch from Chiasso says the Italian Government is undecided whether actively to participate in the struggle, or to remain neutral if the situation permits, making, meanwhile, sub-rosa, all military and naval preparations for defence or possible offence, notwithstanding the strong agitation by the Socialists, who favor abstention, even from preparations.

The Socialists challenge the Government, saying that if only one soldier or sailor is sent against France this time such a revolution will explode throughout Italy as to overthrow the present state of things.

FIRING IN NORTH SEA.

Paper Says Evidences of Heavy Battle Have Been Heard.

LONDON, Aug. 3. — The News of the World says it has received a wireless communication to the effect that heavy firing is proceeding in the North Sea. The newspaper presumes that German and French fleets are engaged. No confirmation of this report was received.

A despatch to The Central News says the Germans have taken possession of the steamer Castro in the Kiel Canal and ordered her to Hamburg. The Castro belongs to the Wilson Line, an English company.

According to another despatch to The Central News from King's Lynn, a seaport in Norfolk, Eng., the British steamer Saxon, which left King's Lynn late Thursday with a cargo of coal for Brunsbuttel, Prussia, has been overtaken by the German navy and diverted to Cuxhaven.

SIR DONALD VOLUNTEERS.

Mann of C. N. R. Offers To Act a Transportation Chief.

OTTAWA, Aug. 3. — Sir Donald Mann, vice-president of the Canadian Northern Railway, has offered to take charge of the transportation work in the event of Canadian forces going to the aid of Great Britain if she goes to war in Europe. Sir Donald's offer, made to Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, is to go with the forces wherever they may be despatched.

The men and officers who have volunteered to go to the front now number about eleven thousand, and if the call for volunteers is officially made it is confidently felt that this number would be multiplied several times.

At militia headquarters everything is ready for the word. If orders are given to mobolize, the necessary steps will be taken instantly to start the work all over the country.

QUARREL OVER WOMAN.

Grimsby Man Found With Gashes and Bullet Wounds.

GRIMSBY, Aug. 3.—Percy Sparling, aged 50, is dead from razor and bullet wounds and Jesse Ward, who keeps a store on the beach, held by Chief of Police Swayzee on a nominal charge, is also wounded in the throat from razor cuts as the result of a row over a woman named Miller.

Ward was asleep in bed above his store at three o'clock yesterday afternoon when Sparling entered his room and attacked him with a razor. Ward fought him off, but not before Sparling had gashed his throat severely. Seeing that he would be unable to overpower Ward, Sparling ran down the stairs and into the street using the razor to cut his own throat after he had got to the street. Ward chased him down the stairs with a revolver in his hand, firing twice and wounding Sparling in the leg and in the hip. Sparling died within a few minutes and Chief Swayzee arrested Ward.

Auto Overturned; Woman Killed.

EXETER, Ont., Aug. 3.—Mrs. Dow of this town was killed in an auto accident Saturday morning while returning from Grand Bend in company with Miss Burridge, her brother, and Earl Southcott. When about a mile west of the town the auto struck a rut, and when turning out the car took to the ditch and upset, throwing the occupants out. Mrs. Dow's head struck against the embankment and she died almost instantly. The other occupants were unhurt.

Miss Edna Burridge, of London, who was driving turned out to pass a wagon on the road. They were running about ten miles an hour at the time.

Dr. Hyndman, the coroner, was called and deemed an inquest unnecessary.

Editor Kept Prisoner.

LONDON, Aug. 3. — (Via special courier arriving at London 2.45, Sunday, from Paris.)—M. Maurice Waleffe, director of the Paris Journal, by order of the Government is kept a prisoner at his office. He is considered the principal instigator of the assassination of Jean Leon Jaures, leader of French Socialists, his articles being so highly National that the authorities consider his assassination would be almost certain if he were to be seen in public.

THE RUSSIANS IN GERMANY

Kaiser's Officials Complain of Violation of Assurances.

BERLIN, Aug. 3.—An official statement issued yesterday says:

"In consequence of a Russian attack on German territory, Germany is in a state of war with Russia.

"The French reply to the German representations is of an unsatisfactory character.

"Moreover, France has mobilized, and an outbreak of war with France must, therefore, be reckoned with any day or any moment."

Another statement declares that Russia has invaded Germany during a time of peace, "in flagrant contradiction of Russia's peaceful assurances."

"The Russian column which crossed the frontier at Schwinden was accompanied by artillery.

"Two squadrons of Russian Cossacks are riding in the direction of Johannesburg, in East Prussia, fifteen miles from the frontier.

"The Russian patrol which entered near Eichenreid attacked the German guard at the railroad bridge over the Warthe. The attack was repulsed. Two Germans were slightly wounded."

The above information was given out by the Imperial Staff. The staff at the same time said that the invasion near Schwinden showed that war had actually begun.

A French aviator has been dropping bombs from an aeroplane in the neighborhood of Nuremberg, Bavaria, according to an announcement made by the military authorities yesterday. In making this announcement the authorities added that this action was a crime against the rights of man, as there has been no declaration of war.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 1.—Owing to the serious political situation the export trade in all lines of grain today was at a standstill, there being no demand from foreign buyers and no disposition on the part of exporters to make offers, but a steady trade was done in coarse grains on spot and the tone of the market was very firm at the recent advance in prices. There was no actual change in the flour situation, but the undertone to the market was also firm with millers only accepting orders from local and country buyers for prompt delivery. In millfeed the feeling is firm with a good steady trade passing.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Examiner's Special Editions Were A Hit

With the first announcement of Germany's declaration of war against Russia on Saturday, the Examiner began preparations to present whatever news was available before the citizens. On an ordinary day the undertaking would have been comparatively easy, but with the Printers on their annual outing to Rice Lake, with the most of the editorial staff away for the week-end, the outlook for an extra edition was not promising.-And yet, at a few minutes to eight, the Saturday evening crowds were given a chance to secure the first bulletins as shown in the first issue: The second issue, on the street just as ten o'clock was striking, gave an entire page of the latest developments and expectations. Germany's declaration against Russia, the readiness of France, England's assurance to her allies, reports of how the news was received in Berlin and Paris, and other details were given. The cream of the evening cables to Canada was placed before the home-going crowds. There was also an editorial dealing with the historical aspects of the general outbreak.

The second war extra gave the complete news up to 9.30 o'clock. No paper received in the city during the evening approached in details and developments this extra edition. Mr. Max Hampton, one of the younger employees of the make-up room, rose to the occasion, and hustled work which was practically new to him. The absence of the regular staff called out the best that was in the makeshift assistants, and the editions were handled with celerity. The metal pots had been cooled since noon, and as a result the first despatches had to be set by hand while the metal for the linotypes was being melted.

Hence, in spite of extraordinary difficulties the Examiner gave the people as complete and rapid a service as possible, and that the extras were appreciated was manifested by the large numbers sold by newsboys, one of whom made over one dollar in fifteen minutes.

Crowds Up Town.

With the bulletining of the first despatch in front of the Examiner the news spread on the street, and was soon general information. The interest of the people in the European situation was shown by the large number of citizens on the streets at eleven and twelve o'clock. A feeling approaching consternation was expressed everywhere at the possibility of the continent being widely involved in hostilities.

On Sunday.

On Sunday a dozen or more bulletins were received by the Examiner and posted in front of the office. Crowds read them all day, and the telephone calls mounted into the hundreds. The probability of a big conflict created a cloud of gloom, but the united stand of the members of the Triple Entente revealed a rift of satisfaction. The report that Japan, too, would aid England was decidedly welcome news. Peterborough people seemed to feel that if the Kaiser would have war, why let him have enough of it.

Arguments Galore.

Everyone was talking about, and here and there you would find groups of men arguing possible results and becoming quite heated over their view-points. Englishmen were heard to remark that they would go back if needed, but the average peaceable Canadian scarcely feels that there is any necessity for him until the situation becomes more complex.

Canadians And Christians In The World Crisis

The services at St. John's yesterday had special reference to the situation of almost universal war that is developing. In the evening the processional hymn was the great hymn of Isaac Watts, the refuge of the church and nation in times of stress—"O God Our Help in Years' past."

Yesterday at St. John's Canon Davidson's sermons, both morning and evening, dealt with the attitude of Canadians and Christians to the present world-crisis. The Lord Jesus had issued three definite directions for guidance at such a time, "Be not terrified"; "be not troubled"; and "Look up and lift up your heads for your Redemption draweth nigh."

God was on His throne and the course of events was Divinely controlled and in the end would be overruled for good. Yet as a violation of both the letter and spirit of religion, and therefore bringing suffering and misery, we were to play with all our hearts that war might be averted.

War in Past and Future.

War could be understood in the early stages of man's development when in accommodation to the world's barbaric childhood it received temporary Divine sanction. But in the light and progress of to-day it was quite inconsistent with our standards of conduct. Still the Bible foretold the continuance of war together with the continuance of God's Church and His Love—good and evil increased side by side, each helped by modern science and in the end there would be an unparalleled conflict between the two Britain's Stand for Peace.

In the great crisis of to-day it would give confidence to know that Britain, as before, still stood strikingly for peace for which both the King and Sir Edward had made noable efforts. The British Cabinet were eminently peace-loving, and if Britain declared war it would not be from any mere alliance, but because absolutely forced through the danger of National extinction or dismemberment.

The Duty of Canadians.

As an integral part of the British Empire, sharing in her generous protection, privileges and glories, Canada would promptly take her full share in the defence of the Empire. Any other line would be wholly unthinkable. But, said the preacher, we are Christians as well as Canadians. Therefore let our hearts be filled, not with hatred or malice towards any other country, but solely with love and devotion to our own Empire. If we regretfully use implements of warfare it will only be because we have no other means of doing our manifest duty to Britain. We are emphatically a peace-loving people and would still pray and hope that participation in the horrors of war might be averted.

An Iron Summons.

Should, however, war with its frightful miseries be the lot of our Empire and Country, we would stand to gain not only evil but good from it. As a people we had been so prosperous and easy-going and pleasure-seeking that our attention was largely fixed on the earth at our feet. Under cloudless skies people were fooling wih life, sitting lightly to religious observances and duies, and there was more serious danger of our becoming an irreligious people.

Possibly through the poverty and pain of war God was about to give us an iron summons to live the iron-like Cross-bearing life to which we were called. Brought face to face with serious things we might be lovingly forced to "look up and lift up our heads" and so through bloodshed our blood-brought "Redemption would draw nigh" to a people moved to desire and strive for it.

Special prayers were offered for peace at both services and appropriate National hymns were sung, being joined in with fervour.

MR. W. H. ROBERTSON OF THE MORNING TIMES DIED YESTERDAY

W. H. Roberson, one of our oldest and best-known citizens, died on Sunday afternoon at the family residence, 526 Water street, after a short illness. On Thursday last he was stricken down with a paralytic seizure. His condition grew worse till death ensued.

The deceased gentleman has been almost a life-long resident of the city. He was born in Cobourg, but at a very early age removed wih his father's family to Peterborough. He was successful in business and is credited with having amassed considerable means. Personally he was popular; affable and obliging in disposition. Necessarily, in his position, he took an active interest in public affairs, and was at one time a member of the town council, representing Ward No. 4, in 1879-80.

Mr. Robertson was twice married. First to a daughter of the late David Carlisle with issue, one daughter, Ruth Lillian. ROMANCE FOR A BALL PLAYER

(By Grantland Rice, in Colliers)

"You've made a hit with me," he said
"You've got the curves—you've got the speed;
Come, jump to me and be my Fed,
And sign me up to be your feed."

He stuck a fast one round her neck,
The other, waist-high, sailed across.
And then, a startled, blighted wreck,
He heard her edge in with this toss:

"Nix on the squeeze—that's not my stuff—
Play off—don't hug the base so tight;
I'm wise to this Three Hundred bluff
From guys that bat around all night."

"Here comes the hit and run," she cried;
Her old man blew in off the street;
The player sprinted with a slide,
But he was thrown out twenty feet.

PUSHED FROM WHARF YOUNG MAN RETURNS COMPLIMENT TO LADY

Amusing Practical Joke Witnessed by Islands's Passengers at a Stoney Lake Dock This Morning

STONEY LAKE, Aug. 3.—The passengers on the Islinda this morning, on the down trip, were provided with a little amusement as a side line, that came quite unexpectedly. As the steamer drew into the wharf at an island near McCracken's Landing, a young lady and several young men were standing on the deck, when, to the passengers' utter dismay, the young lady pushed one of the fellows into the lake. This evoked a great laugh, but the young man was not to be outdone. He emerged from the water in great glee and rushing up to the girl, picked her up, and soon a great splash was heard. Being a good swimmer she was soon ashore, but her dripping garments presented a sorry spectacle. The large number on board greatly enojyed the fun so unexpectedly provided them.

The young man was Mr. Sam Mills of Peterborough, and the scene of the incident was the wharf of Basil Hall's island.

REINS ON BUTCHER'S HORSE WERE CROSSED WHEN STRUCK BY CAR

Someone is Responsible For a Fool Trick Which Cost Wm. Kemp a Delivery Horse on Saturday Night.

In an accident on George street Saturday night about nine o'clock the delivery outfit of Mr. Kemp, George street butcher, was run down by a street car. The horse was so badly injured that it had to bes hot shortly after, and the driver of the vehicle was very lucky to escape injury.

The accident was caused, according to Howard Hall, who was driving the delivery outfit, by the fact that some children, for a prank had crossed the ljnes. As a result, when he heard the street car approaching from behind he, instead of turning the horse farther away from the street car, in pulling the right rein, he drove the animal out onto the street car track. At the time the delivery outfit was driving north on George street, half way between London and Dublin streets, and street car No. 20 was going north. As the street car was about to pass the vehicle, the horse swerved to the left in front of the car which struck it with great force. It was so badly injured, including a broken shoulder, that it had to be shot by P. C. Dainard who arrived on the scene shortly afterward.

BRITAIN WILL DECIDE TO-DAY

Premier Asquith Will Likely State Britain's Position—Strict Censorship

PEACE PARTY ACTIVE

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Now the die is cast and Europe is to be plunged into a general war which has been the apprehension of European statesmen for generations past.

The only redeeming feature of the darkest prospect with which Europe has been faced for half a century is that Italy has declared her neutrality. But how long that neutrality can be maintained is an exceedingly debatable question.

The Daily Chronicle (a Government organ) says that the British Cabinet has definitely decided not to send an expeditionary force abroad, but to make every honorable effort to prevent Great Britain from being drawn into the war.

Great Britain's position has already been defined by Premier Asquith in the British Parliament, namely, that she is under no formal obligation to go to the assistance of France in the event of an European war. The British Government, however, has made full preparations in both services for whatever may happen.

No statement of the decision taken by the Cabinet was made last night. Premier Asquith will announce Great Britain's position in the House of Commons to-day. Prior to this announcement another Cabinet meeting will be held.

Censors took charge of all the cable offices in the kingdom last night. All code messages were prohibited even to Australia. Telephonic communication with the continent was entirely stopped. The Brussels telephone, which was the last line working, was silent last night.

The King issued a proclamation declaring a moratorium for a month, and the suspension of the Banking Act to-day appears assured. Parliament will probably pass a bill for a loan for defensive purposes to the amount of $250,000,000. A rise in the price of foodstuffs is expected today, although the Board of Trade has issued a reassuring statement that there is a wheat supply of four months in the country.

The peace movement continues, but finds little popular response. The Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London both spoke for peace yesterday. A number of Cambridge professors have issued a manifesto deploring the possibility of war with Germany, while another manifesto emanated from influential quarters quoting Premier Asquith' recent statement that Great Britain had no understanding with France and Russia which would compel her to join with them in war.

The Socialists and a section of the labor union men are strong for peace. Peace meetings were held yesterday in Trafalgar Square and Hyde Park.

The Times, in a special war edition yesterday, said that it is plain and acknowledged that the duty and interest of Britain, which consist in the support of France against Germany and the preservation of the neutrality of Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg against German invasion, must be fulfilled.

"There is no room for difference of opinion," The Times continues. "The prospect before the Government is that of having to fight not only for its honor, but for self-preservation against attack on the whole foundation on which the peace and civilization of Europe are based."

The Government has assumed control of all wireless transmission. A special Gazette announces this fact and says that the Government in the present emergency has taken over control of wireless telegraphy, and that the use of wireless by foreign vessels while in British territory waters will be subject to such rules as may be made by the Admiralty.

The London morning papers are giving practical counsels to the public to display a self-sacrificing spirit; to refrain from excitement and to avoid selfish actions, such as laying in large stores of provisions which would tend to raise prices and lead to hardships for the poorer classes.

Field Marshal Lord Kitchener, who was to return to his Egyptian post, is detained in London. According to telegrams from European capitals Great Britain's decision on this point was awaited with the deepest anxiety, especially in Paris and St. Petersburg.

King George held a Privy Council yesterday afternoon. According to The Press Association he signed a proclamation authorizing the suspension of specie payments.

BASE IS CHOSEN.

Col. Hughes Selects Quebec as Point For Mobilization.

QUEBEC, Aug. 3.—In the event of Premier Borden's offer of an army division of 20,000 men being accepted, Quebec will be the point of embarkation. Col. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, arrived here by special yesterday morning and motored out to Valcartier, about 20 miles away. This he says has been chosen as the mobilization base and the probability is that thousands of troops may be pouring in here before next Sunday, according to what the Minister told the Canadian Press correspondents, it had already been selected as a camp some time ago and was to have been a training ground for artillery. The camp area is about 10 miles square and Col. Hughes considers it will be an ideal spot for mobilization owing to its proximity to Quebec, the nature of the country and the fact that there is a plentiful supply of water.

AEROPLANE BROUGHT DOWN.

German Soldiers Succeed In Hitting French Machine.

BERLIN, Aug. 3.—A French aeroplane was brought down by German marksmen at Wesel in frontier yesterday.

Saturday night several other hostile air craft were seen in the Rhine provinces. One was observed flying from Keprich in the direction of Andernach, 10 miles northwest of Hobelns. Others were sighted near Duore flying in the direction of Cologne.

Saturday night a hotelkeeper in Koebem and his son tried to blow up the Prussian state railroad tunnel at Kochem. The attempt failed and the men were shot and killed.

Wesel, where the aeroplane was shot down, is about 140 miles from the northeastern frontier of France.

While a train was crossing a bridge at Thorn yesterday a passenger tried to throw a bomb from the window of a coach, probably with the hope of destroying the bridge. He was arrested.

JAPAN IS WITH BRITAIN.

She Will Defend Far Eastern Interests Against Attack.

TOKIO, Aug. 3. — The Japanese navy has been prepared to meet any emergency, and the Minister of Marine, Vice-Admiral Rokuro Yashiro, Saturday went to Nikko to consult the Emperor on the international situation. In the meantime the second battle squadron had assembled at the naval station, Sasebo.

A Fair Warning.

LONDON, Aug. 3. — In regard to the Far East, the Japanese Ambassador in London said Saturday that as long as the warships belonging to the nations composing the Triple Alliance remained at Tsing-Tau Japan would take no action against them, but should they attack British interests or should Tsing-Tau be attacked a situation would arise which would be dealt with by Japan in the spirit of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance.

Crowd Cheered King and Queen.

LONDON, Aug. 3. — There was a scene of great enthusiasm outside Buckingham Palace last night. A crowd of five or six thousand persons gathered before that place and sang the National Anthem and called for King George, who, with Queen Mary, appeared on a balcony and bowed in response to cheers given for His Majesty.

A number of processions were formed late last night and paraded the streets, singing and cheering.

Some Reasons For Confidence of British People in This Crisis

The spirit of peace and good will is on the increase between Canada and the United States. The war in Europe is having the legitimate and desirable effect of binding the Anglo-Saxon peoples more closey together; and, as Germans have been the hereditary enemies of the Anglo-Saxon peoples, from pre-historic times, the attitued of Great Britain and her Dominions over the Seas, in the present crisis, has been forced on her through the characteristcally German spirit of domineering selfishness, and dogmatic self-aggrandization. Denmark, Norway and Sweden will, we feel assured, line up with the British Empire, in the great world struggle for dominion and power, that is now belching forth its horrible utterances between Austria and Servia.

And what a wonderfully happy settlementhas been effected, within one short wek, of those squeamish troubles that have been irritating the spirits and the lives of the noble Irish race, and the Scoto-Irish of the north, the world over, for generations past. One week ago they were, apparently, at each other's throats; today they are united in their enlightened resolve to stop bickering with, and against each other, and with their characteristic bravery, determine together, to drive back to cover the common foe of our beloved and cosmopolitan Empire.

Germany and her ally, Austria-Hungary, are numerically stronger than their opponents, in highly disciplined and well equipped forces, by land and by sea. But the battle is not given to the mighty when selfish principles constitute the groundwork and foundation for barbarous and ferocious action. The spirit of stubborn, human pride, and of wilful and deliberate insult to God, in regard to the ignoring of His worship, and the violation of His holy law in regard to the preservation of the sanctity of the Sabbath, necessitate the administration of severe punishment of men and of nations, for committal of such flagrant sins that lead, daily, further and further away from "the living Christ". German character has within the last forty years, been sapped of much of the sterling brand of quality that enriched the hearts and lives of the people to the close of the Franco-Prussian war. Since those days Germany has been sinning deeply, against the law of righteousness and peace. Her people, many of them at least, have forgotten God in their hearts and lives. They have lost that vividly emphasized trait in the noblesse character Prince Frederick Charles, as he bravely led his fearless Uhlans into action. To "those men with the terrible faces" his well-known battle shout was: "First, let your hearts beat to God; then, your fists on the enemey." She has become an Ishmaelite, indeed, to all who are not Germans. And have not her own people been severely oppressed by her rulers in her laws, regarding manufacturies, food-stuffs and militarism?

And the Austrians are brothers to the Germans in blood, disposition, speech, customs, manners, and modes of thought and action.

Truly the combined will power of two such self-willed, stubborn, grasping rulers as those who preside over the national interests of those peoples may yet work out the wreck and ruin of two such powerful and aggressive nations.

It is nothing less than miraculous that the near descendants of the men of Trafalgar, Waterloo, Balaklava, and Inkermann should, to-day, join hands in resisting the threatened onslaught of the sons of "the men with the terrible faces," who won Sadowa; and, turning, with the iron will and the gory hand, cast France in the dust to mother earth in quivering, bleeding, dying myriads at her feet.

But Great Britain and her "Dominions over the Seas" may well stand, to-day, calm and undaunted, in the face of all this terrible, threatened danger, and trustfully pray the prayer of inspired Christian confidence thus, viz.:

"Not afraid of evil tidings"
"Give me, O God, that fixedness of heart
Which will not swerve before calamity.
Give me a trust forbidding me to start,
With fear of evil on the way to me.
Thou art and will be — let this mighty thought
Be of my trembling heart the citadel;
From earth's four points whatever news be brought,
Within that stronghold I shall bear it well."

Japan will stand, ready, as a wall of adamant at her back; and, if need be, will leap to fill the gaps in the fearless ranks of Britain's brave defenders.

Portugal has sworn to marshal 10,000 well-trained, well-armed and brave soldiers to her side in response to Britain's bugle-call.

Holland stands nearer to the hearts of the British people to-day than she does to the hearts of Germany. Spain, though weak, is on Great Britain's side. Italy, though within the Triple Alliance, has, nevertheless, a warm heart toward Britain's sterling worth, as manifested before men and angels even to the uttermost ends of the earth by sea and by land.

The restless hearts of India's teeming millions will be anew in fervish sympathetic action under the wise guidance of Kitchener's powerful hand. China has got enough hard work to accomplish within the bounds of her own mysteriously seething and troublesome elemnets.

The people and Government of the United States have enough to do in regulating their own internal affairs and in continuing to preserve that attitude of "watchful waiting" so wisely chosen, and so thoroughly and well carried out by President Wilson, in regard to both national and international concerns. What a strikingly beauteous index of mutual, international good will that was when, on Saturday July 25th, three representative Canadian and a like number of representative American girls met, and joined hands, on the historic battlefield of Lundy's Lane, (fought one hundred years before) in laying wreaths of immortelles on the graves of their brave but slumbering dead.

All these things go to prove in the most unmistakable manner that Great Britain is being sheltered beneath the abiding wings of the Almighty; and that He has, indeed, covered her head in the day of battle.

This Store Has Grown Is Growing Now

And Will Continue to Grow

Twelve Years Ago we used this heading to announce the addition of our Second Store.

Five years later we took in our third store and converted the three into one.

Last year additions were made and building done which added 25 per cent. to our selling space.

And now we announce the addition of Store No. 4—The Schneider Jewellery Store—which will give us much needed additional space.

Alterations and improvements will be commenced at once and rushed through as rapidly as possible.

One of the outstanding features of the contemplated improvements will be the construction of

The annual Printers' picnic, the biggest event of the summer season, was held on Saturday afternoon to Jubilee Point. The Steamer Stoney Lake carried the big crowd, the lovely trip down the winding Otonabee being made in good time. When the Point was reached a rush was made on the picnic baskets and soon all were partaking of numerous good things. Jas. Bogue Met With Accident

Contractor Bogue, who has had charge of the work on the post office, had a rather peculiar and painful accident happen him this morning when he had the top of his index finger on his left hand badly bruised.

In some unknown manner the vault door which has been installed in the new part of the post office, slammed shut, catching his finger and bruising it severely.

The wound was dressed by a local doctor and will be painful for a few days.—Lindsay Warder.

Was Good Enough For the Movies

Young Ladies at Stoney Lake Carried off a "Stunt" That Provided Plenty of Thrills

STONEY LAKE NEWS

STONEY LAKE, Aug. 3.—During the past week a large picnic party organized from several of the cottages on Clear Lake, went to Jack's Creek to spend the day. The outing was not without its little excitement, three young ladies undertaking to provide the melodramatic touches that would have made an interesting moving picture film. These fair ones, casting off their shoes and stockings attempted to ford the stream above the falls. All went well until the first one slipped on the slimy stones and was carried down over the ledges o. rock. Laughing at her predicament, her companions in daring, not watching their steps, were soon going with the stream too. They were carried over the falls, but were gallantly rescued by one of the young men of the party before they got out into the deeper waters. With dripping garments they were forced to sit in the sun until their clothes dried sufficiently to proceed homeward.

STONEY LAKE, Aug. 3.—All up steamers Saturday carried big crowds, numerous Toronto people coming down to spend Civic Holiday with friends at the lakes.

The dance Saturday evening at Juniper Island was well attended, but for the first Saturday in August, the crowd was not as large as in former summers.

At the Sunday morning service at Juniper Island, Dr. Zimmerman, of Toronto, preached, and Miss Moore, of Lakefield, sang a solo.

The regatta next Monday promises to be the best ever. The sailing race will be the big event of the day. Quite a number of Stoney Lak resorters went round to Sturgean Point for the regatta there to-day. Crow's Landing annual regatta is billed for Wednesday of this week.

Mrs. Mairs, Misses Mairs and Mr. Maurice Mairs, of Toronto, have taken a cottage near McCracken's for the balance of the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Lennan, of Frankford, and Mr. and Mrs. Evan McLean and son, of Hamilton, are guests for a few days of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Rogers, at the Hermitage, Kawartha Park.

Misses Grace McCaffey, of Hamilton and Mabel Van Duser, of Winona, are holidaying with the Misses Husband at "Daishelene," Kawartha Park.

Mr. Arthur Andrews, of Toronto, is spending the next month at the Victoria House, McCracken's Landing.

Mr. Harry Donnelly and family, who have been spending the past month at Mr. Jas. Ellis' place, Kawartha Park, returned to the city today. Miss Georgie Springer, of Belleville, was the guest of her aunt, Mrs. Donnelly, during their stay at Clear Lake.

Dr. Morrison is spending the next two weeks at his cottage, Kawartha Park.

FIRST HARVESTERS' EXCURSION AUG. 8

The first Harvesters' Excursion will take place from Toronto on the 8th inst., according to information received by the local C.P.R. agent. On the 11th another will commence from Ottawa. The excursion will not go farther than Manitoba, for there are very few men needed this year on account of the many out of work in the west. Most of the men will be required round the Saskatchewan districts.

From Seventh To First Day Of Week

Elder F. W. Johnston Greeted With a Large Crowd Last Evening

Elder F. W. Johnston,, who has been preaching the past two weeks in the tent on the corner of Harvey and Dublin streets, had a very large crowd last evening, and spoke very clearly on the change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week. Nowhere, so he said, is there one bit of proof that we ought to keep Sunday instead of the seventh day or Saturday. The law which declares that "The seventh day is the Sabbath is still of binding force, and has never been repealed. Christ always kept Saturday, so also did the Apostles, and never do we have even the slightest intimation that Christ or His Apostles ever kept the first day of the week. The theory, so he said, that is extant at the present time, that Christ or His apostles made the change in the Sabbath is both unscriptural and unreasonable, and cannot be proven by any one. Whenever anyone, he said, is ready to prove Sunday sacredness, he will give up keeping Saturday and keep the first day of the week.

After then raising the question as to who changed the Sabbath, he then produced his proof both from Scripture and history, that Rome was the one who presumed to change the day, and in keeping Sunday holy we follow Rome instead of Christ. Father Gerrifima, so he says, has an offer of $1,000 for any who proves we ought to keep Sunday instead of Saturday. Surely this is an opportunity for some one to seize if they have any proof upon this point. The lecture closed with an appeal to obey the Lord only, and keep every one of the precepts of His law, which meant, of course, to keep the seventh day as well.

PETERBOROUGH PEOPLE ON THE CONTINENT

The following is a partial list of Peterborough people who have left for Europe during the past month:

Miss Annie Wood, Belmont Ave., and Mrs. E. G. Porter, Gilmour street, who left Peterborough for a trip to the Continent about a month ago, wrote to a friend they would be leaving from England for other points in Europe on Friday. Whether this meant Friday, July 31st, or the 24th is not known, but the latter date looks the more correct, as the letter was about ten days reaching Peterborough. Mr. W. D. Campbell, brother of Mrs. Porter has word as to his sister and hopes she may yet be in England.

The Misses Erskins, in East City, are also in Europe, it is understood. Mrs. Schwartz, wife of Mr. M. Schwartz, of Stock's bakery, is another who took passage a little time ago; also Mrs. E. Cavalier, Mrs. Ethel Collingwood, Mrs. Margaret Moher, Mrs. Sarah Robinson, Mr. John Simpson, Mr. George Davenport, Mr. James Ross and Mrs. Wm. Edwards. Rev. F. J. Sawers is also in Europe, and word received from him during the past week stated that he intended going to Paris on Saturday, August the first. Mr. Colin H. Lees is also in Europe.

A LARGE BASS.

One of the largest bass caught in this district this year was hooked by Dr. J. W. Robb of Akron, Ohio, at Scotchman's Point while holidaying at Buckhorn, recently. The fish is being mounted by Mr. Elcome and is a beautiful specimen of a black bass.

IS ACCUSED OF ILLEGAL OPERATION

Doctor and Young Man Under Arrest—Girl Died on Saturday Morning

TORONTO, Aug. 3.—Dr. E. Roy Tyrer, 1,168 St. Clair avenue west, and Alexander L. McCorquodale, 23 years, a clerk living at 56 Sorauren avenue, are in custody as a result of the death of Miss Dorothy Leonard, 19 years, of 17 Bloor Street east, at the General Hospital early Saturday morning. Dr. Tyrer is charged with having committed an illegal operation upon the girl, and McCorquodale was conspiring to procure an illegal operation. Bail was refused in both cases.

Dr. Tyrer was apprehended at his summer cottage, Big Bay Point, in the Georgian Bay district, by Detectives Cronin and Mitchell, at noon Saturday. The same officers found McCorquodale at his rooming house yesterday morning. After being placed under arrest both accused made statements to the police.

POST-MORTEM EXAMINATION.

Drs. Harrington and Strathy conducted a post-mortem examination upon the remains of the dead girl yesterday at the Morgue in the presence of Coroner Dr. W. A. Young, Dr. Yellowlees and Dr. Cleland. The result of the autopsy will not be made known until the next sitting of the Coroner's jury, a week from to-night, at the Morgue. The investigation opened Saturday night before Coroner Young.

Motion Picture To Teach Salesmanship

A practical proposal to teach salesmanship by utilizing motion pictures was presented recently. The man who suggested the idea gives the following details:

"A—First, that the pictures show the girl coming in late; second, trying to cover her lateness by falsely registering the time clock; third, the additional work which she puts upon the other salesgirls in the department by her lateness.

"B—Pictures of girls chewing gum, lounging constantly in groups, and talking while a customer is waiting, showing indifference to the customer.

"C—Pictures of a group of cheerful salespeople continually at their work, showing the best way of handling a customer, willingness to take infinite pains to please, quickness in getting all goods, showing a knowledge of the stock, orderly shelves and tidy counters.

"D—Pictures showing in detail results of girls' mistakes. Let a girl carelessly make out wrong sales slip, (show slip upon screen,) which results in the order going to the wrong address; second, the real customer waiting for the merchandise, the needless expense, etc. * * *

"A large department store in the Middle West found that there were some 300 errors which salesgirls are constantly making. A number of these could be featured in the moving pictures of 'the right and wrong way of selling goods,' the idea being to give a graphic outline of how the error is made and the result of it, and an equally graphic outline in pictures of how effective the right sort of salesmanship is in increasing business generally, pleasing customers, and keeping down the selling cost because of the avoidance of mistakes."

FELL UNDER WHEELS OF A MOTOR-BUS

Jack Warmington Sustained Serious Injuries in Accident, Saturday

Jack Warmington, the nine-year-old son of Mr. Wm. C. Warmington, [illegible] Aylmer street, sustained serious injuries Saturday afternoon about one o'clock, when he fell under the wheels of the motor-bus that runs between this city and Warsaw. It seems that young Warmington, unknown to the driver of the motor-bus, Mr. W. B. Bell, climbed on the steps behind for a ride. The motor was scheduled to call a the Canadian Express Company, but finding he could not draw up to the sidewalk there, Mr. Bell, after stopping in the centre of the road for a moment, commenced to back up as near the sidewalk as possible. In the meantime the young fellow had gotten off the step at the rear of the 'bus, and when the car started to back up he attempted to get on again. He slipped, however, in jumping to the step and fell under the wheel. His left leg was broken above the knee, and Dr. Kelly was summoned to attend his injuries. He was taken home, and to-day is resting as easily as could be expected.

ACCIDENT TO AUTO

A party of tourists from Toronto had their stay in this City unexpectedly prolonged through an accident to their motor car on Saturday night. It seems that the car, which is a large model, was driving up George Street about ten o'clock Saturday night, and turned across the street car tracks for the purpose of crossing the street and going south. Unable to make the turn without reversing the engine, the car stopped on the street car tracks and was run down by Car No. 33 which was passing south at a good rate of speed. The car was struck and damaged considerably. It was taken to a local garage for repairs, and as a result Mr. and Mrs. Walker were unable to leave the City. The motorman in charge of the street car claims that the auto gave no signs whatever that the car was about to turn around, and that he was unable to stop the street car in time to avoid a collision when the auto stopped on the street car track. The automobile is the property of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Walker of Toronto, who were in the car at the time. Mr. Walker is threatening to sue the Street Car Company for damages to his machine, as the real wheel and axle were severely strained. The accident occurred just in front of the Examiner office.

RATE OF EXCHANGE

OTTAWA, Aug. 1—The effect of the European war on Canada, particularly as to the cost of living, was strikingly demonstrated this morning when importers were called upon to pay a greatly increased rate of exchange on European and Asiatic importations.

H. N. Bate and Company received a shipment of tea this morning on which they were compelled to pay an extra exchange charge of $72.

Exchange Rate.

This, of course, is not an increase on the price of the tea, but on the exchange of money in the payment of it. The increase in the exchange rate is twelve per cent., and this is expected to increase hourly. The increase was in effect before it was announced that Germany had declared a state of war, and the Kaiser's action will send it still higher.

Half Cent a Pound.

On the shipment of tea received by the Bate Company this increase in the Exchange rate makes the cost of the tea to the Company at least a half cent a pound more than normal.

These importations are paid for by letter of credit, and it is in the exchange of these letters of credit to sterling that the increased cost is put on.

Tea is only one of the many everyday commodities that Canada is importing every day from Europe and Asia, so that the war is likely to have a very marked effect on the cost of living here

ALIENS IN LONDON CELEBRATED THE WAR DECLARATION

LONDON, AUG. 3. — Tremendous excitement followed the distribution of the extras in Soho Square, the foreign quarter, telling of the declaration of war by Germany. The special editions were on the streets Saturday night just as the theatre rush was at its height.

Frenchmen and Germans formed into bands roaring the "Marseillaise" and the "Wacht am Rhein." There were great rallies at the French and German restaurants. The beer halls were crowded, especially the Gambrinus, which resounded with German songs and cheers for the Kaiser, Bismarck and von Moltke, and there was much brandishing of steins.

Another restaurant was packed with students carrying sabres. Some of these men got into trouble when they tried to march through the streets with their naked weapons. Ugly-tempered crowds of Britons surrounded them and the police had to go to their rescue. A French crowd in Piccadilly shouted its intention of marching to Buckingham Palace to pay homage to King George. The police frustrated the attempt.

The topic to-night at 8 o'clock at the tent on the corner of Harvey and Dublin will be "The Last Universal War"—Where will it be fought? Come and hear Elder Johnston prove from the prophecies.

PARIS, Aug. 2. — Every berth on the trans-Atlantic steamers sailing before Sept. 15 has been sold and many thousands of Americans travelling here have become almost panic-stricken. Since the founding of the Pasteur Institute in Paris there has been a steady decline in the number of cass of hydrophobia, none at all occurring some years.

Low Water In Stoney Lake

There is considerable complaint about the low water in Stoney Lake. It is said to have dropped some four feet within the past month, and many of the wharves are unapproachable for launches and even small boats. Also in many places the receded water leaves uncovered rather loathsome flats covered with slimy mud, giving off not only foul gasses but destroying the comfort of boating. It is stated that a great deal of water has been used in the running of logs and perhaps the stop-logs have been removed rather too liberally. It is hoped that something will be done by those in charge of the regulation of the waters to remove the undesirable conditions that do so much to impair the enjoyment of our most popular summer resort.

What is said to be the most scientific milk producing plant in the world is maintained in a suburb of Dresden more as a philanthropy than as a source of profit.

GIVES SOME TIPS ON CARE OF AUTO TIRES

Much Attention on Part of User is Necessary to Get Maximum Service From Tires

"To judge the air pressure in a tire by its look or feel is at best a very poor makeshift" say The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, O. "For a motorist to be without a pressure gauge is very much like the carpenter trying to work without a rule."

Following its policy of co-operation with the users in all posible ways, the Goodyear Company has been issuing of late a number of hints on the care and preservation of tires, so that the utmost mileage can be obtained. The supposition that the heating of the air in a tire by the sun or pavement in hot weather brings about a dangerous pressure has been exploded by a practical test, and it has been shown that for a motorist to lower his air pressure because the sun is hot actually injures the tire far more than any possible increase of pressure could. The reason for this is that the heat caused by the flexing of an underinflated tire destroys the tire much more rapidly than the average motorist realizes.

The most serious variations in tire pressure is caused by leaking. This is not constant, being dependent on the weather and other conditions of use. In a careful test by Goodyear men of their own tires and tires of other makes, it was determined that leakage occurred on an average of 20 pounds per week, this being mostly due to the condition of valves.

It may be taken as a safe rule to follow that the man who inflates his tires to the proper pressures, following the inflation tables issued by the tire companies, will obtain far more mileage tha the man who rides his tires under-inflated. The greatest danger to tires is under-inflation and not over-inflation. Good-year Tires have frequently, in experimental ways, been inflated to pressure higher than 300 pounds, and in each of these instances the rim itself gave way and the tire remained intact.

Placed Rails Across The Road

The Automobile Association is offering a regard of twenty-five dollars for the conviction of the party or parties who placed the rails across the road, on the block road, between Salem and Burnham's woods. Last evening an automobile coming along that way had a narrow escape from serious injury. Whoever the culprits, they didn't realize the extent of the danger they were placing motorists in, and a word of warning will probably stop such foolhardy practices.

ITALIANS IN PARIS READY TO HELP FRENCH

LONDON, Aug. 3.—A Paris despatch says the extraordinary quiet of Paris makes a strong impression.

Most of the French diplomats under forty years of age have received their marching orders.

"The spirit of the French army," says the correspondent, "undoubtedly is excellent; there are no drawing room officers.

"The Italian residents of Paris are forming a volunteer corps to help the French.

"French liners at sea are being ordered by wireless to return to the nearest French port.

"The dirigible, Montgolfier, passed over Paris, proceeding to the German frontier."

SHE GAINED 36 LBS.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Harlowe Ont. writes: "I was troubled for many years with weak, watery blood and dropsy. I had nervous headaches, dizziness, and sinking spells and was, in fact, a semi-invalid. Doctors told me my heart and kidneys were diseased and gave me up. By using 25 boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I have been cured of many of my old complaints and gained 36 pounds in weight."

NAVAL BATTLE OFF FRENCH COAST

London, Aug. 4---A Naval Battle is believed to be in progress off the French Coast. Reports received from the life saving and coast guard stations along the Yorkshire shore say that the heavy firing was heard there at daybreak this morning. It has been expected that the Germans would attempt to raid the French Coast before the British Fleet could act, and it is believed by the Naval Officials here that at least a part of the hostile German and French Fleets have clashed.

Thousands of frantic men and women paraded the streets in military formation, waving national colours and singing patriotic songs.

SERVIANS' STUBBORN DEFENCE MAINTAINED

NISH, Aug. 4. — The Austrian forces at Semlin were still fighting in check to-day, and have not been able to cross the Danube. Fighting at Belgrade continued unabated but the Servians put up such a stubborn defence that every attempt of the Austrians to cross the river have failed.

Big German Zeppelin Dirigible Almost Destroyed Tunneville, France

KILLED PATROL OF TROOPS

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, France, Aug. 4.—German aviators killed fifteen persons and badly damaged the historic town of Luneville to-day. In the early hours of the morning a big Zeppelin dirigible sailed out of the fog. It was flying low, and as it passed over the Church of St. Jacques, a quantity of high explosives was dropped. The concussion when it exploded was terrific. One of the side walls of the church was demolished and a patrol of troops stationed there were annihilated.

Examiner's War Extras Hours Ahead

Of Any Other Paper That Can Reach the City From the Outside

"Examiner War Extra!" When you hear the news boys crying this note in all keys of strident strenuosity you may know that you are buying the very latest up-to-the-moment war news. You should make a rush for The Examiner in the evening, for it contains the cream, the pith, the essence of all the war news worth while.

A case in point: Last night the news stands were literally mobbed. Graham's news stand, on Charlotte street, had about three hundred citizens thronging the walks in front of it and overflowing upon the street, struggling, pushing, and crowding to get the Toronto evening papers. Even women were in the middle of it, in danger of having their scant skirts torn from their thinly-protected le—limbs.

And when they got their papers, by pouncing upon a news boy, like a dozen dogs on one bone, they were mightily sold. When they read, by the staggered Hydro-electric lights, they were staggered to find that what they had fought for and bought had only the news under various flash headings— the very news they had read in the Examiner's noon edition, and not a line additional to what appeared in the Evening Edition of the Examiner. Don't forget it. The Examiner contains all the news the city papers can have. The Examiner has the same telegraphic service and gets all the news worth while, hot from the wires. The moral is plain: Buy a home paper at 4 o'clock and you won't have to wait till half-past eight to get second-hand war news.

Any and every Examiner Extra or regular Evening Edition contains news—and all the news worth while—hours ahead of any outside paper that can reach the city.

Kron Prinzessin Cecelie Loomed Through Fog at Bar Harbour This Morning--Wireless Despatches From Germany Turned Her Back From the Danger Zone in European Waters,

RUSSIANS TO SERVE IN FRENCH ARMY

Line Up With French if Unable to Return to Russia---Italy Notifies Germany of Her Neutrality---Russia Holds Three German Ships.

BAR HARBOUR, Me., Aug. 4.—The North German Lloyd treasure ship with ten million dollars aboard, the Crown Prinzessin Cecelie, steamed out of the fog into this harbour early to-day. Her arrival was a complete surprise. She had been variously reported as having safely reached a German part, and having been intercepted by British cruisers on the other side. An hour after his arrival Captain Pollock came ashore and immediately got into touch with officials of the line in New York. It is understood that he has asked for orders, and whether he is to put back to sea and make for New York or Boston.

Among the passengers aboard were wealthy Germans and military officers, who were anxious to get back to Germany to their course. When Captain Pollock received orders by wireless to turn back immediately to the United States there was a mutiny among the passengers. They offered to buy the ship and sail her under United States colours, but Pollock obeyed his orders and returned to this side.

BRITISH CABINET IN FAVOUR OF WAR

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The British Cabinet favours war. It was learned to-day that Great Britain had sent an ultimatum to Germany demanding the immediate withdrawal of German troops from Belgian territory. This step follows the cautious approach that has characterized the Cabinet's handling of the present crisis. It is generally believed that Britain will formally declare war within 24 hours.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—Belgium has refused Germany's demand for neutrality. Assurance has been given to France that Britain will protect the French coast and shipping and has renewed the promise to Belgium that neutrality must be maintained.

RUSSIANS IN THE FRENCH ARMY

PARIS, Aug. 4.—Russia through her ambassador here has formally notified all Russian persons residing in France that they can serve Russia by enrolling in the French army.

FRENCH AIRMEN IN GREAT NUMBERS

BERLIN, Aug. 4.—A semi-official communication issued to-day says: "While no German soldier has yet set foot on French soil official reports from the frontier state that French troops, in bodies as large as a company, crossed the German frontier at Gottesthal, Metzeral, Markirch and the Schlucht Pass, before there was any declaration of war.

"A breach of neutrality has also been committed through the fact that French military airmen in great numbers, have flown over Belgian and Dutch territory on their way to Germany."

DUKE WILL ADVISE CANADIAN MILITIA

Governor-General Will Probably Remain if War Scare Lasts

OTTAWA, Aug. 3.—Word was received to-day that the Duke of Connaught will reach the Capital between one and two o'clock to-morrow morning. It is not believed here that the Duke will return to Britain, but will remain in Canada to advise the Cabinet and assist in mobilization.

If the war scare lasts any length of time, it is thought likely that the term of the Duke will be extended in place of Prince Alexander of Teck coming to Canada.

CHAPTER X.

TERROR.

Noon found them far advanced in the preliminaries of their hard adventuring.

Working together in a strong and frank companionship—the past temporarily forgotten and the future still out far away—half a day's labour advanced them a long distance on the road to safety.

Even those few hours sufficed to prove that, of all strange, untoward action befell, they stood a more than equal chance of winning out.

Realizing to begin with, that a home on the forty-eighth story of the tower was entirely impractical, since it would mean that most of their time would have to be used in laborious climbing, they quickly changed their dwelling.

They chose a suite of offices on the fifth floor, looking directly out over and into the cool green beauty of Madison Forest. In an hour or so, they cleared out the bats and spiders, the rubbish and the dust, and made the place very decently presentable.

"Well, that's a good beginning, anyhow," remarked the engineer, standing back and looking critically at the finished work.

"I don't see why we shouldn't make a fairly comfortable home out of this for a while. It's not too high for ease, and it's high enough for safety—to keep prowling bears and wolves and—other things from exploring us in the night."

He laughed, but memories of the spear-head tinged his merriment with apprehension. "In a day or two I'll make some kind of an outer door, or barricade. But first, I need that axe and some other things. Can you spare me for a while, now?"

"I'd rather go along, too," she answered wistfully, from the window-sill where she sat resting.

"No, not this time, please!" he entreated. "First I've got to go 'way to the top of the tower and bring down my chemicals and all the other things up there.

"Then I'm going out on a hunt for fishes, a lamp, some oil, and no end of things. You save your strength for a while; stay here and keep house and be a good girl!"

"All right," she acceded, smiling a little sadly. "But really, I feel quite able to go."

"This afternoon, perhaps; not now. Good-bye!" And he started for the door. Then a thought struck him. He turned and came back.

"By the way," said he, "if we can fix up some kind of a holster, I'll take one of those revolvers. With the best of this leather here," nodding at the gladstone bag. "I should imagine we could manufacture something serviceable."

They planned the holster together, and he cut it out with his knife, while she slit leather thongs to lash it with. Presently it was done, and a strap to tie it round his waist with—a crude, rough thing, but just as useful as though finished with the utmost skill.

"We'll make another for you when I get home this noon," he remarked, picking up the automatic and a handful of cartridges. Quickly he filled the magazine. The shells were green with verdigris, and many a rust-spot disfigured the one-time brightness of the arm.

As he stepped over to the window, aimed and pulled the trigger, a sharp and welcome report burst from the weapon. And a few leaves clipped from an oak in the forest, zig-zagged down in the bright, warm sunlight.

"I guess she'll do all right!" he laughed, sliding the ugly weapon into his new holster. "You see, the powder and fulminate, sealed up in the cartridges, are practically imperishable. Here, let me load yours, too.

"If you want something to do, you can practise on that dead limb out there, see? And don't be afraid of wasting ammunition. There must be millions of cartridges in this old burg—millions—all ours!"

Again he laughed, and handing her the other pistol, now fully loaded, took his leave. Before he had climbed a hundred feet up the tower stair, he heard a slow, uneven pop—pop—popping, and with satisfaction knew that Beatrice was already perfecting herself in the use of the revolver.

"And she may need it, too—we both may, badly—before we know it!" thought he, frowning, as he kept upon his way.

This reflection weighed in so heavily upon him, all due to the flint arrow-head point, that he made still another excuse that afternoon and so got out of taking the girl into the forest with him on his exploring trip.

The excuse was all the more plausible inasmuch as he left her enough work at home to do, making some real clothing and some sandals for them both. This task, now that the girl had scissors to use, was not too hard.

Stern brought her great armfuls of the furs from the shop in the arcade and left her busily and happily employed.

He spent the afternoon in scouting through the entire neighborhood from Sixth Avenue as far east as Third and from Twenty-seventh Street down through Union Square.

Revolver in his left hand, knife in his right to cut away troublesome bush or brambles, or to slit impeding vine-masses, he progressed slowly and observantly.

He kept his eyes open for big game, but—though he found moose-tracks at the corner of Broadway and Nineteenth—he ran into nothing more formidable than a lynx, which snarled at him from a tree overhanging the mournful ruins of the Farragut monument.

One shot sent it bounding and screaming with pain, out of view. Stern noted with satisfaction that blood followed its trail.

"Guess I haven't forgotten how to shoot in all these 2 years!" he commented, stooping to examine the spoor. "That may come in handy later!"

Then, still wary and watchful, he continued his exploration.

He found that the city, as such, had entirely ceased to be.

"Nothing but lines and monstrous rubbish heaps of ruins," he sized up the situation, "traversed by lanes of forest and overgrown with every sort of vegetation.

"Every wooden building completely wiped out. Brick and stone ones practically gone. Steel alone standing and that in a rotten state. Nothing at all intact but the few concrete structures."

"Ha! ha!" And he laughed satirically. "If the builders of the twentieth century could have foreseen this they wouldn't have thrown quite such a chest, eh? And they talked of engineering!"

Useless though it was, he felt a certain pride in noting that the Osterhaut Building, on Seventeenth Street, had lasted rather better than the average.

"My work!" said he, nodding with grim satisfaction, then passed on.

Into the Subway he penetrated at Eighteenth Street, climbing with difficulty down the choked stairway, through bushes and over masses of ruin that had fallen from the roof. The great tube, he saw, was choked with litter.

Slimy and damp it was, with a mephitic smell and ugly pools of water settled in the ancient roadbed. The rails were wholly gone in places. In others only rotten fragments of steel remained.

A goggle-eyed toad stared impudently at him from a lone tangle of rubbish that had been a train—stalled there for ever by the final block-signal of death.

Through the broken arches overhead the rain and storms of ages had beaten down, and lush grasses flourished here and there, where sunlight could penetrate.

No human dust-heaps here, as in the shelter of the arcade. Long since every vestige of man had been swept away. Stern shuddered, more depressed by the sight here than at any other place so far visited.

"An dthey boasted of a work for all time!" whispered he, awed by the horror of it. "They boasted—like the financiers, the churchmen, the merchants, everybody! Boasted of their institutions, their city, their country. And now——"

Out he clambered presently, terribly depressed by what he had witnessed, and set to work laying in still more supplies from the wrecked shops. Now for the first time, his wonder and astonishment having largely abated, he began to feel the horror of this loneliness.

"No life here! Nobody to speak to—except the girl—" he exclaimed aloud, the sound of his own voice uncanny in that woodland street of death. "All gone, everything! My Heavens, suppose I didn't have her? How long could I go on alone, and keep my mind?"

The thought terrified him. He put it resolutely away and went to work. Wherever he stumbled upon anything of value he eagerly seized it.

The labour, he found, kept him from the subconscious dread of what might happen to Beatrice or to himself if either should meet with any mishap. The consequences of either one dying, he knew, must be horrible beyond all thinking for the survivor.

Up Broadway he found much to keep—things which he garnered in the up-caught hem of his bearskin, things of all kinds and uses. He found a clay pipe—all the wooden ones had vanished from the shop—and a glass jar of tobacco.

These he took as priceless treasures. More jars of edibles he discovered, also a stock of rare wines. Coffee and salt he came upon. In the ruins of the little French brassware shop, opposite the Flatiron, he made a rich haul of cups and plates and a still.

THE OUTCASTS OF POKER FLAT

By BRET HARTE

BRET HARTE

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS

Twenty-four famous authors were asked recently to name the best short story in the English language. Richard Harding Davis and Wallace Irwin named "The Outcasts of Poker Flat," by Bret Harte, whose complete works are published by the Houghton-Mifflin Company.

PART I.

As Mr. John Oakhurst, gambler, stepped into the main street of Poker Flat on the morning of the 23d of November, 1850, he was conscious of a change in its moral atmosphere since the preceding night. Two or three men, conversing earnestly together, ceased as he approached and exchanged significant glances. There was a Sabbath lull in the air, which, in a settlement unused to Sabbath influences, looked ominous.

Mr. Oakhurst's calm, handsome face betrayed small concern in these indications. Whether he was conscious of any predisposing cause was another question. "I reckon they're after somebody," he reflected, "likely it's me." He returned to his pocket the handkerchief with which he had been whipping away the red dust of Poker Flat from his neat boots and quietly discharged his mind of any further conjecture.

In point of fact, Poker Flat was "after somebody." It had lately suffered the loss of several thousand dollars, two valuable horses and a prominent citizen. It was experiencing a spasm of virtuous reaction, quite as lawless and ungovernable as any of the acts that had provoked it. A secret committee had determined to rid the town of all improper persons. This was done permanently in regard to two men who were then hanging from the boughs of a sycamore in the gulch and temporarily in the banishment of certain other objectionable characters. I regret to say that some of these were ladies. It is but due to the sex, however, to state that their impropriety was professional and it was only in such easily established standards of evil that Poker Flat ventured to sit in judgment.

Mr. Oakhurst was right in supposing that he was included in this category. A few of the committee had urged hanging him as a possible example, and a sure method of reimbursing themselves from his pockets of the sums he had won for them. "It's agin justice," said Jim Wheeler, "to let this yer young man from Roaring Camp—an entire stranger—carry away our money." But a crude sentiment of equity residing in the breasts of those who had been fortunate enough to win from Mr. Oakhurst overruled this narrower local prejudice.

Mr. Oakhurst received his sentence with philosophic calmness, none the less coolly that he was aware of the hesitation of his judges. He was too much of a gambler not to accept fate. With him life was at best an uncertain game, and he recognized the usual percentage in favor of the dealer.

A body of armed men accompanied the deported wickedness of Poker Flat to the outskirts of the settlement. Besides Mr. Oakhurst, who was known to be a coolly desperate man and for whose intimidation the armed escort was intended, the expatriated party consisted of a young woman familiarly known as "The Duchess;" another, who had won the title of "Mother Shipton," and "Uncle Billy," a suspected sluice robber and confirmed drunkard. The cavalcade provoked no comments from the spectators, nor was any word uttered by the escort. Only when the gulch which marked the uttermost limit of Poker Flat was reached the leader spoke briefly and to the point. The exiles were forbidden to return at the peril of their lives.

As the escort disappeared their pent up feelings found vent in a few hysterical tears from the Duchess, some bad language from Mother Shipton and a Parthian volley of expletives from Uncle Billy. The philosophic Oakhurst alone remained silent. He listened calmly to Mother Shipton's desire to cut somebody's heart out, to the repeated statements of the Duchess that she would die in the road and to the alarming oaths that seemed to be bumped out of Uncle Billy as he rode forward. With the easy good humor characteristic of his class he insisted upon exchanging his own riding horse, Five Spot, for the sorry mule which the Duchess rode. But even this act did not draw the party into any closer sympathy. The young woman readjusted her somewhat draggled plumes with a feeble, faded coquetry. Mother Shipton eyed the possessor of Five Spot with malevolence, and Uncle Billy included the whole party in one sweeping anathema.

The road to Sandy Bar—a camp that, not having as yet experienced the regenerating influences of Poker Flat, consequently seemed to offer some invitation to the emigrants—lay over a steep mountain range. It was distant a day's severe travel. In that advanced season the party soon passed out of the moist, temperate regions of the foothills into the dry, cold, bracing air of the Sierras. The trail was narrow and difficult. At noon the Duchess, rolling out of her saddle upon the ground, declared her intention of going no farther, and the party halted.

The spot was singularly wild and impressive. A wooded amphitheater surrounded on three sides by precipitous cliffs of naked granite sloped gently toward the crest of another precipice that overlooked the valley. It was undoubtedly the most suitable spot for a camp had camping been advisable. But Mr. Oakhurst knew that scarcely half the journey to Sandy Bar was accomplished and the party were not equipped or provisioned for delay. This fact he pointed out to his companions curtly, with a philosophic commentary on the folly of "throwing up their hand before the game was played out." But they were furnished with liquor, which in this emergency stood them in place of food, fuel, rest and prescience. In spite of his remonstrances it was not long before they were more or less under its influence. Uncle Billy passed rapidly from a bellicose state into one of stupor, the Duchess became maudlin and Mother Shipton snored. Mr. Oakhurst alone remained erect, leaning against a rock calmly surveying them.

Mr. Oakhurst did not drink. It interfered with a profession which required coolness, impassiveness and presence of mind and, in his own language, he "couldn't afford it." As he gazed at his recumbent fellow exiles the loneliness begotten of his pariah trade, his habits of life, his very vices for the first time seriously oppressed him. He bestirred himself in dusting his black clothes, washing his hands and face and other acts characteristic of his studiously neat habits, and for the moment forgot his annoyance. The thought of deserting his weaker and more pitiable companions never perhaps occurred to him. Yet he could not help feeling the want of that excitement which, singularly enough, was most conducive to that calm equanimity for which he was notorious. He looked at the gloomy walls that rose 1,000 feet sheer above the circling pines around him, at the sky, ominously clouded; at the valley below, already deepening in shadow. And, doing so, suddenly he heard his own name called.

A horseman slowly ascended the trail. In the fresh, open face of the newcomer Mr. Oakhurst recognized Tom Simson, otherwise known as "the Innocent" of Sandy Bar. He had met him some months before over a "little game," and had, with perfect equanimity, won the entire fortune—amounting to some $40—of that guileless youth. After the game was finished, Mr. Oakhurst drew the youthful spectator behind the door and thus addressed him: "Tommy, you're a good little man, but you can't gamble worth a cent. Don't try it over again." He then handed him his money back, pushed him gently from the room, and so made a devoted slave of Tom Simson.

There was a remembrance of this in his boyish and enthusiastic greeting of Mr. Oakhurst. He had started, he said, to go to Poker Flat to seek his fortune. "Alone?" No, not exactly alone. In fact (a giggle), he had run away with Piney Woods. Didn't Mr Oakhurst remember Piney? She that used to wait on the table at the Temperance House? They had been engaged a long time, but old Jake Woods had objected, and so they had run away and were going to Poker Flat to be married, and here they were. And they were tired out, and how lucky it was they had found a place to camp and company. All this the Innocent delivered rapidly, while Piney, a stout, comely damsel of fifteen, emerged from behind the pine tree, where she had been blushing unseen, and rode to the side of her lover.

Mr. Oakhurst seldom troubled himself with sentiment, still less with propriety, but he had a vague idea that the situation was not fortunate. He retained, however, his presence of mind sufficiently to kick Uncle Billy who was about to say something, and Uncle Billy was sober enough to recognize in Mr. Oakhurst's kick a superior power that would not bear trifling. He then endeavored to dissuade Tom Simson from delaying further, but in vain. He even pointed out the fact that there was no provision, nor means of making a camp. But, unluckily, the Innocent met this objection by assuring the party that he was provided with an extra mule loaded with provisions and by the discovery of a rude attempt at a log house near the trail. "Piney can stay with Mrs. Oakhurst," said the Innocent, pointing to the Duchess, "and I can shift for myself."

Nothing but Mr. Oakhurst's admonishing foot saved Uncle Billy from bursting into a roar of laughter. As it was, he felt compelled to retire up the canyon until he could recover his gravity. There he confided the joke to the tall pine trees, with many slaps of his leg, contortions of his face and the usual profanity. But when he returned to the party he found them seated by a fire—for the air had grown strangely chill and the sky overcast—in apparently amicable conversation. Piney was actually talking in an impulsive, girlish fashion to the Duchess, who was listening with an interest and animation she had not shown for many days. The Innocent was holding forth, apparently with equal effect, to Mr. Oakhurst and Mother Shipton, who was actually relaxing into amiability. "Is this yer a d—d picnic?" said Uncle Billy, with inward scorn, as he surveyed the sylvan group, the glancing firelight and the tethered animals in the foreground. Suddenly an idea mingled with the alcoholic fumes that disturbed his brain. It was apparently of a jocular nature, for he felt impelled to slap his leg again and cram his fist into his mouth.

As the shadows crept slowly up the mountain a slight breeze rocked the tops of the pine trees and moaned through their long and gloomy aisles. The ruined cabin, patched and covered with pine boughs, was set apart for the ladies. As the lovers parted they unaffectedly exchanged a kiss, so honest and sincere that it might have been heard above the swaying pines. The frail Duchess and the matronly Mother Shipton were probably too stunned to remark upon this last evidence of simplicity, and so turned without a word to the hut. The fire was replenished, the men lay down before the door and in a few minutes were asleep.

Mr. Oakhurst was a light sleeper. Toward morning he awoke benumbed and cold. As he stirred the dying fire the wind, which was now blowing strongly, brought to his cheek that which caused the blood to leave it—snow!

He started to his feet with the intention of awakening the sleepers, for there was no time to lose. But, turning to where Uncle Billy had been lying, he found him gone. A suspicion leaped to his brain and a curse to his lips. He ran to the spot where the mules had been tethered. They were no longer there. The tracks were already rapidly disappearing in the snow.

The momentary excitement brought Mr. Oakhurst back to the fire with his usual calm. He did not waken the sleepers. The Innocent slumbered peacefully, with a smile on his good humored, freckled face; the virgin Piney slept beside her frail sisters as sweetly as though attended by celestial guardians, and Mr. Oakhurst, drawing his blanket over his shoulders, stroked his mustache and waited for the dawn. It came slowly in a whirling mist of snowflakes that dazzled and confused the eye. What could be seen of the landscape appeared magically changed. He looked over the valley and summed up the present and future in two words—"snowed in!"

A careful inventory of the provisions, which fortunately for the party, had been stored within the hut and so escaped the felonious fingers of Uncle Billy, disclosed the fact that with care and prudence they might last ten days longer. "That is," said Mr. Oakhurst sotto voce to the Innocent, "if you're willing to board us. If you ain't—and perhaps you'd better not—you can wait till Uncle Billy gets back with provisions." For some occult reason Mr. Oakhurst could not bring himself to disclose Uncle Billy's rascality and so offered the hypothesis that he had wandered from the camp and had accidentally stampeded the animals. He forgot a warning to the Duchess and Mother Shipton, who, of course, knew the facts of their associate's defection. "They'll find out the truth about us all when they find out anything," he added significantly, "and there's no good frightening them now."

Tom Simson not only put all his worldly store at the disposal of Mr. Oakhurst, but seemed to enjoy the prospect of their enforced seclusion. "We'll have a good camp for a week, and then the snow'll melt, and we'll all go back together." The cheerful gayety of the young man and Mr. Oakhurst's calm infected the others. The Innocent, with the aid of pine boughs, extemporized a thatch for the roofless cabin, and the Duchess directed Piney in the rearrangement of the interior with a taste and tact that opened the blue eyes of that provincial maiden to their fullest extent. "I reckon now you're used to fine things at Poker Flat," said Piney. The Duchess turned away sharply to conceal something that reddened her cheeks through its professional tint, and Mother Shipton requested Piney not to "chatter." But when Mr. Oakhurst returned from a weary search for the trail he heard the sound of happy laughter echoed from the rocks. He stopped in some alarm, and his thoughts first naturally reverted to the whisky, which he had prudently cached. "And yet it don't somehow sound like whisky," said the gambler. It was not until he caught sight of the blazing fire through the still blinding storm and the group around it that he settled to the conviction that it was "square fun."

PART II.

WHETHER Mr. Oakhurst had cached his cards with the whisky as something debarred the free access of the community I cannot say. It was certain that, in Mother Shipton's words, he "didn't say cards once" during that evening. Haply the time was beguiled by an accordion produced somewhat ostentatiously by Tom Simson from his pack. Notwithstanding some difficulties attending the manipulation of this instrument, Piney Woods managed to pluck several reluctant melodies from its keys, to the accompaniment of the Innocent on a pair of bone castanets. But the crowning festivity of the evening was reached in a rude camp meeting hymn, which the lovers, joining hands, sang with great earnestness and vociferation. I fear that a certain defiant tone and Covenanter's swing to its chorus, rather than any devotional quality, caused it speedily to infect the others, who at last joined in the refrain:

I'm proud to live in the service of the Lord,
And I'm bound to die in his army.

The pines rocked, the storm eddied and whirled above the miserable group and the flames of their altar leaped heavenward, as if in token of the vow.

At midnight the storm abated, the rolling clouds parted and the stars glittered keenly above the sleeping camp. Mr. Oakhurst, whose professional habits had enabled him to live on the smallest possible amount of sleep, in dividing the watch with Tom Simson, somehow managed to take upon himself the greater part of that duty. He excused himself to the Innocent by saying that he had "often been a week without sleep." "Doing what?" asked Tom. "Poker!" replied Oakhurst sententiously. "When a man gets a streak of luck—nigger luck—he don't get tired. The luck gives in first. Luck," continued the gambler reflectively, "is a mighty queer thing. All you know about it for certain is that it's bound to change. And it's finding out when it's going to change that makes you. We've had a streak of bad luck since we left Poker Flat—you come along and, slap, you get into it too. If you can hold your cards right along you're all right. For," added the gambler, with cheerful irrelevance,

"I'm proud to live in the service of the Lord,
And I'm bound to die in his army."

The third day came, and the sun, looking through the white curtained valley, saw the outcasts divide their slowly decreasing store of provisions for the morning meal. It was one of the peculiarities of that mountain climate that its rays diffused a kindly warmth over the wintry landscape, as if in regretful commiseration of the past. But it revealed drift on drift of snow piled high around the hut—a hopeless, uncharted, trackless sea of white lying below the rocky shores to which the castaways still clung. Through the marvelously clear air the smoke of the pastoral village of Poker Flat rose miles away. Mother Shipton saw it and from a remote pinnacle of her rocky fastness hurled in that direction a final malediction. It was her last vituperative attempt, and perhaps for that reason was invested with a certain degree of sublimity. It did her good, she privately informed the Duchess. "Just you go out there and cuss and see." She then set herself to the task of amusing "the child," as she and the Duchess were pleased to call Piney. Piney was no chicken, but it was a soothing and original theory of the pair thus to account for the fact that she didn't swear and wasn't improper.

When night crept up again through the gorges the reedy notes of the accordion rose and fell in fitful spasms and long drawn gasps by the dickering campfire. But music failed to fill entirely the aching void left by insufficient food, and a new diversion was proposed by Piney—story telling. Neither Mr. Oakhurst nor his female companions caring to relate their personal experiences, this plan would have failed, too, but for the Innocent. Some months before he had chanced upon a stray copy of Mr. Pope's ingenious translation of the "Iliad." He now proposed to narrate the principal incidents of that poem—having thoroughly mastered the argument and fairly forgotten the words—in the current vernacular of Sandy Bar. And so for the rest of that night the Homeric demigods again walked the earth. Trojan valor and wily Greek stratagem in the quaint heathen innocence of primitive days were rehearsed to the audience of the cabin. Sometimes overcome by his own eloquence, sometimes by the fumes of whisky, the narrator would pause, mistake the name of one hero for that of another, or totally forget the thread of his narrative. But these breaks were supplied by the other members of the party, who filled in the gaps from their own experience or invention.

In this manner Achilles, Ajax, Agamemnon and the rest of the heroes of the Trojan War were introduced to the Sandy Bar audience. "Hector," said the narrator, "was a mighty fine man, and so was Achilles, but Hector was more reliable like, and you could bet your pile on him in a fight. Well, sir, Achilles was the favorite, for he could run like a deer, and had built a mighty fine house for himself, and was a good deal thought of by the women. But he had a soft spot in him, and a woman got it and went for it, and that was the end of Achilles."

So with small food and much of Homer and the accordion a week passed over the heads of the outcasts. The sun again forsook them, and again from leaden skies the snowflakes were sifted over the land. Day by day closer around them drew the snowy circle until at last they looked from their prison over drifted walls of dazzling white that towered twenty feet above their heads. It became more and more difficult to replenish their fires, even from the fallen trees beside them, now half hidden in the drifts. And yet no one complained. The lovers turned from the dreary prospect and looked into each other's eyes and were happy. Mr. Oakhurst settled himself coolly to the losing game before him. The Duchess, more cheerful than she had been, assumed the care of Piney. Only Mother Shipton—once the strongest of the party—seemed to sicken and fade. At midnight on the tenth day she called Oakhurst to her side. "I'm going," she said in a voice of querulous weakness, "but don't say anything about it. Don't waken the kids. Take the bundle from under my head and open it." Mr. Oakhurst did so. It contained Mother Shipton's rations for the last week, untouched. "Give 'em to the child," she said, pointing to the sleeping Piney. "You've starved yourself," said the gambler. "That's what they call it," said the woman querulously as she lay down again and, turning her face to the wall, passed quietly away.

The accordion and the bones were put aside that day, and Homer was forgotten. When the body of Mother Shipton had been committed to the snow Mr. Oakhurst took the Innocent aside and showed him a pair of snow shoes, which he had fashioned from the old pack saddle. "There's one chance in a hundred to save her yet," he said, pointing to Piney, "but it's there," he added, pointing toward Poker Flat. "If you can reach there in two days she's safe." "And you?" asked Tom Simson. "I'll stay here," was the curt reply.

The lovers parted with a long embrace. "You are not going, too?" said the Duchess, as she saw Mr. Oakhurst apparently waiting to accompany him. "As far as the canyon," he replied. He turned suddenly and kissed the Duchess, leaving her pallid face aflame and her trembling limbs rigid with amazement.

Night came, but not Mr. Oakhurst. It brought the storm again and the whirling snow. Then the Duchess, feeding the fire, found that some one had quietly piled beside the hut enough fuel to last a few days longer. The tears rose to her eyes, but she hid them from Piney.

The women slept but little. In the morning, looking into each other's faces, they read their fate. Neither spoke, but Piney, accepting the position of the stronger, drew near and placed her arm around the Duchess' waist. They kept this attitude for the rest of the day. That night the storm reached its greatest fury, and, rending asunder the protecting pines, invaded the very hut.

Toward morning they found themselves unable to feed the fire, which gradually died away. As the embers slowly blackened the Duchess crept closer to Piney and broke the silence of many hours. "Piney, can you pray?" "No, dear," said Piney simply. The Duchess, without knowing exactly why, felt relieved, and, putting her head upon Piney's shoulder, spoke no more. And so reclining, the younger and purer pillowing the head of her soiled sister upon her virgin breast they fell asleep.

The wind lulled as if it feared to waken them. Feathery drifts of snow shaken from the long pine boughs, flew like white winged birds and settled about them as they slept. The moon through the rifted clouds looked down upon what had been the camp. But all human stain, all trace of earthly travail, was hidden beneath the spotless mantle mercifully flung from above.

They slept all that day and the next nor did they waken when voices and footsteps broke the silence of the camp. And when pitying fingers brushed the snow from their wan faces you could scarcely have told from the equal peace that dwelt upon them which was she that had sinned. Even the law of Poker Flat recognized this and turned away, leaving them still locked in each other's arms.

But at the head of the gulch, on one of the largest pine trees, they found the deuce of clubs pinned to the bark with a bowie knife. It bore the following written in pencil in a firm hand:

Beneath This Tree Lies the Body of
JOHN OAKHURST,
Who Struck a Streak of Bad Luck
on the 23d of November, 1850, and Handed In His Checks
on the 7th December, 1850.

And pulseless and cold, with a derringer by his side and a bullet in his heart, though still calm as in life, beneath the snow lay he who was at once the strongest and yet the weakest of the outcasts of Poker Flat.

Morganatic Marriages.

In the British royal family morganatic marriages have been very frequent, especially in the eighteenth century, and it was to check these marriages by royal princes that the act was passed by which no marriage within the family is valid unless the assent of the sovereign has been given.

The most recent of these morganatic unions was that of the late Duke of Cambridge, whose wife was known as Mrs. FitzGeorge, a name which has descended to the children. In Europe the most interesting case at present is that of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand, whose son cannot succeed to the Austro-Hungarian throne as the law stands at present.

There were a good many morganatic marriages in the last century in the Hohenzollern family, but the last seems to have been in 1853, when Prince Albrecht the elder, brother of the Emperor William I., married Faulein von Rauch. — Manchester Evening News.

Woman's Part in the World To-Day

Mrs. Lorillard Spencer to Desert Newport for Jolo Jungles as Missionary to Wild Tribesmen

Wealthy Woman Determines to Work Among Igorrotes After Trip Around World.

FROM the luxuries of a mansion within a stone's throw of New York, Fifth avenue and a villa with one of the most commanding views obtainable at Newport to the jungles of the Philippines, where warlike tribes of Igorrotes lay in ambush for any and all representatives of civilization who may happen to invade their fastnesses, is a far cry, but this is the courageous step Mrs. Lorillard Spencer is about to take. While men and women reared in the lap of luxury often jeopardize their lives in pursuit of sport or pleasure, no such motive prompts such a radical course by this matron, whose name has been synonymous with all those pursuits which those of culture and social qualifications are entitled to. Her recently announced determination to make this pilgrimage might be termed quixotic by some, but the great cause of Christianity is her watchword, and with this for her slogan Mrs. Spencer will make an exhaustive study of conditions in the Philippines, and her heart and purse are at the disposal of those who have interested her in this work.

When friends of Mrs. Spencer learned that she, accompanied by Miss Virginia Young, for years the head deaconness at St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church, New York city, were soon to leave for the Philippines, there to spread the doctrines of the Church among the ignorant and barbarous tribes that inhabit this country, they deemed her course little short of madness. But when they paused to learn that this determination had only been reached after a long and earnest talk with Bishop Brent, in charge of the Episcopal diocese of the Philippines, they realized that it was only after due and mature deliberation that she had decided on the move.

To intimate friends Mrs. Spencer has asserted that she never contemplated a journey with more pleasurable thrills than this. While her arrangements have not been completed by any means, nevertheless she is so arranging her affairs that she will be able to embark in the near future, and to this end she has cancelled nearly all her social engagements some months ago. Miss Young, her companion in this broad field of mission work, accordingly left the city in the waning hours of the Protestant Episcopal Convention, recently in session here for two weeks or more, and when she returns this month she will so perfect her arrangements that an early date for embarkation may be set.

Mrs. Spencer and Miss Young will proceed directly to Manila and then seek the interior of this archipelago and seek to found a mission at Jolo, the native heath of one of the ernellest and most ferocious tribes this government has had to contend with since the United States constituted itself the guardian of this Far Eastern race. Miss Young will outline the work in view, giving Mrs. Spencer the aid of her ripe and valuable experiences, while the latter, after having grasped the situation thoroughly, will advance the necessary funds to finance the work the mission is to undertake. Bishop Brent is naturally overjoyed with having succeeded in enlisting so wealthy and influential a convert to his cause, and when the announcement was made he exultantly told of the work that lay before these lone women and of the many injustices that had been heaped upon a tribe which he described as fearless and made up of one of the most "magnificent bodies of warriors" he had ever known.

Mrs. Spencer's name is well known where charity and a desire to aid the stricken are concerned. Deeply interested in church work, although not what might be strictly termed a "church worker," she has ever stood ready to aid the downtrodden and spread cheer and comfort where sorrow, suffering and want had crept in. The mistress of a large fortune, she has been more than generous in her contributions to Home and Foreign Missions, and the Protestant Episcopal Church has had no more liberal contributor to these branches of its broad fields of endeavor.

Before arriving at this conclusion Mrs. Spencer had many conferences with Bishop Brent, who while in this city stopped with Mrs. Whitelaw Reid. She was made thoroughly familiar with the work that lay beyond and she knew of the perils that attended such an undertaking. But keen in the desire to extend the work of the Church in which she had been reared and thoroughly infused with the enthusiasm of the head of the diocese, she determined to allow no obstacles to deter her in her most recent resolve.

MRS LORILLARD SPENCER

Mrs. Spencer has been a member of St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church for many years, and it was there that she came to know Miss Young, for a long time the head deaconess of this parish. Missionary work had ever interested Miss Young, and it was but natural that she should have interested Mrs. Spencer in this branch of her work. Only recently the globe together, and it was not long after their return here that the announcement of the Philippine project was made.

Miss Virginia Young, Deaconess of New York Church, to Aid.

In the course of this trip Miss Young and Mrs. Spencer visited nearly all of the foreign missions in which the Protestant Episcopal Church is interested, and therefore obtained first hand an intimate knowledge of the splendid work the Church is doing. Shortly after their return the Episcopal Convention began its sessions, and the head of every diocese which comes under the control of that Church in North America went to New York to attend the sessions of the House of Bishops.

In discussing the work ahead in the Philippines Bishop Brent said that the field is broad and the work hard and arduous, but with women of the type of Mrs. Spencer and Miss Young to blaze the trail he felt confident that the most important step in this direction had been taken. He is sure that others just as prominent as Mrs. Spencer and Miss Young will soon manifest a similar interest in this far distant field and that the work now started will go steadily forward.

In the course of one of his addresses before the joint session he said:—

"So far the Christian nations have been showing the Filipinos how proficient they were in the manufacture of high class weapons and how effectively they could use them. I am trying to influence the natives with the principles of Christianity. If you should one day hear that I have lost my life, let there be no retributive justice. I do not wish to have bloodshed stain the honor of my name."

This eloquent and zealous appeal for the tribes whose souls he is seeking to reclaim struck a responsive chord in the heart of every man and woman in the cathedral, and as the women far outnumbered the men at this session it could readily be seen that more than one woman would willingly follow the lead taken by Mrs. Spencer had she the means and time at her disposal.

Those women present who take a prominent part in the social life of this city were even more deeply stirred when Bishop Brent concluded his address by saying—

"There is no difference between the pagan of Fifth avenue who worships the tinsel god of pleasure and the pagan of the hills of Luzon who worships the pitiable conception of a pitiless God. The Moros have been unconquered for centuries and I can only admire them. Warriors though they be, they are entitled to just that treatment one would expect a Christian nation to accord any race of people. The United States might in this way make reparation for the way it has acted toward another primitive race—the North American Indians."

Since her recent return to New York Mrs. Spencer has been stopping with relatives. Her handsome home in East Sixty-fourth street has not been opened this autumn, and the chances are it will remain closed until Mrs. Spencer returns from the Far East. Miss Young, while making either the Deaconesses' Home of St. George's or the Seerun Club her headquarters, has been stopping with her sister in East Sixty-fourth street until receiving a sudden summons calling her out of the city for a period of three weeks.

Miss Young has carefully guarded the secret surrounding the arrangements for her journey to and her stay in the Philippines. At the Seerun Club it was said that it was well known there that Miss Young is soon to leave for the Philippines, but that she had had very little to say concerning the trip. Those at the Deaconesses' Home seemed equally unfamiliar with the programme of the one-time head of their order, although one of them remarked that she was sure a wide field stretched before Miss Young and she was confident she would accomplish much toward awakening the tribe among whom she is to cast her lot.

Mrs. Spencer has occupied a commanding position in New York and Newport society for many years. As Miss Caroline S. Berryman she was a reigning belle, and her marriage to Mr. Spencer was one of the most brilliant functions of the autumn of 1883. She was the granddaughter of Stephen Whitney, one of the most prominent merchants of his day. Mr. Spencer inherited a large fortune from his father and he and his wife set up their establishment at Chastellux, one of Newport's showy places.

Both were fond of travel and they journeyed all over the world aboard Mr. Spencer's yacht. Mr. Spencer was the founder of the Illustrated American Magazine. Due to an illness which ultimately resulted in the amputation of his leg, the last years of his life were spent in practical retirement. He died about two years ago and the bulk of his fortune was left to his wife.

Menace of New Guinea Cannibals Serves as Prison Wall for Convicts.

IN New Guinea they have an extraordinarily effective method of controlling prisoners whereby they are able to dispense entirely with the high stone wall that usually hedges about convicted violators of the law.

Picture to yourself an aggregation of men who have been found guilty of every crime on earth, desperate fellows, many of them, men who have not stopped at murder, men whose hands are doubly, often trebly dyed with the stains of the foulest of deeds, violent characters who would hesitate at nothing which would serve their ends. Prison guards hardened to danger are afraid of this class of men in other countries. Let them loose upon any community, with their liberty at stake, and even the bravest guardians of the law might hesitate before trying to effect their capture. Only the thickest of stone walls, the broadest of iron bars are strong enough to hold them.

"Those who favor the rule of kindness instead of that of restraint in dealing with prisoners are often deeply interested in the success of the government of New Guinea in controlling their prisoners and keeping them from running away without the high wall or the iron bars of other prisons," says the Rev. C. V. Hall, a Methodist Episcopal missionary who has just returned to this country after a five years' tour of the world. The Reverend Dr. Hall explored various parts of New Guinea for nearly five months and he was greatly interested in the spectacle of the New Guinea prisoners, quiet and passive within the prison bounds, even though no wall, no bars, no visible barrier of any kind stood between them and perfect liberty.

"You know," said Dr. Hall, "the Dutch are at present doing with New Guinea what the British did with Australia years ago. They are shipping their convicts from Java to New Guinea, and one of the most striking experiences of the country is to see their methods of controlling the prisoners and keeping them within bounds without so much as a prison wall.

"When the new convict arrives he is marched out into the prison yard and into a certain alley of the prison grounds. This takes place the morning after he the native. Cannibalism exists within 150 miles of every port of call of New Guinea. There appears to be no decrease in the practice in this part of the world, although in many other places where once it flourished it no longer exists, and in other cannibal sections it has been greatly lessened. But in New Guinea it is rampant, and if any man thinks he can go into the interior without a strong guard and escape its dangers let him try it. If he escapes he will come back a wiser man and he will have seen sights that will leave him cold forever to the horrors possible to civilization.

"I did not receive any official permission to accompany the government expedition which was bound to go beyond any point ever reached by white men before. The son of the Dutch Governor was a member of the expedition, and through a high official of the government I was enabled to go although no official permission was furnished me.

"It was understood, of course, that I would take things as they came and that such risks as there were I took upon myself, the government not being in any way responsible.

"We travelled rapidly in the canoes, but when it was decided to take to the jungle we encountered such vast impassable masses of growth at many points that it was necessary for the soldiers to go ahead to clear the way by chopping down trees—and cannibals, too, I am afraid, in many instances.

"It was a wonderful and startling series of experiences sailing up and up the river. For four days we travelled to a point called Manork, the home of a tribe of headhunters, called Manorki. As we glided along through a gorgeous country, full of beautiful waterways and rich in tropical vegetation, we saw innumerable birds of paradise flash across our way, and the emu was quite as common. So rich was the country in alluring prospects in every direction that a thousand paths beckoned us to explore them. Constantly, however, we were aware of lurking danger. Naked black forms glided out of the forest. These were the warrior tribes, all of them cannibals. Usually they were absolutely nude, but there are some that encase their bodies in a coating of clay. From time to time we came to villages and were able to meet with some of the natives. We had with us a boy who could speak the dialect of that part of the country, and most of our communication was carried on through him.

"Fortunately for us they conceived us to be supernatural characters. They believed that we had come up out of the sea and they seemed to have respect and even a little awe for us. One of the reasons why they took us to be supernatural was that the natives, the strange race that we discovered, grow pale after death. The cannibals always see the Ki-Kis after death, unfortunately for the Ki-Kis, and so they were familiar with this phenomenon. Therefore they reasoned among themselves that we too must have tasted death and emerged triumphant from that encounter. There is something here of interest to the psychologist, that natural association of pallor with the great ordeal that besets mankind.

"We found that the savages of these small villages were first class fighting men. The object of their military pilgrimages is always simply the discomfiture of their enemies. As a result of a battle the visiting team, to speak in the popular parlance of civilization, bring home to their village spoils of war. These are the bodies of their victims. At the feast which follows the bodies are eaten and the heads kept as trophies.

"At one time we came up to a village when the fighting men had just taken fourteen heads of their enemies. These we obtained from them. Two of the lot fell to my share and I presented one of them to the museum at Jamaica. The other I brought back with me.

"The villages that we came upon were of the crudest sort. Nothing that could be called a village really even from the simplest standpoint. The natives have no actual constructive ability, the most that they do in this line being the arrangement of a few branches in such a manner that they are protected from the sun. A group of these simple shelters constitutes a village.

"These natives were large and dreadful looking, jet black in color and savage of aspect. They were very strong and ferocious and appeared to have no arts of any kind. They did not, so far as we were able to discover, make any sort of pottery or do even the simplest style of weaving and we saw no effort at personal adornment, such as the stringing of feathers or natural forest ornaments. They mated and were loyal to their mates, fighting to the death for the women whom they had taken as wives. Occasionally by way of a rebuke a savage husband kills and eats one of his wives which serves as a lesson in absolute obedience to the others. It is no place at all for the suffragettes, and yet apart from this occasional catastrophe domestic relations appear to be quite pleasant. We could not discover any religion at all, even the most primitive, nor any rites which celebrated even the most grewsome of gods. So far as we could find, the cannibalistic feasts in which the natives indulged were purely for the gratification of appetite and had no further significance unless it were as a howling demonstration of their triumph over their enemies.

"Sometimes the cannibals make their forays as a single tribe or again several tribes combine to attack other tribes, so we were told through our interpreter. When victory blesses the arms of the allies there is a triumphant return to the village of one of the chiefs engaged in the combat, the prisoners are dragged unwilling victims to the banqueting place, well knowing what fate awaits them.

"After four days of river travel we left the canoes and took to the mountains. It was then that we made our most interesting discovery of the journey. Our choppers going on ahead to break down some of the dense growth so that we could move forward came upon them first—the strange people whom we named the Ki-Kis. The reason for conferring this name upon the strange people we had from one of the cannibals of the valley below. He informed us that the people of the mountains were 'very good eating.' He also explained that they made their homes in the mountains so that they might flee from attack.

"The first Ki-Ki woman that we saw we took to be a tree, not because she had that romantic resemblance to a tree which one looks for in a dryad, but because she was modestly attired in the bark of a tree, which she had wrought into a garment resembling a tube. I have heard of the tube skirts which women are now wearing in civilized climes, and I suppose that the garment of our savage sister was much like that in shape. Some of those to whom I have described this garment have declared that the Ki-Ki belles must be wearing slit skirts, or how otherwise could they manage to get about in this narrow, tubelike garment? But I really think they put the garments on over their heads, and it is not long enough to impede their progress. The interesting part of the costume is that in making it the Ki-Ki maiden has made use of the wisdom of the wild animal and the bird, not to mention the serpent, for she has made herself practically invisible in the forest by this garment of forest hues.

"The men of this tribe were also more given to dress than their brothers of the valleys. They wore shoulder ornaments made of forest treasures, feathers, berries, &c. Both men and women are very much smaller than the valley people and not savage at all. Instead they are extremely timid, so much so that it was impossible to get near enough to them to learn much of their ways.

"They live upon roots, nuts, berries and other wild fruits and apparently are not cannibals. The principal motive of their lives is to escape from their pursuers farther down the valley. They are lighter in color than the cannibals. You couldn't call them brown or copper color; it is more truly described as a lighter black.

"There is no doubt that cannibalism is rampant in New Guinea and that the cannibals of the valley regard the Ki-Kis as a reserve stock in case of famine. The Dutch government does what it can to stamp out the practice, but so far there is no decrease in it, and the grewsome news of what happens among the natives is suppressed by the government.

"In other parts of the world there is also much cannibalism, but so far as I was able to gather information in the course of my travels it is generally on the decrease, especially in the Marquesas group, and yet it was in this group that I saw a human sacrifice and met a native chief whose skirt was made entirely of the hair of persons whom he had killed and helped to devour."

Dr. Hall started on his trip as a representative of the Methodist Episcopal Board of Jamaica. He expects to use the information which he gathered for the benefit of missions in which he is interested. He will publish a book, illustrated with photographs taken during his trip, and will also lecture. He has brought back with him a collection of butterflies and of snakes.

While he was talking of his New Guinea experiences Dr Hall held a loosely wrapped newspaper parcel in his hand, one place of which he finally disarranged so that the interviewer might see a tightly coiled serpent quite large enough and wicked looking enough to create havoc in any corner of New York outside of the Zoological Park serpent house.

Why They Do Not Attempt to Escape.

By the Rev. C. V. Hall.

"YOU may escape from this place," the convict is told, "that is easy enough, for, as you see, there are no walls, and the guards do not trouble too much about the prisoners getting far away. But in any direction that you go there is something to stop you. You will inevitably be devoured by cannibals."

Then the prisoner is ordered to face about, and there before his eyes he sees more than a hundred human heads staring at him. The government has bought these heads from the head hunters of the wilds which lie beyond the prison bounds. They are the heads of those who have gone to make many a cannibal feast.

The new prisoner, often as brave as any man, and usually more reckless than the average human being, finds after this exhibition no inclination to take to the wilderness. Instead, he keeps well inside the prison bounds, and as the weeks go by and shuddering tales of savage massacres and the hideous orgies that follow them are whispered through the prison he finds liberty less dear and becomes less willing to pay its probable cost. The horror of the brooding mountains and the forest paths never trod by the foot of civilized man and haunted by menacing, ghoulish figures takes possession of him and he covers closer and closer in his little place of safety.

The Rev. Dr. Hall joined an expedition into the interior of New Guinea, and he and his party in the course of their wanderings discovered a new tribe of natives whom they named "Ki-Kis," which in the native language means "eat-eat." Dr. Hall believes these natives to be descendants of the Australian aborigines.

"We started at the mouth of the Fly River," said Dr. Hall. "There were three white men and a troop of native soldiers. We embarked in canoes at that point and made half of our journey in that way and the remainder on foot.

"I was extremely fortunate in being permitted to go at all, because the authorities of New Guinea do not permit any one to go into the interior. In that they are very wise, for it would be impossible for them to afford any protection against Weird Tales of a House of Mystery.

IN the little town of Plaza, Ill., there is a house of romance about which as the years go on the tales become more highly colored and are told in more awesome tones. It is a haunted house. Recently the owner, Clayton Kellam, died, and the sentiment of his relatives prevents its being sold or demolished. They have decided to keep it, as its owners did for thirty years, sacred to the tragedy of his life.

It was the house to which Clayton Kellam took his bride and where they lived happily for a time until she became jealous of his brother. Because of that she deserted him and went East to live with her mother. Mr. Kellam boarded up the house and has since made his home with his bachelor brother. Nothing in the house was touched. Even his wife's clothes were left as they were when she went away.

With the passing years the house fell more and more into disrepair. The cracks became so large that persons could look in and see the ravages of time and decay. Kellam would not enter the house and he would permit no one else to go in. Mildew spread unchecked over everything and dust accumulated.

Meanwhile Mrs. Kellam had died and left a fortune to her husband. None of the heirs now cares to be the first to intrude upon the sanctity of the haunted house. Therefore it will continue to stand a monument of a tragedy, the real secret of which has never been revealed.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Singular Advertisement

It Led to a Curious Result.

By RYLAND BELL

When I was graduated from the medical college which made me an M. D. I concluded for the purpose of broadening my ideas to spend a year in travel. Then I would return and begin where I had left off. I have never regretted this resolution. Being an observant man, travel was of great advantage to me, teaching me that all I had learned thus far was not necessarily true, that I had only begun to learn and that if I lived a thousand years I would not know it all.

If there was any one country that interested me most of all it was India. The Hindus seemed to me a unique people. Like other semicivilized races, they have lived for ages in their ruts, while their narrow scope has led them into correspondingly restricted investigations. What European civilization has produced in the way of assistance to live the Indians have brought forth for death. We have discovered a number of antitoxins; they have brought out an innumerable number of poisons.

While in India I gained through a friend admission to the palace of a rajah. He seemed to take a fancy to me, probably because he found in me a good listener. I said nothing except to guide him into channels that interested me. Drugs being in the line of my profession, I was pleased to hear what he had to say about the various Indian concoctions, and these included poisons.

I confess I was surprised to learn of the various substances that will produce death and the knowledge the Indians have acquired in handling them. I was interested in the flower to breathe which is death; in the process of a poison, taking increased doses of which one may become impregnated with it, and would be poisonous to others. But my attention was chiefly arrested by a poison the rajah mentioned which left no trace.

Why was I especially interested in a traceless poison? Because I expected to spend my life in a land where there are, as there must always be, murder and suicide. I knew that as a medical practitioner I would be constantly called upon in such cases, and the words "traceless poison" meant a great deal to me—not that I expected to have anything to do with such a thing, but it at once occurred to me that if a knowledge of it should be common property it would be the chosen instrument of murderers and suicides.

I did not bring home with me a sample of the rajah's traceless poison. Indeed, I was not interested in it for itself. I did not even care whether or not there was such a thing as a traceless poison. But on my return to America I began some experiments concerning the interest that would be taken in procuring it by various persons. I took the precaution to notify the chief of police in the city in which I lived of my intended experiments, and he was much interested in them. Then I wrote my advertisement announcing that a physician whose "sands of life had nearly run out" and who had spent his life investigating the various aids and enemies to human life had succeeded in discovering a poison that left no trace. He had concocted a powder which, if scattered about in places infested by vermin, would destroy them, leaving no odor or other disagreeable consequences.

I was well aware that those who would attempt to buy my powder would do so for other purposes than killing vermin. My advertisement had appeared but once when I received a number of applications for it. Nearly all of the replies were so worded as to conceal the identity of the writers. Some of them gave directions as to sending the powder which were evidently calculated to cover its route to its receiver.

After accumulating a number of replies to my advertisement I took them to the chief of police, who seemed to be able to tell what each writer intended to do with the poison. But this was a simple matter, because whether or not the intention was legitimate could be divined by the care the writer took to conceal his or her identity. The chief desired to investigate a few applications, and I gave them to him. I was not interested in the criminal side of the matter and never took the trouble to ask him for results. I confined myself to the investigation of those from persons who seemed intent on destroying themselves, for in such cases I might save some one whose mind had become disordered either by mental or physical suffering.

I received one advertisement that I puzzled over a great deal. The writer was a woman, and from certain expressions she used I judged that she was young. The chirography, the language used, a certain refinement in her methods of expressing herself, indicated that she was a lady. Even the paper on which she wrote bore a crest. There were but three possible reasons why any one should want my powder—murder, suicide and for the extermination of vermin. The writer of this note could not keep out of it a tinge of melancholy; therefore I argued that she wished it for the purpose of suicide.

I did not get all this information from her reply to my advertisement. I drew the applicant into a correspondence on the subject by telling her that I could not supply the powder without assuring myself that the person receiving it had no intention of injuring any one with it. She wrote me in reply to this that she had not an enemy in the world, adding that she was rather to be pitied than hated. This admission indicated her object.

Pretending to be satisfied that she did not wish the powder for any illegitimate purpose, I wrote her that if she would let me know where I could find her I would take it to her. She made an appointment for a certain day at a certain hour. I was not to leave a message or anything else with one who should admit me unless it was my correspondent; and I would know her by a rose she would carry in her hand.

If I had needed anything to convince me of the refinement of the lady this method by which I might identify her would have served. Besides it was evident that, while she had no intention of using the poison on any other than herself, she did not wish it to fall into other hands, lest it might do damage.

I called at the exact time specified. I found a domicile that could be the home of one of the higher class only. I rang the bell, and in a few moments the door was opened.

I often revert to the moment I first looked on the face and figure which then were before me—a girl not over seventeen, a willowy figure, a face every feature of which was as perfect, it seemed to me, as it could be made, but withal tinged with a distressing melancholy. She held a rose in one hand and extended the other for what I was supposed to have brought her. And yet on seeing a young man of the appearance of one of her own class she seemed surprised.

"May I not come in for a few moments?" I asked. "I need to give you some directions as to the use of the powder."

She closed the door and led me to a little reception room beside it. She did not ask me to be seated, evidently desiring to secure what I had agreed to bring and have it over with. Nevertheless I looked at a chair and said nothing till she indicated that I might use it, and she sank into one herself. Then I said:

"Perhaps you inferred from my advertising that I am a quack, but I assure you I am a recent graduate of a first class medical college. After graduating I went to India, where I procured the drug of which I have been writing you. Its effect depends on the quantity taken, just as a cup of coffee will make a person nervous, while a very small quantity will induce sleep."

She looked at me in a melancholy dream, and I saw that she had not taken in what I said. I had brought a small box of a harmless powder with me and drew it from the bag of medicines I carried with me.

"This powder," I said, "if taken in large quantity will kill; if taken in small doses it is a very remarkable remedy, a remedy that is not generally known in this country. I got it in India; could get only a limited quantity, and so decided in its effect that I never give it without knowing all about the requirements of the person who uses it."

"I do not require a remedy. I require"—

"Pardon me; you do require a remedy."

"I have taken remedies till I am tired of them. They do me no good."

"Perhaps this one will. But, as to that, I cannot tell without knowing your symptoms."

I had a hard struggle, but in time gained such information concerning her case as I required and was convinced that she was suffering from a nervous condition that had brought on temporary melancholia. She needed a bracing atmosphere and to be convinced that there was really nothing the matter with her.

"This medicine of mine," I told her, "has some very singular features connected with it. In addition to what I have said about it as a curative, it needs to be taken on an elevation. It is just the season for visiting the mountains. Go there and take a box of my medicine with you. I will make it up into small doses such as you need. Take one of these doses each day, and I guarantee you that within a month you will be as well as ever."

She seemed to be encouraged. I knew that all depended upon my reaching her family, but not through her directly. I left her to think over what I had said, took her name and the same day called on her father at his office. When I told him that his daughter had been trying to use me to help her commit suicide and at the same time cause her family to believe that she had died a natural death he shuddered. Since I had probably saved her—thus far, at least—from taking her life, I found him quite willing to listen to what I had to say about the case. I convinced him that it would be well to try my prescription, and we laid a plan by which a trial was brought about. I arranged with the young lady to see her occasionally, pretending to be a stranger to those of her family who were with her, having a secret understanding with them on the subject. I made a number of such visits, and at every one I found my patient improved. Indeed, I flatter myself that my presence was more effective than my medicine, though the main curative was the mountain air, which I have found very beneficial in similar cases.

The interest in my story for myself is that it has been begun and ended for a purpose, that purpose being to tell how I met, wooed and won my wife.

One of the replies to my advertisement that I turned over to the chief of police prevented a murder.

LITTLE FELLOW TOOK SICK WITH DIARRHOEA

Was 30 Miles From a Doctor

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry Cured Him

Mrs. Fred Schoepp, Peasant, Sask., writes: "I used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry when my boy was not expected to live. We were 30 miles from a doctor when the little fellow took sick with diarrhoea. He at first would sleep all day, and at night would be in pain, and would have a passage every five or ten minutes. This went on day and night until he began to pass blood. I gave him the "Dr. Fowler's Extract" and after he had taken it for a short time he was relieved and up and playing with his toys, and is now as well as ever."

There are a number of preparations on the market to-day, claiming the same curative powers as "Dr. Fowler's," and also called similar names, so as to fool the public into thinking they are getting the genuine.

There is nothing that can take the place of "Dr. Fowler's."

There is nothing "Just as Good."

Mansion House Funds.

Mansion House funds in London are not opened without a good deal of serious thought. It would never do to make such appeals to the people upon what one may call "ordinary" occasions of national misfortune. The Transvaal War Fund, which resulted in the colossal sum of $6,659,300 being available for distribution among sufferers, marked an occasion of which there could be no doubt. The response to the appeal alone proved this. It was the same with the Indian Famine Relief funds in 1870, 1897, and 1900. The three realized in all $5,165,000. Besides this the Titanic Fund seems small, the total handed to the trustees being $2,066,060.—Manchester Evening News.

On the Advice of His Doctor

He Used Dr. Chase's Ointment for Protruding Piles With Splendid Results.

Too often a doctor can only think of an operation when asked for a treatment for piles. Some are sufficiently broad-minded to use the most effective treatment available, which is undoubtedly Dr. Chase's Ointment, as was proved in the case referred to in this letter.

Mr. Simon E. Jones, Railway street, Inverness, N. S., writes: "I have found Dr. Chase's Ointment the best treatment obtainable for protruding piles. For three years I suffered from piles, and was advised by a local physician to try Dr. Chase's Ointment. I had tried many treatments in vain, and therefore know which is the best. I can highly recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment, and you are at liberty to use this statement."

The record of cures of every form of piles which stands behind Dr. Chase's Ointment is the strongest guarantee you can have that it will promptly relieve and cure this ailment, even in the most aggravated form. 60c a box, all dealers.

Passing of Sailing Ship.

The secretary of Lloyd's in London announces that in future the special sign (s.) to denote steamers will be discontinued in Lloyd's announcements and publications. The names of steamers will be shown without any distinguishing mark following, but the names of sailing vessels will be indicated by the sign (s. v.).

It is estimated roughly that steamship movements represent about 75 per cent. of the total movements of vessels, the remaining 25 per cent. being accounted for by sailing ships. Every year the number of large sailing ships decreases, for many are wrecked but few are built. The number of motor ships, which are indicated by the sign (m.s.) do not yet represent a notable proportion of the total movements.

While "s.s.," meaning originally "screw steamer," is now out of date, such signs as "tw.-sc." (twin-screw), and "qr.-sc." (quadruple-screw) are very useful guides.

So would be a sign to indicate vessels driven by turbine machinery.

Their Brand of Pride.

To a millionaire who had started life as a poor apprentice a friend said, "Your women folk must be proud of you, since you are self made."

"Yes," he answered grimly; "yes, they're about as proud of me as they'd be of a homemade dress."

Mahomet and the Mountain.

The mountain would not go to him, so Mahomet had to go to the mountain.

Trade is a mountain full of gold and treasure, but it will not come to the merchant who sits and waits for it. He must go to the mountain and when he gets there, he must dig for the treasure and work both to obtain and to hold it.

Advertising, intelligently handled, is the best means to get to the mountain, to unearth the treasure and to hold it, and newspaper advertising is the best and by far the cheapest when results are considered.

History as She Is Wrote.

A text book of history, written by one Ilajavski, for Russian schools, contains some extraordinary statements, among them these, which the London Star translates:

"Louis XVI. was a peaceable and gentle monarch, who, in the course of his long reign, showed himself particularly skillful in finding expert ministers of finance. Loved and honored by his people, the aged monarch died suddenly after a glorious reign as the result of a fit of apoplexy. He was succeeded by his son, Louis XVII., who was obliged to conduct several wars, wherein the captain of his hosts, the royal marshal, Napoleon Bonaparte, conquered a great part of Europe for his king. Napoleon, however, abused his power and made a public attempt to rebel against his liege lord and to compass his own ambitious ends. Under the leadership of Alexander I., king and autocrat of all the Russias, the general was deposed, deprived of all his honors and dignities and all claims to position. He was banished to St. Helena."

Origin of London Names.

How many know that Piccadilly, or a considerable slice of it, was, originally, known as Portugal street? And the Portuguese Princess, Catherine of Braganza, Charles II.'s queen, after whom it was named, in like manner was honored in the Catherine street, near by, which today is clubland and Pall Mall.

URIC ACID SUFFERING

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

First Omnibus.

"Omnibus" was an almost brand new word in its modern sense when Shillibeer took it from the French in 1829, and in France the name possessed a special significance for those who knew their history, for from 1662 to 1676 Paris had already seen a regular service of roomy public vehicles, "carosses a cinq sous." Only these predecessors of the modern bus were not "omnibus"—for all. The letters patent which instituted them for the benefit of middle class people laid down that they were not to be used by soldiers, lackeys or any other wearers of livery or artisans and laborers. These exclusive vehicles faded out of existence, and the new ones, which were started in Paris in 1828, were named "omnibus" expressly to signify their democratic character.—London Chronicle.

Crockett Wouldn't Have Maggie.

The first school the late S. R. Crockett attended was the Free Church school in the village of Laurieston, of that parish, distant three miles from his home. When he was a very wee chap "Sam" used to be accompanied to school by Maggie—a girl somewhat older than himself, who was supposed to look after him. Their daily appearance together led one of the villagers to say to him one day as the couple passed her door: "Man, Sam, I think ye'll be mairryin' Maggie some day; ye're aye thegither." "Mairry Maggie —," was the indignant boy's response. "She disna ken the names o' the kings o' Isreal yet!" The lady whose suggestion to the future novelist was so contemptuously received often recalled the incident with amusement.—Westminster Gazette.

Yellow Fever on the Amazon.

Iquitos is a town on the Amazon river within four degrees of the equator. An equatorial swamp not only surrounds the place, but thrusts invading swales into the city itself. Open sewers run the length of the principal streets, which are quite innocent of paving. Yet an American surgeon, loaned from the public health service and loyally supported by the Peruvian government of the place, has driven out yellow fever even under such disadvantages as these and reduced the general death rate from forty-nine per thousand per year to twenty-eight. In the face of such an achievement, what excuse has any American city for harboring preventable disease?—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Haggis as the Scotch Make It.

To make haggis take the heart, tongue and small liver of the sheep, one pound of bacon, four ounces of crumbs of bread, the rind of one lemon, two eggs, two anchovies (sardines may be used), a quarter of a teaspoonful of pepper and two teaspoonfuls of salt. Chop the heart, tongue, liver and bacon, mix thoroughly, add the bread-crumbs, the anchovies, chopped fine; the lemon rind, grated; then the pepper and salt. Beat the eggs and pour them over. Pack this into a kettle or mold, cover and boil or steam continuously for two hours. Turn it on a dish and serve very hot.

How to Lose Your Tan, Freckles or Wrinkles

A day's motoring, an afternoon on the tennis ground or golf links, a sunbath or the result of exposure on a sea trip, often brings on a deep tan or vivid crimson or, more perplexing still, a vigorous crop of freckles. A very necessary thing then is mercolized wax, which removes tan, redness or freckles quite easily. It literally peels off the affected skin—just a little at a time, so there's no hurt or injury. As the skin comes off in almost invisible flaky particles, no trace of the treatment is shown. Get an ounce of mercolized wax at your druggist's and use this nightly as you would cold cream, washing it off mornings. In a week or so you will have an entirely new skin, beautifully clear, transparent and of a most delicate whiteness.

Wrinkles, so apt to form at this season, may be easily and quickly removed by bathing the face in a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in witch hazel, 1-2 pt. This is not only a valuable astringent, but has a beneficial tonic effect also.

MERSEY'S STRUGGLES.

Stories About President of Empress Wreck Commission.

In many ways the life of Lord Mersey, the famous judge who is one of the three members of the Court of Inquiry which has been investigating the loss of the Empress of Ireland, has been an eventful one. The son of a Liverpool merchant, he was at first intended for a commercial life, and spent five years on the Liverpool Exchange.

Then, to quote his own words: "When I was twenty-six years of age, I made up my mind to go away and try my fortune elsewhere. But the start was far from encouraging. I came up to London with a letter of introduction to Mr. Charles Russell, afterwards Lord Russell of Killowen, who, when he read it, turned round and said, 'What on earth induced you to think of going to the Bar?'

"However, he was good enough to say immediately afterwards, 'Come and dine with me to-night.' I went and dined with him, and I can say of him that, although his manners were rough, and although at times, perhaps, one was not pleased with what he did, he was a good friend to me."

For a time, however, the future Lord Mersey—he was plain Mr. Bigham then—did not find much profit in the law, and he has told how the first year he was at the Bar he made only seven guineas. "The second year, I think, I made seventy, the third about $700, and the fourth about $2,000." And then he went on to prosperity.

Undoubtedly Lord Mersey's success was due not a little to his wonderful energy. Few lawyers, indeed, have lived a more strenuous life. "I used to start work at four o'clock in the morning," he once said, "and go on till eight, breakfast, and then go to the Temple at 9.30 or 10, where I worked until six; and then after six I did nothing. Such was my program for twenty-seven years."

Apart, however, from his wonderful legal knowledge, which has won for him such a great reputation in the Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court, Lord Mersey is known as one of the quickest and most fearless of judges. There is a story told of one occasion when Lord Mersey, then one of the busiest advocates in the Common Law Courts, waited twenty-five minutes for a certain judge, distinguished among other things for his unpunctuality. Having a second case to attend to in another court, Lord Mersey went out to see how it was faring, and while he was away the unpunctual judge made his appearance on the Bench.

"I have waited five minutes for you, Mr. Bigham!" exclaimed the judge, impatiently, when the busy counsel returned.

"My lord," was the bold reply, "I waited five times as long."

Ages of European Sovereigns.

King George, whose fourth accession day brought him many congratulations, is still young as Kings of England go, having only just celebrated his forty-eighth birthday, and from the actuarial standpoint his "expectations of life" may be regarded as very good. Without exception, his Hanoverian predecessors lived to a good age. Indeed, it is necessary to go back to Mary, the Consort of William III., to find an English sovereign who did not live to be at least fifty.

Among European monarchs King George is younger than the Emperor of Austria, the Kings of Roumania, Montenegro, Servia, Wurtemberg, Bavaria, Sweden, the German Emperor, and the King of Saxony, who is his senior by only nine days.

Those who are younger than His Majesty number seven, and are the Czar, who is all but three years younger; the Kings of Italy, Denmark, and Norway; the King of the Belgians, Queen Wilhelmina of Holland, and the King of Spain.—Westminster Gazette.

A Scene Not in a Play.

An extraordinary scene took place in the Princess theater, London, on the night of the first production of Charles Reade's great play, "Never Too Late to Mend," Oct. 4, 1865. During the prison scene a large quantity of water was thrown over Miss Moore, who took the part of Josepha, the character done to death by the warders. One of the critics, Mr. Tomlin of the Morning Advertiser, rose from his seat and publicly protested against the unnecessary cruelty. This aroused almost a riot among the audience, and the action of the play was stopped for some considerable time. Fuel was added to the fire by George Vining, the lessee of the theater, who was playing the part of Tom Robinson and who made a most imprudent speech, in which he practically insulted every critic present, with the result that the theater was left severely alone by the press for many months. The play, however, turned out to be a popular success and had, for those days, the phenomenal run of 140 performances.

Trapped by Its Portrait.

If an old English writer be true in his observations the pheasant must be a very simple bird, for he declares that it puts its head in the ground and thinks that all its body is then hidden. The same author says that it was also captured by another curious plan. A picture of the bird was painted on cloth and then placed in a spot where it was sure of being seen. By and by a silly pheasant coming along catches sight of the portrait and goes up to have a close view of the new neighbor. While engaged in inspecting the canvas the fowler draws near from behind and throws his net over the unwary art student.

Where the Road Is Water.

Writing of a tour of Holland, Arnold Bennett in the Century says:

"After a few weeks I began to perceive that Schiedam and similar places, though thrilling, were not the whole of Holland and perhaps not the most representative of Holland. As the yacht worked northward Holland seemed to grow more Dutch until in the chain of shallow lakes and channels that hold Friesland in a sort of permanent baptism we came to what was for me the ideal or celestial Holland—everything done by water, even grass cut under water, and black and white cows milked in the midst of ponds and windmills over the eternal flatness used exclusively to shift inconvenient water from one level to another. The road is water in Friesland, and all the world is on the road. If your approach to a town is made perilous by a succession of barges that will obstinately keep the middle of the channel you know that it is market day in that town and the farmers are rolling home in agreeable inebriation."

Locating a Broken Wire.

When a telegraph wire is broken or damaged, say, several hundred miles away, how does the operator, sitting in his office, know exactly where the accident occurred?

The explanation is simple. It requires, as every one knows, considerable force to send electricity through a wire. The longer the wire the greater, of course, must be the force required. This force is measured in units, called by electricians "ohms." Let us suppose that a wire between a New York office and a point 150 miles away has broken somewhere. The telegrapher knows that when the wire was intact there were required, say, 2,100 ohms to facilitate the current, or fourteen ohms to the mile. He now finds that he can send a current with only 700 ohms. Dividing 700 by 14, he finds that the break in the wire is fifty miles from his end.—New York Tribune.

A Good Sign.

In digging out an apothecary's shop in Pompeii the workmen brought to light a notice that confronted visitors to the place 2,000 years ago: "Otiosis non est locus; discede, morator." It is a good sign for the modern office or place of business. Callers who know Latin will read it for themselves. Those who do not will ask what it means. Then comes your opportunity. "This is no place for idlers. Loafers get out!"

Good Advice.

"Opportunity has never knocked at my door."

"Then why don't you pay the first call? Go and knock at its door and walk right in if the door isn't answered immediately."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Often the Case.

"My wife believes that what is to be will be."

"Well?"

"And she believes it will all be my fault."—Kansas City Journal.

Great Britain Has An Ultimatum to Germany

COL. CLEGG'S STATEMENT

Commanding Officer of the 57th Regiment Replies to Query of Montreal Star

OFFER ALL RESOURCES

Peterborough, Ont.

To the Editor of The Montreal Star:

Should the present crisis involve Great Britain in war, which would be the greatest European war that has ever taken place, I would consider the situation so grave and the necessity of supporting the Empires' forces that they may not suffer defeat so urgent that Parliament should offer all the men and resources at our disposal, should the War Office so intimate, and it would be the duty of all Canadians to assist loyally in carrying out such measures. I do not think that the great majority of the people fully realize the results that would follow should the arms of the Triple Entente meet with reverses, and it appears to me that it would be the duty of all leaders to impress the gravity of the situation on the public.

GERMANY DECLARES WAR ON BELGIUM

Officially Announced at the Foreign Office To-day---Announcement is Accepted as Foreshadowing a Declaration by Great Britain.

LORD MORLEY TO RESIGN

LONDON, Aug. 4.—(Special Cable.)—With the resignation this morning of Lord Morley, closely following that of John Burns last night, the British Cabinet has been cleared of the ministers not favourable to the war policy plainly enunciated by Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Minister, in the House of Commons. It is expected that Premier Asquith will speak immediately on the reassembling of Parliament at five o'clock this afternoon, London time. Crowds are already thronging the streets and public offices eager for news of war with Germany. The Admiralty will give out no news of the supposed battle off the Yorkshire coast between French and German squadrons. France and Russia are credited with several minor successes against the Germans in skirmishing this morning but all reports are so rigidly censored that very little authentic information is available.

AMERICANS CAN'T LEAVE

CITY'S HYDRO SOON A FACT

Judge Huycke Will Hear Petition for Possession on August 15th

OWNERSHIP IN SIGHT

A motion has been launched in the County Court for the possession of the property of the Peterborough Light and Power Company by the City of Peterborough. The motion is to be heard before His Honour Judge Huycke on August 15th, and before that date the city will have paid into Court the sum of $100,000. As all the conditions of the ruling of the Hydro-Electric Commission have been satisfied by both the city and the company, very little delay is anticipated in the city's taking over the local power plant. The city authorities said to The Examiner this morning that they thought that by the first of September the Peterborough Light and Power Company's system in this city will have become the property of the city, and be under the control of the Utilities Commission, and the manager, Mr. House. The amount ($100,000), which the city has to pay into Court to the company was fixed by the Hydro Commission after an inspection of the list of the company's property.

To Start Paving Next Thursday

Messrs. Foley and Gleeson to Start Day After To-morrow on East Part of Charlotte Street

If nothing unforeseen occurs the paving of the central streets of the city will be resumed on Thursday next by Messrs. Foley and Gleeson. Mr. Davis, representing that company, was in the city yesterday and conferred with the City Engineer and other local officials in connection with the matter. As a result Charlotte street, between George and Water streets will, it is planned, be in the hands of the paving company the day after to-morrow.

To The Examiner this morning the City Engineer said that after the eastern portion of Charlotte street is paved, Water street will next be the seat of operations, and after the section of that thoroughfare is, finished, Simcoe, Hunter and Brock streets, East of George, will follow. Then Aylmer street will be paved south to Charlotte street, and the cross streets will then be attacked. So while the din of powder and ball is echoing in Europe, the din of the cement mixer will likely be ringing through the streets of Peterborough. The paving programme is expected to be completed well before fall.

Half Holiday For The City Officials

Provided Firemen and Policemen Are Left in Sufficient Force to Guard the City

An application from Messrs. T. Q. Quartermaine and T.A.S. Hay, was read at last night's Council meeting, asking that the City Officials be given a half holiday sometime in the near future when it was planned to hold an excursion, in all probability down the river. On the motion of Aldermen Duncan and Anderson the permission for the City Officials to have the half holiday was granted, provided there were enough policemen and firemen left in the city to grapple with any emergency that might arise.

Alderman Green nearly broke up the picnic by stating that he for one would not be a party to crippling the fire brigade for a half day. The Mayor and others reassured the Chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee that nothing of that nature was under consideration, whereupon he subsided into a silence which bespoke consent. So the motion to grant the half holiday was practically unanimous.

DECLARATION OF WAR AGAIN POSTPONED

Premier Simply Stated That Germany Had Once More Violated the Neutrality of Belgium Which Britain Took as Practical Declaration of War Against Belgium.

London, Eng., Aug. 4---Special Cable---Great Britain, Europe's arch-angel of Peace, has again postponed the apparently inevitable Declaration of War with Germany. In the Commons this afternoon, Premier Asquith, rising amid tremendous cheering from both sides of the House, simply stated that Germany had again violated the neutrality of Belgium, which Britain took as a practical Declaration of War against Belgium.

Asquith's statement was lacking in definiteness and the War Party angrily wanted to know what Britain was going to do about it. This question remained unanswered, but from other sources it was understood that Britain had given Germany till to-night to satisfactorily guarantee Belgium's neutrality in war.

UNITED STATES NEUTRAL!

Washington, D. C., Aug. 4---President Wilson this morning signed a proclamation of United States' neutrality in connection with European War.

Claim For $40 Against the City

Messrs. O'Connell and Corbett Write Council on Behalf of Mrs. Thompson, of This City

At last night's Council meeting a letter was read from the firm of O'Connell and Corbett, enclosing notice of accident whereby Mary Ann Thompson, on July 9th sustained a severe sprain of the foot while walking on Simcoe street. The letter claimed that Mrs. Thompson was confined to her bed for a week, and would likely be disabled for some time to come. On behalf of their client Messrs. O'Connell and Corbett claimed the sum of $40, as compensation for these injuries. As to the cause of the accident to Mrs. Welsh, recently (which was settled for $40), this accident, it is alleged, is due to one part of the sidewalk projecting above the rest.—Referred to the Finance Committee.

Far-Reaching Effects of The War in Europe

Though the outbreak of Armageddon in Europe may not physically affect Canada; while the sound of a firearm or the brandish of a weapon may not have to be feared, yet perhaps many of the humblest homes in Peterborough will be affected. It is not only certain that the cost of living will be advanced, but there is a probability that the money of the wage earner wil be wanting.

This may easily come about through the conditions created by the restriction of credits by the banks. A local contractor informed the Examiner at noon that this morning he approached one of the banks with the suggestion of accommodation to enable him to pay wages that would not be covered by the advances by his clients on progress estimates. He was informed that he could not get five dollars beyond the amount to the credit of his deposits. He was told that the Banks had received instructions to decline loans and refuse over-draughts.

It can easily be seen how this condition will not only interfere with general business, but with many specific enterprises. If contractors and other employers of labour cannot secure money to pay wages, it will mean in many cases that wages will not be offered or employment given.

Those responsible for the inception of the war have a heavy responsibility to answer to; and Great Britain and her rulers are to be applauded for exhausting every means to avoid an universal European war. The jingoes may cry for war, but the world, the every-day world, the people who toil and keep the world moving in the grooves of peace, don't want war. They are sure to be the sufferers and hardly any one in the civilized world can and will escape being injuriously affected by a war even three thousand miles away. This consideration points to the most conservative line of expenditure, the necessity of husbanding individual resources with the greatest care.

THE SINEWS OF WAR.

Great Britain may not excel in war battalions; her strength is in her battle ships and her bullion. Germany, France and Russia have grown apparently strong by war. Britain has grown great, the empire has grown great by industry and peace. Whatever place Britain and the Empire will have in the struggle, it will not be that of a decaying nation. Napoleon the great said that armies marched on their stomachs; if this war lasts long, if the expected happens and if the navies of Britain and the allied powers can confine the struggle to land; can as they will probably do, prevent food supplies from reaching Germany and Austria from outside countries at peace and producing, their armies, before long, won't do much marching on full stomachs. Britain's great wealth — she is the money power of the world— will be one of her strongest assets. And money will be needed; war is a mighty costly game. Dr. Richet, the noted statistician of the University of Paris, estimates that a general war like the present threatens to become, will cost the various contending powers 54 million dollars per day. If the war only lasts as long as the Franco-Prussian war of 1870, the total will be 5,000 million dollars. This is about equal to the total of the trade of Great Britain for one year. Whatever other nations may suffer in regard to finance, Great Britain will have abundance of the greatest factor in war—the sinews of war—money.

CANADA'S SHARE.

The slaughter of soldiers on the field of battle, the wreckage of everything within the zone of conflict, are not the only losses of a war of the tremendous magnitude of that now in the making, if not already practically begun. With certainly five of the greatest world powers engaged, all trade and business, and to some extent social relations with the rest of the world awry, there can only be universal disjointing of normal conditions. The great powers, especially those invaded, will cease to be productive. They will neither grow nor manufacture—neither sow nor reap—they will only consume and destroy more than they consume. There will be practical paralysis of commerce, financial stringency, universal unrest, and inconvenience.

It is not probable that Canada will run any risk of actual invasive disturbance. It is hardly possible that an invading army will land on our shores. Even if this should happen it would only be a raid, not an invasion. Any European country hostile to Canada as a part of the Empire, will have enough to do at home to keep it busy. And the British navy will keep them busy on the seas. Unfortunately for lack of Canadian cruisers Canada is not in a position to protect our shores from even raids. It is too late now to lament the reversal of a policy that would have afforded this protection. We must do our best now. We are one and all ready to do the thing that is needed in the way of defence, and if needed, of attack. Our little standing army and our militia are ready to enter active service for the protection of the Empire, whether at home or abroad. Canadians of all creeds and parties and nationalities, are of one mind. Quebec and Ontario volunteer regiments are rivals in offering service. This is not the only sacrifice Canadians will be called upon to make. There will be a higher cost of living. There will be depression in business; but these are inevitable conditions of a state of war, especially a war world-wide in its sweep of effect.

Fortunately in Canada we are in a position to implement our share of assistance in the struggle. The banks never had a better store of money than now. Better than all Canada is ready in spirit to do her best. And we have reason to feel that a higher power than armies and navies will stand the friends of the cause that Britain and the Empire represent. Buonaparte sneeringly said that Providence is on the side of the big battalions. But his dictum was discredited and he went down in ruin. The cause that Britain represents, the cause below all this struggle, the real bone of contention, is human freedom, human enfranchisement and enlightenment, and the interests of the highest forms of human progress; and Providence may be looked to favour His own. The fate of nations is in His hands.

JUST A SPRIG OF MOUNTAIN HEATHER

Canadian Heather, Growing in Canadian Rockies Mile and a Half Above the Sea—Another Sprig to the Bouquet of Attractions of Canadian National Park

An unusual Government publication has recently been issued by the Dominion Parks Branch of the Department of the Interior. It consists of a small souvenir booklet artistically bound in duplex leather wild grass paper and tied with an olive green silk cord. The lettering is embossed in gold and a very unique design has been chosen for the cover. The latter is cut out so as to form a sort of frame and in this is inset a spray of Canadiana Heather from the Rocky Mountains Park, the purplish flowers of the heather against the wood-brown background making a very attractive colour combination. The matter is set up in 10-point Scalon Old Style type and the booklet is illustrated throughout with vignettes of scenes in the Banff and Yoho Parks printed in golden olive by the offset method. By this method, which has so far been but little used in Canada, the difficulty which formerly existed in printing halftones on anything but smooth-faced paper has been overcome. The process involves taking an impression from the plate on a cylinder covered with a rubber blanket and then transferring or offsetting it to the paper which is carried round a third cylinder.

It will no doubt be a matter of surprise to many to learn that Canada possesses a heather of her own. This plant is not, as it has sometimes been called, a "poor relation" of the Scotch heather, but has a family connection and standing of its own well recognized by botanists, and is nearly allied to the Heath of the British Isles. The booklet gives an interesting account of the locality from which the souvenir was gathered, Simpson pass, a mile and a half above he sea, and is another element in interesting Canadians and tourists in the world at large in the potentialities of Canada, systems of National Parks.

Their commercial potentialities are somewhat startling. It is pointed out that owing to the increasing modern taste for travel, striking scenery has become one of the most valuable sources of revenue a nation can possess. The tourist revenue of Switzerland per year is placed at 180 million dollars, that of France of 600 millions, that of Italy at over 100 millions. The sum which Americans annually spend abroad is estimated at the enormous total of five hundred million dollars. It would appear, therefore, that the creation of national parks, which are one of the best means of attracting and providing for tourist travel, may well be considered as it is now being considered in the United States, as a "solid business proposition."

It is on other grounds than the commercial, however, that the Parks lay claim to recognition. Chief of these is an aid to producing efficient citizens. These great natural reserves are reservoirs of vitality to the race. As an antidote to the ills of overcivilization for life in the wilderness and the best sort of recreation where fresh air, sunshine and beautiful natural scenery are combined. The problem of the preservation of the vitality of the race is admitted by all conservationists today, to be the first of all conservation problems, and the value of parks, playgrounds and recreation in this respect is each year being given a larger place.

The educational and patriotic influence of the Parks is also touched upon as well as the work which the Dominion Parks Branch is doing in the preservation of native wild life in connection with the buffalo, elk, antelope, etc., as well as bird life. There is also pointed out the need for the creation of Historic Parks as a means of preservation for our historic sites, many of which we are allowing to disappear.

A new line of development which is worthy of consideration, is suggested, viz.: the provision of national parks near our congested centres of population. All modern town planning makes provision for parks and playgrounds within the city itself, but while these are useful and necessary they provide a means of recreation for a few hours at the most. The national parks would reserve large areas where people would be free to go for as long as they desired. Such parks would be, in reality, 'people's estates' and would afford to the ordinary citizen many of the advantages which the man of wealth possesses in his country estate. In the words of the booklet they would be "places where the poor could get a summer cottage or camp site for a nominal rental, where boys and men could camp and fish and study nature, where the sick and delicate could find new stores of health in the great out-of-doors, by right of citizenship, without leave or hindrance of anyone."

There is still within easy reach of many of our large cities, land available for such a purpose which is either public domain or procurable a low cost. It would seem worth while considering the advice given by Ambassador Bryce in Ottawa, before his return to England, namely, that the time to set aside public domain for the future needs of the people is now, not when the encroachments of civilization have rendered this almost impossible.

HOW ROBLIN WINS SEATS.

The outcome of the election in Le Pas is a sensational surprise. Mr. Carrier, the Liberal candidate, has resigned and left the country, and the Government candidate has been elected by acclamation. Probably the Roblin Government decided that it would be cheaper and less troublesome to win the constituency in this way than to fight for it. Many will be curious to know what Carrier carried when he left.—Hamilton Herald.

SOUTH AFRICA LOYAL.

New Union Has a Glorious Problem of Her Own.

CAPE TOWN, South Africa, Aug. 4.—The Cape Town Union says: "We would demand the immediate mobilization of a defence force of 30,000 if Britain were involved and doing her utmost in these interests of the Empire. The South African position differs from that of the other dominions. We have four million natives to consider, also the German territory on our borders. The South African gold question is vitally important to the Empire. It is considered in official circles that it may be advisable to retain the gold in South Africa until the seas are cleared. Canada's and New Zealand's action is heartily approved by the press.

GERMANS ARE STILL ADVANCING TROOPS

Forces Are Being Rushed into Luxemburg While Antwerp is in a State of Siege.

IN AGONY OF SUSPENSE

BRUSSELS, Aug. 4. — At four o'clock yesterday afternoon the Germans were still pouring troops into Luxemburg. A force of 100,000 is already massed along the Belgian frontier opposite Elsant. An unconfirmed report was received that the Germans are massing another army on the frontier of Limburg.

May Cut Off Paris-Calais Route.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The dominant idea of Belgian mobilization is that Germany will attempt to force a passage across the narrow neck of Belgian territory below Liege and Namur, the main route from Cologne and Aix-la-Chapelle into northern France above Rheims. To capture this route southward would mean the cutting off of the Paris and Calais route from the main French forces.

Antwerp in State of Siege.

ANTWERP, Aug. 4. — All telephonic and telegraphic communications with the interior are stopped except for war purposes, and all messages are censored. There is no confirmation of the engagement between the French and Germans at Nancy. Tidings of the occupation by the German troops of the Duchy of Luxemburg and of their crossing the frontier into Belgium were received here in an agony of suspense, but with undinching courage and calm. Business is at a complete standstill, and all the large shops and offices are shut. In every public place notices are posted, signed by the Burgomaster, declaring that Antwerp is in a state of siege and appealing to his fellow-citizens to preserve order. There are no signs of panic, though every family has the flower of its manhood at the front.

Germans Take Polish City.

BERLIN, Aug. 4. — The German border troops from Lebljaffa, Silesia, yesterday, after a short skirmish with Russians, took possession of Czenstochowa, Russian Poland.

Bensin and Kalisz, Russian Poland, also have been occupied by the Germans.

The Germans completely surprised the garrison at Czenstochowa, and before the Russians realized what was at hand, they had been almost completely surrounded. The German artillery shelled the fortifications sharply, after which the cavalry and mounted infantry charged and soon were in complete possession.

Germany Bombards Libau.

BERLIN, via Brussels, Aug. 4.—The small cruiser Augsburg has sent the following report to Berlin by wireless:—

"Am bombarding the naval harbor at Libau, and am engaged with the enemy's cruiser. The naval port of Libau is in flames."

Libau is one of the principal seaports of Russia, and is located on the Baltic Sea one hundred miles or more north of the German coast.

It is fortified and is used as an arsenal by the navy.

The German protected cruiser Augsburg is of 4,280 tons displacement, and her chief armament consists of twelve 4.1 inch guns. Her crew aggregates about 400 men.

No Naval Engagement.

BERLIN, Aug. 4.—The report circulated in London yesterday that there had been a naval engagement in the North Sea between British and German warships is untrue.

Aviators Fight In Mid-Air.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The Standard says: "In the engagement between French and German troops yesterday near Longwy, a German aeroplane was noticed making observations of the French position, when a French aviator made an ascent, flew about the German aeroplane and descended to the level behind him.

The French aviator shot the German airman with a pistol injuring him and causing him to lose control of his machine, which fell to the ground from a height of 300 feet and was destroyed. The German aviator was killed by the fall."

Tried to Poison Wells.

LONDON, Aug. 4. — Telegrams from the chief of the German general staff received at the German embassy here assert that a French doctor, with two assistants, tried to poison the wells near Metz, with cholera microbes. The three were captured by the Germans and then shot.

South Africa With Britain.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 4.—That Holland is in the midst of war is very evident here. On all sides there are signs of military preparations. The mobilization order by Queen Wilhelmina was so readily answered that the operation was soon completed. The peaceful streets of sleepy Dutch cities present an unwonted aspect. Troops are constantly moving and are being lodged in the public buildings. The mobilization decree caused a panic among the poorer classes, and there was a frantic run on savings banks; crowds besieged the shops for food supplies and the excitement increased when the post-offices, railway and commercial houses refused to give coin for notes.

Bonaparte Offers To Fight.

PARIS, Aug. 4. — Prince Roland Bonaparte, a former lieutenant of infantry in the French army, and a member of the French Institute, who is 56 years of age, offered, in a letter sent to President Poincare yesterday, to serve in the army. Although, he said, he realizes that the law prohibits princes of a family once reigning in France from enlisting.

AN APPEAL FOR HELP.

Belgium's Ruler Calls On Britain For Protection.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The most important feature of the diplomatic situation in Europe yesterday was the appeal of King Albert of Belgium to Britain to preserve the integrity of his kingdom. The message to Britain followed an offer from Germany to Belgium to recognize the latter's neutrality if she would permit the transportation of German troops across her territory. This was firmly refused, and King Albert sent the following telegram to Britain:

KING ALBERT OF BELGIUM.

"Remembering the numerous proofs of Your Majesty's friendship and that of your predecessor, of the friendly attitude of England in 1870, and the proof of the friendship which she has just given us again, I make a supreme appeal to the diplomatic intervention of Your Majesty's Government to safeguard to integrity of Belgium."

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

It was currently reported in London yesterday that Lord Kitchener would be made Minister of War.

The directors of the Liverpool Cotton Association, at a meeting yesterday morning, resolved that the cotton exchange be closed indefinitely.

It is reported that the Constitutionalists are slowly closing in on the capital of Mexico from three points. General Carranza moved southward from Tepeji Del Rio Sunday.

A severe earthquake shock was felt in Kingston, Jamaica, at 6.32 o'clock yesterday morning and caused considerable alarm among the inhabitants. Little damage, however, was reported.

The electors of Belleville yesterday voted upon a bylaw to confirm an agreement between the city and the Trenton Electric and Water Co., for the lighting of the city. The result was a victory for the bylaw.

MOBILIZING IN BERLIN.

City In Active But Little Excitement Prevails.

BERLIN, Aug. 4. — The mobilization of the German army proceeded yesterday with absolute calm. There were few signs in Berlin that anything extraordinary was happening, with the exception of great crowds at the railway stations and the lack of taxi cabs, half of which had been requisitioned by the army authorities. An open air religious service, attended by many soldiers in marching kit, was held yesterday around the Bismarck monument, outside the Imperial Parliament House. All joined in the Lord's Prayer.

A notice was issued by the police stating that the Emperor's strength and time were absorbed by the work imposed on him in this serious hour and that it was not proper for him to be disturbed by popular demonstrations.

In accordance with the imperial constitution the Kings of Bavaria, Saxony and Wuertemberg have placed their armies under the command of Emperor William.

Dutch Freighters May Go To War.

MONTREAL, Aug. 4—Canada may send a fleet to the aid of Great Britain should the Mother Country go to war.

Twelve sturdy freighters of the Canada Steamship Lines, each manned by Canadian seamen and each filled to the brim with over 100,000 bushels of grain from the Canadian west may be Canada's most useful contribution.

James Carruthers, president of the Canada Steamship Lines, said yesterday that the grain freighters might be called into commission for war purposes. This fact has been taken into consideration by the company and the steamships are ready in Canadian ports.

Would Send Money to Americans.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.— Use of a United States warship to carry to Europe $3,500,000 in gold for the relief of stranded American tourists was proposed by New York bankers yesterday, and Benjamin Strong, jr., president of the Bankers' Trust Co., left for Washington to make the suggestion to President Wilson.

To Assist The Banks

Hon. W. T. White Announces Plans to Meet the Emergency —Will Issue More Notes

CABINET MEETS

OTTAWA, Aug. 4.—After a cabinet meeting last evening, Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, issued the following statement:

"Having regard to the world-wide financial crisis which has developed upon the outbreak of hostilities in Europe, and in view of the action of the Imperial Government for conserving the financial and commercial interests of the United Kingdom, the Minister of Finance announces on behalf of the Dominion Government, that while it is not probable that such action on its part will be required, it stands ready to issue Dominion notes to such amount as may be necessary against securities deposited by the banks and approved by the Minister of Finance."

"The Minister of Finance further announces that the Government has authorized the chartered banks of Canada to make payments in bank notes instead of gold or Dominion notes until further official announcement in that behalf. This action will tend to conserve the Canadian gold supply against demands from foreign sources, a course now being followed by all the leading nations of the world.

"The Minister further announces that the Government has authorized the chartered banks of Canada to issue excess circulation to an amount not exceeding 15 per cent. of their combined, unimpaired, paid-up capital and rest or reserve fund from this date until further official announcement.

"Any necessary special legislation will be obtained at the next session of Parliament.

"The Minister further announces that the Government is prepared, if necessity should arise, to give every other possible assistance in order to prevent any avoidable interruption of stable business conditions, and for this purpose it will not hesitate to use to the fullest extent all existing powers, and to ask further powers from Parliament if that course should seem necessary or expedient.

When the Cabinet rose at 10.40 o'clock last night the Prime Minister stated that he had no further announcement to make. He had received no news from the Imperial Government.

Yesterday was a day of suspense such as the capital had never seen before. The report of Sir Edward Grey's speech in the British Commons was read with profound interest and it was felt that now it was only a matter of a very short time, perhaps only a matter of hours, before Britain would be involved in the great European struggle and Canada's part would be to take her place by Britain's side. There were conferences among the Ministers yesterday morning and the Cabinet met both afternoon and evening. They received copies of all press despatches received by cable during the day.

A number of important steps were taken yesterday in preparation for the impending crisis. These included precautionary measures to protect the financial system of the country, the establishment of a system of censorship, including a chief censor and a representative in each of the cable offices, the placing of the shipping passing up and down the St. Lawrence under military supervision, and the calling for volunteers from ex-navy men to man the cruiser Niobe.

There was a report here last night that the Government was negotiating for the purchase of three Dreadnoughts now being built in British shipyards for Turkey and Chile. They would be ready in six months. Parliament would be called to vote the money to pay for them.

Naval Recruits Wanted.

OTTAWA, Aug. 4.—The Canadian naval service department is looking for recruits for service at Halifax. George J. Desbarats, deputy minister and comptroller of naval service, makes the announcement that the naval service department is prepared to recruit experienced naval men, especially experienced engineroom rating services at Halifax, the men to be enrolled as naval volunteers, and to serve just when called out. The department particularly desires men who have served in the British navy, pensioners or reservists who have not been called by the Admiralty.

Manitoba Offers Men.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 4. — Premier Roblin issued the following statement early yesterday:

"At a meeting at Government House to-night it was decided, in the event of the mother country becoming involved in actual hostilities, to organize and equip a battalion of infantry 10,000 strong, and offer it through the proper channels at Ottawa to the home authorities, as a slight evidence of Manitoba's appreciation of being a part of the British Empire."

Col. Steele, D.O.C. for this district, say: there will be no difficulty in raising 10,000 men from this district alone.

Flour and Sugar Go Up.

MONTREAL, Aug. 4.—Flour and sugar prices have gone up.

A bulletin received yesterday afternoon states that the flour millers have advanced the prices by 30 cents a barrel, owing to the increased demand from wholesalers and retailers. Sugar has made an advance of 10 cents per hundred pounds for the same reason.

Belgium Invade Belgium.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 4.—The French Minister has informed the Belgian Government that three German dirigibles were observed last night flying towards Brussels, have invaded Belgian territory.

GERMAN FLEET WAS EXPECTED AT PORTSMOUTH NEXT WEEK

Letter Written From London on July 23 Was Sent From a Land of Peace.

A London correspondent to the Examiner, writing on July 23, makes the following reference to the expected visit of the German fleet to Portsmouth during the second week of August. A comparison of the anticipated ceremonies with the present situation provides food for thought:

The Third Battle Squadron of the German high seas fleet is to come to Portsmouth in the second week in August to return the visit made by our Second Battle Squadron to Kiel. The German Third Squadron consists of vessels of the Kaiser class; roughly similar to our battleships the Hercules and the Colossus, mounting five turrets with twelve-inch guns apiece. The secondary armament of these ships, however, is heavier than that of our Dreadnoughts. It is some years since the German fleet has visited English waters, and when the last visit took place Plymouth was the port of call. At that time the great development of the German fleet had not taken place, and the battleships which came were much smaller and less powerful than our own. No doubt a good deal of ceremony will attend this coming visit, and the First Fleet, which by that time will have returned from the summer manoeuvres, will be at Portsmouth to receive the visitors.

HUNDRED THOUSAND GERMANS IN PARIS

LONDON, Aug. 3.—A Paris despatch to The Daily Telegraph says that all communication with Germany either by telegraph or railway has ceased, as well as all railway communication with Belgium.

No French train proceeds further than the frontier towards Belgium and Holland. The Germans have blown up the lines at all frontier stations.

No trains are running in Belgium, and more than 100,000 Germans in Paris are anxiously wondering how they are to return home. They seem to have no grasp of their situation, but sit outside the cafes talking German.

HELPFUL HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Instead of using bluing in your rinsing water to whiten clothes, use it in water while boiling them. You will find this whitens them beautifully.

White marks caused by hot dishes etc., upon polished surfaces can be removed by applying a little olive oil and salt over the marks. Leave this on for some time, then remove it and polish.

To wash a bottle or a glass that has contained oil, use very hot coffee grounds. If the glass be badly encrusted, wash it with a mixture of bichromate of potash and sulphuric acid in equal parts, being careful not to get a drop of this upon the fingers.

When using green or red sweet peppers save the seeds, which are in large number inside the shell. Dry these on a plate and put them in a wide-necked bottle. They are delicious for giving a zest to soups, gravies, sauces, salad dressing, and the like.

To prevent table linen from becoming yellow, fold it in an old sheet that has been well used before putting it away.

THE PREPARATIONS FOR WAR IN GREAT BRITAIN

BUSY AT ALDERSHOT

LONDON, Aug. 3—Great Britain's war preparations continue night and day. At Aldershot, the military headquarters, a large number of troop trains are waiting on the sidings with steam up.

The Army Service Corps is working day and night loading baggage, war material, and searchlights blaze over Aldershot camp-to-night.

Great activity prevails at Grimsby, where heavy forces of troops are held in readiness.

Sixty thousand Territorials are now under canvas on their annual fortnight's training.

Another development is the guarding of all waterworks and electric power houses supplying the principal towns. The prospect of food shortage is being discussed everywhere. It is estimated that the present supplies of Great Britain will last for six weeks.

A significant order was issued by the War Office to-day to the effect that sentries shall not be posted alone, but in couples.

BANKERS ARE MEETING.

London is taking the march of events with calm gravity. Wherever two or three men are gathered together the question "When will it be?" is invariably asked, and the invariable answer is "Within the next twenty four hours."

Great crowds thronged the city all day, especially in Throgmorton and Lombard Streets.

A long conference of the principal bankers was held in the Bank of England when the question of the suppension of the Bank Act was again discussed. Confidential instructions were circulated to every bank this morning that no more than five pounds in gold be included in the payment of any cheque presented.

GOLD IS SENT BACK.

Later the news came that four million dollars in gold sent to Dover for shipment to the Continent via Ostend had been stopped and the gold returned to London.

This inspired some cheerfulness, as it marked the beginning of a compulsory check on foreign banks profiting by the situation by taking gold out of this country, as they have power to do by virtue of their existing credit balances.

AN OFFICIAL STATEMENT.

An official statement of the British Government's policy says:

"The policy of Great Britain will not be affected in any way by the announcement that 'Italy has decided to remain neutral on the ground that no casus foderis has arisen for her intervention under the precise terms of the triple alliance.'

"This merely proves how trifling an instrument the treaty is, and Italy will have to settle later on with her own partners as to justification for her action or inaction.

"The French Government has never directly or indirectly been led to believe that Great Britain was pledged to any particular method of discharging her obligations to France, although she will remain strictly to the spirit and letter of the understanding."

TORONTO BROKERS ARE STRONGLY OPPOSED TO TRADING NOW

Suspension of Bank Act in England Will Keep All the Money in the Country.

CANADIAN BANKS SAFE

TORONTO, Aug. 4.—"It will be months before the Canadian people really realise what this means," said a broker yesterday referring to the war probabilities. "As far as brokers are concerned, the only thing to do is to keep down all trading. Already there are some who announce themselves as willing to do business over the counter. They are not brokers. We never saw them before. We literally have had to kick a couple of them out of the office already. To safeguard everyone, all trading must be stopped. The public should co-operate with the brokers in keeping the lid on everything in the form of trading."

"Will the Canadian banks now demand the thirty days' notice for saving deposits that they are entitled to?" he was asked.

"Absolutely nothing has been done yet. We are awaiting definite news. If news comes that Great Britain has declared war, it is very probable that the Bankers' Association will hold a meeting to consider the best steps, but nothing can be said at present."

"How will the suspension of the Bank Act in Britain affect us?"

"I simply means that there will be no financial intercourse between us and them," was the answer. "It is a safeguard to keep all the gold in the country. It is not at all unlikely that in view of the suspension in Britain the Cabinet at Ottawa will pass an order-in-Council to safeguard Canadian gold and suspend legal payments—just as a precaution.

OUR BANKS ARE SAFE.

"The banks are in no danger here. They have a splendid gold reserve, and in addition the provision for additional circulation comes into effect on 4th September, and that is not far distant. Heavy liquidation has put us all into good shape for this appalling disaster.

"If Great Britain keeps out of the struggle, it will mean that the Continent will keep her money on Britain for safety, and Canada would benefit thereby. There are no local developments of any kind so far. We are waiting for further definite news. Immediately any action is taken by the Canadian banks, the press will be informed."

Any letters of credit and travellers' cheques payable in Europe being issued at the present time are at the owner's risk. The banks are assuming no liability.

IMPREGNABLE IN THE U. S.

Brokers' private wires from New York indicate that strong financial interests, with the aid of the Government, are taking every precaution to hold the markets firm on the reopening of the New York Exchange, whenever that may be.

It is believed that the strong reserves of the banks, and the co-operation of the Government with the big interests, will make the financial position of the United States impregnable. Such a bright outlook from the other side of the line should have a beneficial effect in Canada.

WAR CORRESPONDENTS ARE STRIPPED OF PAST GLORIES

LONDON, Aug. 3.—War correspondents who are sent out to various parts of affected Europe, will have their wings clipped. Several representatives of London newspapers were with the Austrian army on the commencement of hostilities, but their experiences were not very desirable.

The Daily Chronicle man lasted for two whole days and was expelled by the Austrian authorities. The Daily Express man is to remain at Athens, owing to the discouraging reports of the difficulties placed in the reporter's way.

The Daily Telegraph's correspondent got as far as Semlin, only to be ordered back to Vienna.

NEWSPAPERS ARE WARY.

Owing to the enormous loss incurred during the late Balkan War, newspapers are hesitating about sending their men to the present field of action. It is highly probable that if even a general war occurs little effort will be made to "cover" it in the usual way.

A censorship has already been placed on newspaper "copy" at Berlin, Vienna, St. Petersburg, and other capitals. Even at the European capitals war correspondents are practically useless. One newspaper proprietor said last night:

"I have a good man in Berlin, but all he has done has been to telegraph for gold."

CONT. HEAVY: RETURNS, NONE.

"I think, generally, the London newspapers will husband their resources for the present."

Another said: "Newspapers that send special correspondents into the field will court bankruptcy. They will spend large sums and get no returns."

It is expected that the moment war becomes a fact, a censorship will be placed upon all messages from Great Britain.

SERVIANS ACTIVE AGAINST AUSTRIA

VIENNA, Aug. 3.—The Militar-ische Rundsch states that serious fighting is in progress on the River Drina.

"Bands of Servian volunteers who are attempting to cross the river are opposed by Austro-Hungarian frontier guards.

The Servians fired on their own river boats, killing and injuring many men.

To give it additional power a new screw driver is provided with two additional detachable handles.

"Fair Play" Makes Plea For Greater Interest In Band

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—In your report of the Band competition, held in Lindsay last Thursday, I would like to make a contradiction which, in fairness to other bands, should have been made by the members of the 57th Band, themselves.

In the first place, Peterborough did not win second place in the competition, as you stated. The result of the competition was: Weston first, ($200); Barrie, second, ($160). There was no third prize.

I was also surprised to see the Band claim any credit for Mr. Hughes' winning of the cornet competition, as he was considered a first-class cornetiste before he became associated with the 57th, having played with some of England's best bands twenty years ago.

I am also given to understand that Mr. Nemmo, who won the trombone competition, was a pupil of Mr. Cronk, who trained him for this competition and neither of these men are members of the Band.

It is a pity that a city of this size does not turn out a better musical organization than that which got beat en by a couple of small town bands. Leaving fourteen members of the Band at home did not disorganize the Band, as they would have been better if they had left fourteen more at home and gone to Lindsay with twenty men who could play in tune. They could have made a better showing; a just and fair criticism of the Band, showing their defects, instead of making them believe they were the only thing, would have done the Band more good if it had been handed to them years ago by yourself, Mr. Editor.

It is a wrong impression, to think that the more men you have the better the Band is; twenty men who can play are better than forty who are only half competent, and that is the position of our Band to-day.

May this past experience be the means of waking up some musical ability that at present is lying dormant in this City.

Hoping you will see your way to insert this in your paper, I remain

Yours,

Fair Play.

Says Homewood Ave Should Receive More Attention

To Editor, The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—After months of waiting in hopes piles of "dump stuff" would be looked after on our streets, it seems as if Homewood Avenue is out off town limits.

Living in the midst of debris dumped from all parts of town and never any person to look after it, but an old man with shovel and plenty of talk, here we are supposed to be living in the city, and might as well as Port Hope man says, "be in backwoods," no worse road in country than Homewood Avenue.

Why don't our street men look after this? It is a disgrace to any corporation. We pay high enough taxes, and what have we got for it? No highway, no light, and may as well be living in Chandos (or Harvey). We have asked for light—Answer:—Get Hydro-Electric. Our street is a disgrace to the City, and you, as Editor, know it.

PRETTY FRONT PAGE COVER

The Ford "Times" for July had for its frontispiece a well-executed picture of the Peterborough Hydraulic Lift Lock. It was printed in soft colours, and the effect was enlivened by the steamer "Stoney Lake" being shown in the lift. It would not be assuming too much to say that this pretty front page cover of the "Times" was intended as a compliment to the local Ford salesman, Joe Duffus.

PUT THIS ON YOUR SLATE

And arrange to take in the Water and Rail Excursion to Lindsay and return on Friday, August 7th, steamer "Stoney Lake" leaves George Street Wharf at 7.30 in the morning for a delightful sail through the Kawartha Lakes to Lindsay, returning by special train, arriving in Peterborough at 8.45. Round trip ticket only $1.00.

COUNCIL REFUSES MONAGHAN'S TERMS FOR PRIVILEGE OF LAYING SEWERS ON BOUNDARY ROAD

Township Wanted Clause Whereby City Would Have to Remove Sewer If Reasonable Demands Were Made.

DIDN'T WANT MUCH

The matter of the projection of the city sewers some distance into the Township of North Monaghan, to connect with the sewage disposal plant, which has occasioned considerable discussion in both the City and Township Councils, was again brought to the front at the Council meeting, last night. And out of four clauses of a suggested agreement submitted by the Township, only one was accepted by the city, indicating that the matter is little nearer mutual settlement than ever. The Provincial Board of Health ordered that the Township Council and City Council discuss the matter before the 8th of August, and as a result, the former submitted to the City Council last night a proposed agreement that embodied the following clauses:

1.—That they do the necessary excavation work and lay the pipes with as little delay as possible, the roads to be in as good condition as before, and indemnify the Township against all loss or damage which may be occasioned by the use of the road by the City.

(b) If at any time the Township should reasonably require to have the sewer raised, lowered, or moved to some other street, that that be dealt with by some tribunal. The County Judge was mentioned.

(c) That the Township or any ratepayer have the right of connection on reasonable terms.

(d) All expenses of an incidental nature to the application to be borne by the City.

The Council agreed that the first clause was a reasonable one, but for various reasons unanimously refused to entertain the other three. The Township Council will be invited to confer with the City Council in this city next Friday night, to see if the matter cannot be settled without an appeal to the Provincial Board of Health. If it cannot be settled the matter will be referred to that body for a final ruling.

Wanted In Winnipeg

Prisoner Charged With Drunkenness Has $185 In His Possession—Police Court News

When Herbert Love's name was called by the Police Magistrate this morning, the Chief asked for a remand, in order that he might make some investigations. It appears that when Love, who had just come from Turtle Lake, was arrested in Victoria Park for drunkenness, it was found that he had $185 in his possession, notwithstanding the fact that he claimed he did not work. Now, Love is wanted in Winnipeg, for two years ago he landed in that City and seemed to be hiding something. A remand of ten days was ordered.

John Robinson, on remand for cruelty to animals, was fined $5 and costs, $9 in all. He had kept a horse which was in a very emaciated condition, and yesterday it was necessary to have the animal shot.

A local citizen was fined $2 and costs for allowing her dog to run at large.

The case of assault against Nicholas Douros, the complaint being made by Nichols Lumparopolus, arising out of a difficulty in settling a wages case, was dismissed.

John McCoy was fined $10 for being found under the influence of liquor, or in default of payment, ten days in jail. "I won't pay the money," responded McCoy; "I have to work too hard for it; I'll go to jail first." His preference was carried into effect.

FINANCIAL EFFECT OF WAR ALREADY FELT IN PETERBORO'

That the widespread financial effect of war now in progress in Europe has not passed by Peterborough was brought home to the City Council in an unexpected manner last night. Mr. Kelly, a young man who on Saturday paid $50 for a pedlar's license, waited upon the City Council last night and asked them if they would not refund the money if he surrendered the license. The war developments since he took the license out, he said, had made it impossible for him to sell anything, and that was the reason he asked to have the license taken back by the city. Under the circumstances the Aldermen did not seem to think it was right to hold the young man up and it was agreed to refund him the $50. Kelly had not made any sales under the authority of the license.

THREE COLUMN LINE IS GERMAN PLAN OF ATTACK

Prussian practice for 150 years has been to strike the enemy in three parallel columns, each fully equipped wih artillery and cavalry, and each of some 25,000 men. There is no means of knowing yet the weight of this present advance, but the despatches show that the traditional practice is being followed. The northern column, coming by Coblentz, struck into Luxemburg, evidently with the intention of seizing this Province and establishing it as a base of advance. The middle column, which undoubtedly will be under the direction of the Commander in Chief, takes the old route through Alsace-Lorraine to Nancy, and leans on Strasburg as its base of operations. The southern column is reported at Delle on the border of Switzerland.

The plan is a well tried one, and once across the border the three columns will converge upon Paris, some two hundred miles away. Unquestionably the French authorities will have tight conrol of the railways—and the invaders will have to depend on the roads.

WAR HASTENS HIS WEDDING

Officer of Royal Canadian Dragoons Then Leaves to Join Regiment.

KINGSTON, Ont., Aug. 3.—Lieut. Hubert Stethem, of the Royal Canadian Dragoons, St. John's, Que., whose corps is under orders for active service, secured two days' leave of absence and came to Kingston.

In October net he was to have been married to Miss Vera Louise Carson, younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Carson of this city, but he prevailed upon his fiancee to wed him immediately, and so this morning the young couple were joined in matrimony in St. George's Cathedral.

Mr. and Mrs. Stethem left this afternoon for Montreal. The groom played a conspicuous part in the recent riots at St. John, N.B., his corps being called upon to keep order.

CZAR, KAISER, ENGLISH KING ARE ALL GRANDCHILDREN OF QUEEN VICTORIA

Three first cousins, rulers of three big European powers, may find themselves arrayed in war against a fourth first cousin as a result of the international embroilment the Austrian-Serb war has brought about.

Czar Nicholas II. of Russia, King George V. of England, and King Constantine of Greece, all bound by family ties to English royalty, are expected to take the side of Servia in the struggle.

Emperor William II. of Germany, the "war lord," a direct descendant of the late Queen Victoria of England, will line up with Austria in what is expected to be one of the bitterest and bloodiest conflicts of history.

The Czar, the Kaiser and the King of England, all are offspring of the children of Queen Victoria.

Constantine of Greece, whose alliance with Servia in the recent Balkan war is expected to be repeated, is a brother-in-law of the Kaiser, who he will oppose, as well as being a first cousin by marriage to the Czar, the Kaiser and King George.

Czar Nicholas, aged forty-six, Russian ruler since November 1, 1894, is the son of the late Czar Alexander III., and Dagmar, Dowager Empress of Russia. Dagmar was a sister of Alexandra, Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, mother of King George V.

Nicholas II., in addition to be ing a cousin of the British King, is married to Princess Alix, a granddaughter of Victoria through Victoria's third daughter, Alice Maud Mary, Grand Duchess of Hesse.

King George of England is a son of the late King Edward VII., who was Victoria's first son. George has been on the throne since May 6, 1910. He is forty-nine years old and closely resembles his cousin, the Czar.

Constantine of Greece is married to Princess Sophia, sister of the Kaiser, and hence the Kaiser's brother-in-law. He is also a first cousin of the Czar and King George. Constantine is forty-six years old and has been on the throne since March 19, 1913.

Emperor William of Germany is the son of former Emperor Frederick and the royal Princess Victoria, first child of Queen Victoria, hence a first cousin of the Czar and English King.

BRITAIN PLEDGED

Will Protect France From Attack From German Fleet—No Definite Move

PUBLIC IN SUSPENSE

LONDON, Aug. 4. — Great Britain has mobilized her forces and awaits events. To-day she is not a belligerent power, nor is she a neutral one.

The Government has given France assurance that the British fleet will not permit the German fleet to attack the French coast. It has not yet pledged itself to contribute an army to the continental war.

The British Government regards with the deepest distrust Germany's violation of Belgium's neutrality, but makes no declaration as to whether it considers that measure provocation for war.

This pronouncement of the Government's policy—the result of two days' almost continuous deliberations—was made to the House of Commons yesterday afternoon by Sir Edward Grey, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. Therefore the trying hour of suspense for the British people is prolonged indefinitely.

Meanwhile the German Embassy in London is exerting every effort to induce Great Britain to hold aloof from the conflict and to bring public opinion to Germany's side. The counsellor of the German Embassy issued a strong appeal for the neutrality of Great Britain, asserting that Germany would agree to keep her fleet from attacking the northern and western coasts of France if England would pledge neutrality, and argued that England would gain more in the end by standing outside the European war and using her influence as mediator when the moment was ripe.

Referring to this suggestion, the British Foreign Secretary said:

"I have only heard that shortly before I came to the House."

He raised his voice and rapped the table before him sharply, declaring: "But that is far too narrow an engagement."

Sir Edward Grey dispelled the shadows of doubt which flickered over the Triple Entente in the minds of many Liberals by exposing some milestones in the history of the rapprochement, revealing it as essentially a national one with France, without definite obligations.

When the House reassembled the Foreign Secretary made his statement with respect to Belgium. He said:

"A message has been from the Belgian legation h ing that Germany sent to Be seven o'clock last evening a posing to Belgium friendly n coupled with the free through Belgian territory of troops, promising the mainte Belgian independence at the sion of peace, and threate case of refusal, to treat Bel an enemy. Council Given Great Surprise

By-law re Plumbing Inspector Again Appeared Before Term of Banishment Was Ended

Ald. Langford attended the Council meeting last night, entering the Council Chamber slightly late, and taking his usual place, wearing a serene and genial expression on his countenance. In fact there was nothing in his manner or actions to indicate that he had concealed, innocent appearing enough, as it was, a miniature bomb in one of the capacious pockets of his coat. The missive in question, to all beholders, had nothing in its appearance to betray the real nature of the thing. In fact it looked the exact counterpart of thousands of uninteresting legal compositions with which the City Council is from time to time deluged, with considerable annoyance to themselves, and considerable expression of opinion on the said documents, which leaves nothing to indicate their inner aversion to everything that has the appearance of a by-law with or without a number.

So that it was with little short of fatal effect that Ald. Langford exploded the bomb last night as the uninteresting session of the Council was drawing to the close. And Alds. Anderson and Duncan were nearly the innocent victims of the action. But Mayor Buller nipped the explosion in the bud, and managed to pour oil on the storm that promised troubled waters.

And the reason of it all was briefly this: After years of dissatisfaction at the way Assistant Plumbing Inspector Thompson has been doing his work, the Property Committee, of which Ald. Langford is Chairman, recommended at the last meeting of the City Council to promote the Assistant Plumbing Inspector to the position of Plumbing Inspector, at which Ald. Duncan and certain other of the Councillors raised a howl, and the echo of which, scientists would inform us, is still reverberating somewhere near the edge of the earth's atmosphere. And, as a result, the report of the Property Committee was shipped back in its entirety to that body to be reconsidered. And it was understood by all concerned that before the matter was so much as broached in the Concil again that the said Committee would hold a meeting, to which the Plumbing Inspector would be invited "on pain of dismissal," and at which the affair would be threshed out to the last straw with the alleged offender, himself, present, to make whatever defence of his conduct he saw fit. But since that time no meeting of the Property Committee has been held, and no lively session with the Plumbing Inspector has been added to the annals of Peterborough's history. So that it was with something of a sensation that Ald. Langford took the floor last night, cleared his throat and commenced to read a by-law to appoint Mr. Thompson as Plumbing Inspector of the City of Peterborough. The thing went off like a shot, but the Mayor scented an emergency and broke in on the tranquil strains of Alderman Langford's voice. By so doing he averted something which might have been disastrous to some of the Aldermen, but after the Mayor had made over the pictures to the Chairman of the Property Committee, Alds. Anderson and Duncan had sufficiently recovered themselves to verbally agree with him that the by-law ought to be sent back to the Property Committee and not brought back to the Council until til the promised meeting of that committee (with the Assistant Plumbing Inspector in attendance) is held. It is maintained by some of the Aldermen that the Assistant Plumbing Inspector will never be made to see the error of his ways, and consequently the introduction of the by-law last night was a very great surprise to that usually dignified body. But the affair is now to be threshed out in committee and what the outcome will be is not a matter for speculation.

ITALY FEARS ATTACK.

France and England Might Take Sardinia and Sicily.

ROME, Aug. 4.—The head of the Italian military staff conferred yesterday with the leading officials and admirals of the Italian army as to the plan of campaign in case of Italy being drawn into the European war. It was pointed out in authoritative circles that Italy's situation would be a most critical one if the other powers of the Triple Alliance were brought face to face with those of the Triple Entente.

The combined Anglo-French navy it was argued would then have at its mercy the coasts of the Mediterranean and Ionian Seas, and it was thought that Great Britain would occupy Sicily, while France might seize Sardinia, as she threatened to do in 1882 when Italy remonstrated at the French invasion of Tunis.

COUNCIL GRANTS $100 FOR SPORTS ON LABOUR DAY

Deputation From the Trades and Labour Council Waited on City Fathers Last Night Asking For Usual Grant

A deputation from the Trades and Labour Council was received by the City Council last night, and asked for the usual grant to that organization in aid of their annual celebration on Labour Day. Mr. J. J.Hartley acted as spokesman for Trades and Labour Council, and in a very brief but effective adress to the Council, he outlined the aims of the Trades and Labour Council, and showed why they were worthy of a grant.

Ald. Johnston, in moving that the request be granted and that the usual sum of $100 be given the Trades and Labour Council, said that in the past the City had always looked upon the grant as a good one, and one which helped to keep people in the city for the holiday. His motion was seconded by Ald. Langford, who thought that the Trades and Labour Council should be encouraged in their efforts.

Mayor Boller remarked that the action had proved a good step, and that their sports and other celebration was always successful. Accordingly the motion authorizing the grant of $100 passed without a dissenting voice.

Gave Permission.

The Council last night also gave permission to Mr. Freeburn on Lock street to install a Bowser gasoline tank, provided it be installed in accordance and conforming to all legal restrictions governing such, and that it be situated and put in to the satisfaction of the City engineer.

Landed 21 Lb. Lunge With Rod And Line At Wallace Point

John Gillespie, Romaine Street, Made Record Catch Near First Bridge.

On Friday evening last a small party armed with fishing rods, worm cans, and lunch baskets, boarded the steamer Ossawa in her down trip to Rice Lake parts.

This certain party wished to land at Wallace Point—at which haven they put up for the night in some manner.

Early morning found them awake and ready for a square meal. After this duty was performed, the party hied them to the bridge near-by to fish for bass. Their luck was nil.

As the day wore on their patience was being taxed—not even a decent nibble, and the worms going all the time.

Around one o'clock one of the male section betook himself and rod along the boom to the pier nearest the wharf, in the middle of the river, armed with a slim steel trout rod.

His line was cast, he waits patiently; at last he gets a "bite"—and no mistake. The excitement is high. How is he going to hold it? "Play yer line, Jake, and tire him!" is heard from the rest of his "pals."

Jake played the fish for over an hour. At a crucial moment, he had a troll-line handed to him, and after a few throws succeeded in "catching in" with this. And then his trout line hook broke! But he had his prize safe.

On being landed, the fish turned the scales at 21 pounds; 40 inches long, 17 inches girth. This is the biggest lunge ever captured in this vicinity.

The captor was Mr. John Gillespie, Romaine street; and he with his wife, who was also in the "crowd," were a happy pair as they lugged their prize from Rye's boathouse to their home.

One of The Examiner staff had a "wee taste"; and voted the dish scrumptious!

The rainfall during July only totalled about 3-4 of an inch for the whole month— about one-third of a fair average. The highest temperature was on the 11th with 92 degrees in the shade. The lowest was on the 20th, 40 degrees. Very warm weather extended from the 5th to the 17th of the month. Rain fell on five days to a measurable amount, the heaviest showers being on the 23rd.—W. P.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—The North German Lloyd liner Kronprinz Wilhelm, her bunkers and holds filled with coal, superstructure painted grey and carrying no passengers, slipped quietly out of her pier to-night and put to sea. She is ostensibly sailing for Bremen, but guesses were hazarded that her real object might be to coal one of the German cruisers which recently left West Indian water and which rumours say are now somewhere off this coast.

Mayor Says We Should Help The Empire To The Limit With Canadian Men And Money

When the City Council convened for thir regular monthly session last night they found a telegram waiting them from the Montreal Daily Star asking them, what, in their opinion should be the attitude of Canada to the affair if Great Britain became involved in a European war.

Mayor Boller announced that the telegram was to hand and suggested that an answer be sent. "There can be no doubt of our attitude in this crisis, gentlemen," he said to the City Fathers. "We must give to Great Britain not only our sympathy, but men and money—all Canada has of this world's goods—are at her service. I am sure we all think that."

That the other Councillors were of the same opinion was speedily made evident, all expressing themselves in patriotic terms as to what Canada's duty was in the event of the Mother Country becoming involved in the threatened war-cloud. So on the motion of Aldermen Langford and Duncan, a message along he lines of the Mayor's remarks will be sent to the Editor of the Montreal Star in reply.

CANADIAN MILITIA DEPARTMENT HAS CHANGED PROPOSED PLANS

OTTAWA, Aug. 4.—It is understood here this afternoon that the plans of the Militia Department to call out whole regiments have been changed, and that when war is declared by Britain and Canada's offer of men is accepted, that special service contingents will be raised by individual enlistment, preference being given of course to unmarried men with training in the militia regiments. Several clothing factories are working overtime in various parts of Ontario and Quebec turning out standard Canadian khaki uniform and Stetson "cowboy" hats for the expected contingent. All will be mobilized and train for a short period at Val Cartier, near Quebec City, preparatory to sailing for the field of war.

THE PARTY VOTE AS POLLED IN RECENT GENERAL ELECTION

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, August 3.—That the vote polled by the Conservative Government at the recent Provincial election was less than 54 per cent of the total is shown by reduction from the figures which have just been issued by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. The Conservatives received 267,145 votes, or slightly less than 54 per cent of the total; the Liberals received 198,169 votes, or about 43 per cent; third party candidates, 16,159 votes, or slightly less than 4 per cent. The total vote cast was approximately 482,450, as compared with 356,739 in the Provincial General Election of 1911.

The attention of politicians throughout the Province is being focussed upon the fact that if proportional representation were in force in this Province the Liberals would have 62 seats in the next House instead of 25; the Independents 4 instead of 2; Conservatives 59 instead of 84. This would give the Government a majority of only six after the appointment of the Speaker.

In preparation of these statistics Liberal and temperane votes have been counted in the same column, inasmuch as practically every avowed temperance candidate was directly or impliedly endorsed by the Liberal Executives in the constituency in which they ran. In Toronto, where electors have two votes, only one vote is counted for each elector, and that the highest vote in each riding. The disparity between the aggregate votes in 1914 and 1911—about 107,000—is to a certain extent due to the fact that three years ago there were 18 acclamations, and on June 29th there were but 4, but if the 1914 figures are counted in for the 18 acclamations of 1911 and the 1911 figures added in for 4 acclamations this year—which is probably the fairest way of treating the question, it will be seen that this year's vote is about 65,000 in actual figures more than three years ago.

Also it is worthy of notice that the recent Provincial vote is within approximately 1 per cent of that huge vote which was cast, three years ago, during the Reciprocity campaign, and there was only one acclamation in that election. Thus it is observed that this vote is the largest ever polled in any Provincial election in the Province, exceeding, if allowances are made for acclamations, by almost 40,000, the total vote in 1905, which was the record up to that time.

The Government's popular majority over all its opponents is shown to be 1,827. In these figures Evanturel is classed as an Independent; the liquor Liberal candidate in North Norfolk is classed as an Independent; the second candidate in Rainy River is placed in the same category, and the Independent Conservative candidate in Prince Edward is put in the Conservative column.

No Trouble to Remove Superfluous Hairs

(Toilet Tips.)

It is an easy matter to rid the skin of objectionable hair or fuss, if you proceed as follows: Mix a paste with some water and a little powdered delatone, apply to hairy surface and in 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and the hairs are gone. This method of banishing hairy growths is pleasant, and does not mar the skin, but to avoid disappointment, be certain to get genuine delatone.

GOT AN EVEN BREAK WITH THE COCKNEYS

Peter Won Morning Game 4 to 0 But Were Slaughtered in the Afternoon, Tracey and Cresswell Being Hammered for Twenty-two Hits.

LONDON, Ont., Aug. 3 — London and Peterborough went to the greatest extremes in playing a Civic Holiday double bill to-day, the locals, after being blanked 4 to 0 in the morning game, retaliating by walloping Tracey and Cresswell for a total of 22 hits and 18 runs, while the Peters coupled but once against Steiger's heaving. Hammond pitched for London in the morning, and allowed only six hits, and while Schettler's performance was scarcely more noteworthy he was able to get away with the credit of a whitewash. Tracey was meat for London in the afternoon, sixteen hits being made off his delivery before he finished the eighth round. Cresswell tried hard to head off the Indians, who had in the meantime struck quite a pace, but he did not make much of a job of it. The score of the second game follows:

Visitors Saw Vermont Marble Co's Plant

At the close of yesterday afternoon's session the Ontario Marble and Granite Association visited the cemetery and the lift-lock and inspected the workings of the Vermont Marble Company's plant.

At 7.30 the evening session commenced. Under unfinished business, the matter of the Collingwood dealers' protest against their cemetery tax came up for discussion. It appears that a Collingwood dealer by name, Mr. N. A. Walker, when requiring to erect a monument in the cemetery at that city was refused until he should pay his tax of 5 per cent., and it was proposed to make a test case of it, with the view of eliminating the tax. It was agreed to send a delegate to Collingwood to investigate the matter before the Society should pledge itself to support Mr. Walker. The chairman, Mr. Sanderson, was appointed.

Mr. J. W. Hutchinson of Aylmer, gave an interesting and instructive address on "System and Costs," and Mr. Geo. D. Mackenzie of Toronto, followed with a descriptive discourse on the Granite Industry in Scotland.

To-day the convention are enjoying a trip to Rice Lake and other points.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—War developments, jolted provision prices down almost as hard today as wheat had been temporarily rushed up on account of the excitement over the first outbreak of hostilities. Losses in value of provisions at the end of trading ran from 17½ to $1.75, as compared with Saturday night. Stoppage of lard exports to Europe was immediately reported, coupled with the tightening of finance. Corn fell with provisions, the September delivery closing 3 1-8 cents down. Other options of corn dropped only ¼c to 5-8c. Wheat declined ¼c to 1⅛c net, and oats 5-8c to 1⅜c.

Fifty business was done in car lots. The flour market was strong and prices for spring wheat grades were advanced 20c per barrel under an active demand from local and country buyers for car lots, but millers will not sell anything except for delivery within 10 days. All lines of mill feed except bran were strong at an advance of $1 per ton with a good demand. The butter market continues strong and prices are steadily advancing, spurred under a good demand for local account and for shipment to the west. At the auction sale today finest creamery sold at 26c. Cheese was quiet, but firm. Eggs active and firm. Dressed hogs 25c per 100 pounds higher. Exports cheese for the week 87,133 boxes compared with 71,466 for the corresponding week last year. UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Aug. 3.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 139 cars, comprising 2862 cattle, 703 hogs, 726 sheep and lambs and 377 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Choice steers sold at $8.50 to $8.80, and one extra choice load brought $9; this is 10c higher than at any previous time. Loads of good at $8.25 to $8.50; medium to good at $7.80 to $8.15; common medium at $7.25 to $7.50; inferior, light steers and heifers at $6.25 to $7, choice cows at $6.75 to $7, good cows at $6.25 to $6.50; medium cows at $5.50 to $6; common at $4.75 to $5.25; canners at $3 to $3.75; bulls at $5 to $7.25.

Stockers and Feeders.

Steers, 800 to 900 lbs., sold worth $7.25; steers, 700 to 800 lbs., $6.50 to $7; stockers, $5.50 to $6.25.

Milkers and Springers.

Receipts of milkers and springers were not large and prices were reported as ranging from $65 to $90 each.

Veal Calves.

Receipts were very light and veals firm; choice sold at $10 to $10.50; good calves, $9 to $10; medium, $8 to $9; common at $6 to $7.50; grassers or western calves, $5 to $6.50.

Sheep and Lambs.

Receipts were moderate and prices again firm. Sheep, light, at $6 to $6.25; heavy ewes and rams, $4 to $4.50; bucks at $3 to $5; for export sheep, and $7.50 to $8 for culls.

Hogs.

Receipts were light, but prices were easy and higher, $8.65 fed and watered and $8.45 weighed off cars and $8.75 to $8.80 f.o.b. cars.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Aug. 3.—At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market receipts of live stock for the week ending Aug. 1 were 1700 cattle, 2300 sheep and lambs, 2450 hogs and 1050 calves. There were on the market for sale this morning about 1400 cattle, 1250 sheep and lambs, 1000 hogs and 700 calves.

Owing to the offerings of cattle showing an increase of over 500 head, compared with this day week, the market opened up very quiet this morning on account of the fact that drovers were firm in their views and buyers showed a disposition to hold off and await developments, which action on their part, however, did not seem to discourage drovers to any great extent, as they were aware of the fact that all the cattle would be wanted after the short run of the past two weeks, and in consequence the demand improved later in the day, and a fairly active trade was done. The feeling was not as strong as a week ago, but prices were maintained in most cases. The demand for stock for shipment to the Buffalo market was fair, and several carloads were purchased. The supply of good to choice steers was more than equal to the demand, and sales of several cars were made as high as $9, while carloads of good stock changed hands at $8.25, and mixed lots of common stock at $5.50 to $6 per 100 pounds. The demand for canning stock was fair, and sales of cows were made at $4 to $4.25, and bulls at $5 to $5.25 per 100 pounds.

OBITUARY

MICHAEL O'SHEA.

On Thursday, July 23, 1914, the death occurred of Mr. Michael O'Shea, a well known and highly esteemed resident of Asphodel township. He was a man of sound principles and deeply imbued with a spirit of honesty, uprightness and fidelity to duty, kind, patient and self-sacrificing, a loyal child of the church. He passed peacefully away to hearken to God's welcoming, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

His sudden demise has evoked many expressions of regret and sympathy with the sorrowing family and relatives.

He leaves to mourn his loss a sorrowing widow and little daughter, not yet two years old; also four sisters, Mrs. Hurley, Mrs. Fitzpatrick of Asphodel, Mrs. Moher of Douro and Mrs. O'Keefe of Peterborough and four brothers, Thos. and J. A. of Asphodel, John of Campbellford and Wm. of Peterborough.

The funeral, which was largely attended, took place to St. Paul's R. C. church, Norwood, where requiem High mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Meagher, thence to the Roman Catholic cemetery. The pallbearers were six nephews of the deceased.

3.30 DESPATCH

Extraordinary Special:

LONDON, Aug. 4—The House of Commons today voted five hundred and twenty-five million dollars for emergency purposes and passed several financial war bills without a dissentient voice.

Local Men Who May See Battle

Among the local men who may be the first to engage actively in the European war are Clarence Henry, E. J. Waterman, Louis Houdrie and P. C. James Reid. Lieut. Henry of the 45th Regiment, Sgt. E. J. Waterman of the 57th Regiment and Gerald Burrows, made application to Ottawa, formally volunteering their services. Mr. Louis Houdrie received a cablegram recalling him to the service in the French army, and P. C. Reid of the Scots Greys, has gone to Toronto to report.

It is estimated that of the Royal Naval Reserves, English infantry or cavalry forces or territorials that may be recalled in the event of war, there are less than a score in Peterborough.

CANADA COULD SEND 20,000 TO HELP BRITAIN

Nominal Strength of Militia is 66,000—Many Only Half Trained

Canada's military forces consist of 66,000 men of all ranks, members of permanent Militia (Regulars) and active Militia (Volunteers). An overwhelming majority of the 66,000 are eager to go to the help of the Motherland. The people of Canada would like to see them go. How many can go? Certainly not the whole 66,000, probably not more than one-third of them.

Modern war is an exceedingly complicated business and a military force to be serviceable must be complete in many details. Each military column must have a certain number of waggons, a certain number of tents and blankets, a certain number of travelling soup kitchens, a certain number of water waggons, a certain quantity of medical and other stores.

The military column needs officers who have, in addition to courage and capacity to command men, technical knowledge and executive ability at least equal to that of a responsible official in a big business office or industrial plant. The modern army needs soldiers who have brains and discipline as well as animal courage, and brains and discipline are only developed by training.

Military observers familiar with the present state of the Canadian Militia are inclined to think that the Canadian military authorities would be [illegible] Britain [illegible] break of war [illegible] month.

ABERDEEN, Scotland, Aug. 5. — Specials from Cromarty say that a fleet tender with the wounded from yesterday's battle between German scout ships and British mine laying vessels and accompanying escort of destroyers, have reached there. "DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

CHAPTER XI.

A THOUSAND YEARS!

Sickened with a numbing anguish of fear, such as in all his life he had never known, Stern stood there a moment, motionless and lost.

Then he turned. Out into the hall he ran, and his voice re-echoing wildly, rang through those long-deserted aisles.

All at once he heard a laugh behind him—a hail.

He wheeled about, trembling and spent. Out [illegible] went, in eager greeting. For the girl, laughing and flushed and very beautiful, was coming down the stairs at the end of the hall.

Never had the engineer beheld a sight so wonderful to him as this woman, clad in the Bengal robe; this girl who smiled and ran to meet him.

"What? Were you frightened?" she asked, growing suddenly serious, as he stood there speechless and pale. "Why — what could happen to me here?"

His only answer was to take her in his arms and whisper her name. But she struggled to be free.

"Don't! You mustn't!" she exclaimed. "I didn't mean to alarm you. Didn't even know you were here!"

"I heard the shots—. I called—you didn't answer. Then—"

"You found me gone. I didn't hear you. It was nothing, after all. Nothing—much!"

He led her back into the room.

"What happened. Tell me!"

"It was really too absurd!"

"What was it?"

"Only this," and she laughed again. "I was getting supper ready, as you see," with a nod at their provision laid out upon the clean-brushed floor. "When—"

"Yes?"

"Why, a blundering great hawk swooped in through the window there, circled around, pounced on the last of our beef, and tried to fly away with it."

Stern heaved a sigh of relief. "So that was all?" asked he. "But the shots? And your absence?"

"I struck at him. He showed fight. I blocked the window. He was determined to get away with the food. I was determined he shouldn't. So I snatched the revolver and opened fire."

"And then?"

"That confused him. He flapped out into the hall. I chased him. Away up the stairs he circled. I shot again. Then I pursued. Went up two storeys. But he must have got away through some opening or other. Our beef's all gone!" And Beatrice looked very sober.

"Never mind, I've got a lot more stuff downstairs. But tell me, did you wing him?"

"I'm afraid not," she admitted. "There's a feather or two on the stairs, though."

"Good work!" cried he laughing, his fear swallowed in the joy of having found her again, safe and unhurt. "But please don't give me another such panic, will you? It's all right this time, however.

"And now if you'll just wait here and not get fighting with any more wild creatures, I'll go down and bring my latest finds. I like your pluck," he added slowly, gazing earnestly at her.

"But I don't want you chasing things in this old shell of a building. No telling what crevice you might fall into or what accident might happen. Au revoir!"

Her smile as he left her was inscrutable, but her eyes, strangely bright, followed him till he had vanished once more down the stairs.

* * * * * * *

Broad strokes, a line here, one there, with much left to the imagining—such will serve best for the painting of a picture like this—a picture wherein every ordinary bond of human life, the nexus of man's society, is shattered. Where everything must strive to reconstruct itself from the dust. Where the future, if any such there may be, must rise from the ashes of a crumbling past.

Broad strokes, for detailed ones would fill too vast a canvas. Impossible to describe a tenth of the activities of Beatrice and Stern the next four days. Even to make a list of their hard-won possessions would turn this chapter into a mere catalogue.

So let these pass for the most part. Day by day the man, issuing forth sometimes alone, sometimes with Beatrice, laboured like a Titan among the ruins of New York.

Though more than ninety per cent. of the city's one time wealth had long since vanished, and though all standards of worth had wholly changed, yet much remained to harvest.

Infinitudes of things, more or less damaged, they bore up to their shelter, up the stairs which here and there Stern had repaired with rough-hewn logs.

For now he had an axe, found in that treasure-house of Currier & Brown's, brought to a sharp edge on a wet, flat stone by the spring, and hafted with a sapling.

This implement was of incredible use, and greatly enheartened him. More valuable it was than a thousand tons of solid gold.

The same store yielded also a well-preserved enamelled water-pail and some smaller dishes of like ware, three more knives, quantities of nails, and some small tools; also the tremendous bonanza of a magazine rifle and a shotgun, both of which Stern judged would come into shape by the application of oil and by careful tinkering, the engineer had no doubt he could unearth unlimited quantities.

"With steel," he reflected, "and with my flint spearhead, I can make fire at any time. Wood is plenty, and there's lots of 'punk.' So the first step in re-establishing civilisation is secure. With fire, everything else becomes possible.

"After a while, perhaps, I can get around to manufacturing matches again. But for the present my few ounces of phosphorus and the flint and steel will answer very well."

Beatrice, like the true woman she was, addressed herself eagerly to the fascinating task of making a real home out of the barren desolation of the fifth floor offices. Her splendid energy was no less than the engineer's. And very soon a comfortable air pervaded the place.

Stern manufactured a broom for her by cutting willow withes and lashing them with hide stripes on to a trimmed branch. Spiders and dust all vanished. A true housekeeping appearance set in.

To supplement the supply of canned food that accumulated along one of the walls, Stern shot what game he could—squirrel, partridges, and rabbits.

Metal dishes, especially of solid gold, ravished from Fifth Avenue shops, took their place on the crude table he had fashioned with his axe. Not for esthetic effect did they now value gold, but merely because that metal had perfectly withstood the ravages of time.

In the ruins of a magnificent store near Thirty-first Street, Stern found a vault burst open by frost and slow disintegration of the steel.

Here something like a quart of loose diamonds, big and little, rough and cut, were lying in confusion all about. Stern took none of these. Their value now was no greater than that of any pebble.

But he chose a massive clasp of gold for Beatrice, for that could serve to fasten her robe. And in addition he gathered up a few rings and one-time costly jewels which could be worn. For the girl, after all, was one of Eve's daughters.

Bit by bit he accumulated many necessary articles, including some tooth-brushes, which he found sealed in glass bottles, and a variety of toilet articles. Use was his [illegible] sideration now. Beauty [illegible] behind.

In a time, stood a fair variety of some already serviceable, others ing to be polished, ground and ed, and in some cases re-tempered. Two rough chairs made their appearance.

The north room, used only for cooking, became their forge and oven all in one. For here, close to a window wherethe smoke could drift out, Stern built a circular stone fireplace.

And here Beatrice presided over her copper casseroles and saucepans from the little shop on Broadway. Here, too, Stern planned to construct a pair of skin bel[illegible]s, and presently to set up the altars of Vulcan and Tubal Cain once more.

Both of them "thanked whatever gods there be" that the girl was a good cook. She amazed the engineer by the variety of dishes she managed to concoct from the canned goods, the game that Stern shot, and fresh dandelion greens dug near the spring. These edibles, with the blackest of black coffee, soon had them in fine fettle.

"I certainly have begun to put on weight," laughed the man after dinner on the fourth day, as he lighted his fragrant pipe with a roll of blazing birch-bark.

"My bearskin is getting tight. You'll have to let it out for me, or else stop such magic in the kitchen!"

She smiled back at him, sitt[illegible] there at ease in the sunshine by [illegible] window, sipping her coffee out of a gold cup with a solid gold spoon.

Stern, feling the May breeze upon his face, hearing the bird-songs in the forest depths, felt a well-being, a glow of health and joy such as he had never felt in his whole life known—the health of outdoor labour and sound sleep and perfect digestion, the joy of accomplishment and of the girl's near presence.

"I suppose we do live pretty well," she answered, surveying the remnants of the feast. "Potted tongue and peas, fried squirrel, partridge and coffee ought to satisfy anybody. But still—"

"What is it?"

"I would like some buttered toast and some cream for my coffee, and some sugar."

Stern laughed heartily.

"You don't want much!" he exclaimed, vastly amused, the while he blew a cloud of Latakia smoke. "Well, you be patient, and everything will come, in time.

"You mustn't expect me to do magic. On the fourth day you don't imagine I've had time enough, to round up the ten thousandth descendant of the erstwhile cow, do you? Or grow cane and make sugar? Or find grain for seed, clear some land, plough, harrow, plant, hoe, reap, winnow, grind and bolt and present you with a bag of prime flour? Not really?"

She pouted at his raillery. For a moment there was silence, while he drew at his pipe. At the girl he looked a little while. Then, his eyes a bit far away, he remarked in a tone he tried to render casual:

"By the way, Beatrice, it occurs to me that we're doing rather well for old people—very old."

She looked up with a startled glance.

"Very?" she exclaimed. "You know how old then?"

"Very, indeed!" he answered. "Yes, I've got some sort of an idea about it. I hope it won't alarm you when you know."

"Why—how so? Alarm me?" she queried with a strange expression.

"Yes, because, you see, it's rather a long time since we went to sleep. Quite so. You see, I've been doing a little calculating, off and on, at odd times. Been putting two and two together, as it were.

"First, there was the matter of the dust in sheltered places, to guide me. The rate of deposition of what, in one or two spots, can't have been anything less than cosmic or star-dust, is fairly certain.

"Then again, the rate of this present deterioration of stone and steel has furnished another index. And last night I had a little peek at the pole-star, through my telescope, while you were asleep.

"The good old star has certainly shifted out of place a bit. Furthermore, I've been observing certain evolutionary changes in the animals and plants about us. Those have helped, too."

"And— and what have you found out?" asked she with tremulous interest.

"Well, I think I've got the answer, more or less correctly. Of course, it's only an appropriate result, as we say in engineering. But the different items check up with some degree of consistency.

"And I'm safe in believing I'm within at least a hundred years of the date one way or the other. Not bad factor of safety, that, with limited means of working."

The girl's eyes widened. From her [illegible] fell the empty gold cup; it roll[illegible] away across the clean-swept floor. "What?" cried sh[illegible] 've got it, a hund[illegible]

Penny Lodgings For the Poor.

Lodgings at a penny a week are offered to the poor of Midhurst, Sussex, England, by Rev. F. Tatchell, vicar of the parish. He has turned an old vicarage over to this purpose. The penny a week secures a bed sitting-room in cases of genuine poverty.

The reason for the penny rental scheme lies with the charity commissioners of the town, who have been letting the public almshouses to the highest bidders. The result has been that the very poor have been forced to pay more than they could afford for lodgings. To overcome official competition, the vicar has started his penny lodgings.

TORONTO WOMAN WELL AGAIN

Freed From Bearing Down Pains, Backache and Pain in Side by Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

Toronto, Ont.—"Last October, I wrote to you for advice as I was completely run down, had bearing down sensation in the lower part of bowels, backache, and pain in the side. I also suffered terribly from gas. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am now entirely free from pain in back and bowels and am stronger in every way. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound highly to all expectant mothers."—Mrs. E. WANDBY, 92 Logan Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

Consider Well This Advice.

No woman suffering from any form of female troubles should lose hope until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from native roots and herbs, has for nearly forty years proved to be a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism. Women residing in almost every city and town in the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

The Writers.

The first woman member of the Swedish academy has just been elected in the person of Miss Selma Lagerlof, who won the Nobel prize for literature in 1909.

Holworthy Hall is the pen name of Harold E. Porter, the author. Mr. Porter graduated from Harvard in 1900, where he was president of the Lampoon, an editor of the Advocate and a member of various athletic teams as well as of Phi Beta Kappa.

Mlle. Jeanne Duportal, granddaughter of one of the popular representatives in the French assembly at the time of the end of the second empire, has won the proud distinction of being the first woman admitted by the old Sorbonne to the dignity of "Docteur des lettres."

Clever Old Timers.

Andrew Jackson was a senator at thirty.

William Henry Harrison was governor of Indiana territory at twenty-eight.

The greatest of the red men of America, Tecumseh, was a native of Ohio.

John Tyler was a member of the Virginia legislature at twenty-one and a congressman at twenty-six.

John Quincy Adams was secretary of the Russian legation at fourteen and minister to Holland at twenty-seven.—Magazine of American History.

How to Eat Asparagus.

How to eat asparagus. This is a problem as tremendous as how to eat an orange. Ivan Heald in the London Express, gives some advice on the point.

"Rest one elbow," he says, "on the cloth and wrap one leg around the leg of the table so as to prevent overbalancing. Grip the asparagus and rub its neck in the melted butter. Before it has time to make up its mind which way it will wobble swing the asparagus off its feet and waggle it in the air to test its pliability. Then open your mouth and make a feint at biting your stalk in the small of the back.

"Ten to one the asparagus will try to dodge by doubling up. You get him as his head comes down, and there you are.

"Never in the excitement of the struggle be tempted into biting the asparagus below the belt. It's not playing the game, and, besides, it gives the stalk a fine opportunity to whip around with a left hook to the ear."

His Majesty's Fault.

In the reign of Francis I. of France quickness of wit was often more promptly rewarded than actual merit. The monk, Regnier Mainus, did not lack merit, but he owed his first advancement nevertheless to a clever retort.

Francis, who was very fond of the game of tennis, was playing a match one day with Mainus. The monk finally ended the hard fought game with a brilliant stroke.

The king was somewhat out of humor on account of his defeat. "Remarkable," he exclaimed sarcastically, "to think that such a stroke should be made by a mere monk!"

"But, sire," replied the monk, who was as quick with his wit as he was with his racket, "it is your majesty's own fault that the stroke was not made by an abbot."

A week later Mainus received his appointment as abbot of Beaulieu.—Youth's Companion.

All Depends.

"Should a man really go down on his knees before a woman these days?"

"It all depends. Seems to be considered the correct thing in slow moving circles."—Kansas City Journal.

AN AMAZING SALE.

Spurious Pictures Had Been Collected at Big Prices.

Pictures were cheap in Newcastle, England, recently, when the greatest "bargain sale" of modern times, the disposal of the Shipley collection of reputed old masters, began.

There were some 2,500 pictures in the collection, which was left by the late J. A. D. Shipley to the Newcastle Town Council. A report on the collection was prepared for the council by Sir Walter Armstrong, and Mr. E. R. Dibdin, in which they said:

"Many of the frames and a few of the canvasses bear the names of famous artists of the first class, such as Holbein, Rubens, and Corot. But in no instance is there any perceptible ground for such ascription."

In the result, the bequest was declined by Newcastle, and Gateshead exercised its option and selected some of the pictures, leaving the remainder to be sold by auction. The first day's sale produced a total of $2,540 for 120 lots, which gives an average of rather less than $25.

Picture collecting was Mr. Shipley's hobby, and it is said that he would advance any sum of money on a picture and never dream of wanting his cash returned, but his craze did not infect the sixty or so critics and dealers who attended the dispersal.

Pictures alleged to be by great masters were in some cases totally ignored, as in the case of a "Raphael," which proved to be only a copy of "The Holy Family," and cost the late owner $425. There was one offer of $25, whereupon, the auctioneer ordered the "treasure" to be put on one side.

A Van Dyke, which was said to be a copy was sold for $11, and a "Murillo," called "Madonna and Child," brought $40, one of the day's best prices, though it did not suit the auctioneer, who wanted to start the bidding at $250.

A large canvas of "The Holy Family," attributed to Rubens, attracted no offer. The highest price obtained was $90, which was given for a wooded landscape, attributed to Hobbema. A Gozzoli landscape fetched only $3, which was probably about a tenth of the price paid for the frame.

Sir J. E. Millais' "Lady with Fan," a picture which was accepted by one of the experts present as a genuine work, slowly reached $20.

There was one surprise at the sale. A naval battle scene, by an unnamed painter, was put up and provoked a sudden burst of brisk bidding, the price running up to $75 before the hammere fell. An expert hazarded the opinion that it was a genuine Vander Velde.

The Egyptian Barber.

Some interesting facts regarding barbers are contained in Lord Kitchener's report on the condition of Egypt and the Soudan during the last year.

"The ordinary village barber of Egypt," says the report, "bears a certain resemblance in so far as his profession goes to the barber-surgeon of ancient time in England. He is authorized by law, after having passed an examination, to perform the operation of vaccination, application of leeches, cupping and simple dressings, and is forbidden by the same law to order or prescribe medicine.

"Every barber must attend a course of lectures of three weeks' duration at the Mudiria Government Hospital and pass an examination for a certificate. In each village one of these barbers is appointed by the public health department as its representative.

"Barbers so appointed are called sanitary barbers, and among their special duties are the following:—Vaccination, examination of deaths, issue of permits of burial, render reports of deaths involving suspicion of infectious disease.

"If the sanitary barber is unable to read or write, the work of registration is done by the village tax collector."

Not the Only One.

"This is my son Frederick, Mr. Fosdick," said Mr. Glanders proudly, introducing his five-year-old boy to his caller.

"Well, Frederick," said the caller, "do you obey your mamma?"

"Yes, sir," replied Frederick promptly, "and so does papa."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Love Lore.

When she drinketh your talk with both ears
And seemeth to thrive on the stuff
No time 'tis for harrowing fears.
It is safe to continue the bluff.

But when she protesteth "Nay! Nay!"
And blushingly doubteth and such
And "would like to believe what you say"—
It's a sign you have babbled too much.

STOMACH TROUBLES DUE TO ACIDITY

SO SAYS EMINENT SPECIALIST.

So-called stomach troubles, such as indigestion, wind, stomach-ache and inability to retain food, are in probably nine cases out of ten simply evidence that fermentation is taking place in the food contents of the stomach causing the formation of gas and acids. Wind distends the stomach, and causes that full, oppressive feeling sometimes known as heartburn, while the acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach. The trouble lies entirely in the fermenting food. Such fermentation is unnatural, and acid formation is not only unnatural, but may involve most serious consequences if not corrected. To stop or prevent fermentation of the food contents of the stomach and to neutralise the acid, and render it bland and harmless, a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia, probably the best and most effective corrector of acid stomach known, should be taken in a quarter of a glass of hot or cold water immediately after eating, or whenever wind or acidity is felt. This stops the fermentation, and neutralises the acidity in a few moments. Fermentation, wind and acidity are dangerous and unnecessary. Stop or prevent them by the use of a proper antacid, such as bisurated magnesia, which can be obtained from any druggist and thus enable the stomach to do its work properly without being hindered by poisonous gas and dangerous acids.—E. From Girlhood to Womanhood

THE change may be a critical period, and suffering in after-life, or [illegible] woman is often a "bundle of nerves"—[illegible]—fainting spells—emotional—frequently blue and dissatisfied with life. Each girl should be helped over this distressing stage in life—by a woman's tonic and nervine—that has proven outstanding for over 40 years.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Faulty English.

A slipshod use of English has been a favorite charge against American writers by their English cousins. The latest accusation is that we have gone so far as to force the English themselves to use our slang. But Dr. Rossiter Johnson has no difficulty in showing that even classic English writers are guilty of clumsy and incorrect usages. If this is the case with makers of English in the slow and careful process of book writing the critic should not be quite so captious concerning the slangy or faulty English that creeps into the American newspaper and periodical produced under a degree of pressure entirely foreign to a writer of books. Dr. Johnson ranges over the field of literature and shows by striking examples how Macaulay, Ruskin, De Quincey, Tennyson, Lecky, Thackeray, Hallam and many others have split their infinitives, separated verbs by modifying words put in the wrong place and dotted their writing with various awkward, ill contrived and ambiguous expressions.—Leslie's.

Marvelous Coincidence.

The following story was told by a famous New York wit recently: A party of skaters were once progressing at considerable speed down a certain frozen river in Canada when, to the horror of his companions, one of the party was seen to skate straight into a hole in the ice. Before he could stop himself he had fallen through it, and the sharp edge of the ice cut his head clean off his shoulders. The speed at which he was going, however, caused his head to skim along the top of the ice, while the rest of his body traveled at an equal speed beneath it, until, by a stroke of good luck, the severed portions met at another hole farther down and joined so exactly that the unfortunate man came out of his accident with nothing worse than a severe cold.—London Strand.

A Nabob.

"Rich as a nabob," is an expression not infrequently heard, but why a "nabob" should thus be associated with wealth and who he was precisely is not so generally known. Under the great moguls the provinces of India were administered by deputies known by the designation of "nawab," who commonly amassed much money and lived in great splendor. The office and the title continued under British rule in the orient, but gradually the word became corrupted into "nabob" and was applied generally to all natives who had grown rich. More latterly it was bestowed—often in a derisive sense—upon Europeans who, having made large fortunes in India, returned home and spent their money in a luxurious and ostentatious way.—London Tatler.

Had Nervous Dyspepsia

With Frequent Sick Headaches and Much Pain After Eating — Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Cured.

This letter is from a lady who gained 14 pounds by using the great food cure. It did wonders for her in improving her general health. She is enthusiastic in its praise, and refers to her neighbours as witnesses of the splendid results obtained.

Mrs. Susan oDbson, Spring Hill Mines, N. S., writes:—"It is with pleasure that I write to you in praise of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I was troubled with dyspepsia, and could not eat without suffering much pain; also had sick headaches frequently, and my nerves were in bad condition. About ten years ago I took a thorough treatment of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, using altogether 21 boxes, and since then can eat anything, have been freed from headaches, and my health has been greatly improved in every way. I gained 14 pounds in weight, and feel sure I owe everything to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. You may use this letter, and my neighbours can tell you of my condition before using this treatment."

Refreshing Candor.

For commercial candor and unconscious telling of the truth it is hard to beat some of the circulars received here from various European resorts. Often they are translated literally from the foreign languages into English, and the results are a delight. One of these advertisements of a Hungarian summer resort tells us that it charges "Moderate prices, except during the height of the season!"

SECOND ULTIMATUM REFUSED.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 4.—The Burgomaster of Antwerp announced last night that the Germans had invaded Limburg, Holland, and that the Province of Limburg has a population estimated at nearly a quarter of a million.

Germany's second ultimatum was delivered by the German Minister in Brussels late last night as the reply of Germany to the refusal of Belgium to accede to Germany's first ultimatum.

According to the Daily Mail this ultimatum threatened to treat Belgium as an enemy and carried the implied intention of Germany to seize Belgian Congo in the event of a refusal to permit the passing of the German forces through Belgium.

DEMANDED USE OF RAILWAYS.

The Kaiser demanded that Belgium consent to the German forces using the railroads to cross to France. If this demand is refused the German ultimatum says that war must be declared.

King Albert replied that under no circumstances will Belgium consent to the violation of her neutrality and belligerently announces that the army will oppose Germany's passage so long as a man is alive.

ARMAGEDDON

Revelations, chap. xvi., verses 16, 18, 19; chap. xix., verses 14-21:

And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue, Armageddon. And there were voices and thunders and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great.

And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of His wrath

And the armies which were in heaven followed Him upon white horses clothed in fine linen, white and clean.

And out of His mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it He should smite the nations; and He shall rule them with a rod of iron; and He treadeth the wine press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God.

And He hath in His vesture and on His thigh a name written, King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

And I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God.

That ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great.

And I saw the beast and the kings of the earth and their armies gathered together to make war against Him that sat on the horse and against His army.

And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These were both cast alive into a lake of fire, burning with brimstone.

And the remnant were slain with the sword of Him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of His mouth; and all the fowls were filled with their flesh.

ENGLAND'S PREMIERSHIP.

A Coveted Office That Brings Misery to Its Incumbents.

The lot of the British premier is like that of the policeman in the Gilbertian ballad—not a happy one. After Lord Derby had been prime minister he said that he had had only two happy days in office, one being the day he entered it and the other the day he retired from it.

Peel wrote: "It is impossible for me not to feel that the duties are above all human strength; at least, above mine." Peel also once made the curious statement that if his nose had not bled every night during his premiership he could not have borne the load of his position.

Lord Palmerston was so much affected by his work that he had a special high desk built, which necessitated a standing position. He explained that if he fell asleep while trying to keep up with his work the fall would awaken him.

Disraeli frequently stated that no man could have any notion of the arduous life, and when Gladstone was released from the duties of prime minister he leaped head over heels down a grass bank at Lord Evans' through sheer delight.

Lord Rosebery once wrote the following concerning the duties of prime minister: "He has to deal with the sovereign, with the cabinet, with parliament and with public opinion in its various kinds and degrees. Some of his colleagues he must convince, some he may have to humor, some even to cajole. It is a harassing, laborious and ungracious task."—New York Times.

A PAIR OF SLIPPERS.

Story of an Eccentric Man and a Curious Monument.

There stands in a church in Amsterdam an ancient and curious monument of white marble which always attracts the attention of visitors, and their curiosity is usually heightened by its inscription. On the monument are engraved two slippers of a singular shape, with the inscription "Effen Nyt," which in English would be "even nothing," or, more colloquially put, "nothing else." The story that is told of this strange device is as follows:

A certain rich man who was very extravagant in his tastes became possessed of the idea that he had just so many years to live and no more, and he calculated that if he spent a stated portion of his principal every year his life and his property would expire together.

He was lavishly generous to others as well as indulgent of his own whims, and it so happened that he died the very year he had prophesied would be his last. He had furthermore brought his fortune to such a low ebb that after his few debts were paid nothing remained of all his possessions aside from the clothes in which he was to be buried but a pair of curious old slippers.

Some of his relatives to whom he had been kind during his life erected this strangely decorated monument to mark his burial place.—Washington Star.

Human Strides.

Many correspondents have been testing the length of their stride, even those small boys who pace out the length of a cricket pitch in assurance that twenty-two long steps make twenty-two yards. But a walker from the city avers he comes as near as most men to the yard to the step on a long walk. He stands five feet eight and one-half inches, has a swing from the hips and has always between milestones stepped from 1,690 to 1,710 paces to the mile. That, of course, is a solitary walk. In a regiment the pace must be set by the average of the longest and shortest stepper.—London Opinion.

An Unsettled Question.

"Is this town on the map?"

"We don't know, stranger. There ain't nobody here rich enough to buy a map to find out."—Detroit Free Press.

BEST OF ALL JOURNALISTS.

St. Mark Has Been Called the Reporter Among the Apostles.

The greatest journalist the world ever knew lived 1,500 years or more before the invention of type, according to Rev. Dr. Frank N. Palmer, who awarded the palm to St. Mark and wondered at the marvels that he might have accomplished if he had lived in the days of printing presses.

St. Matthew put his chronicles in twenty-eight chapters; St. Luke used twenty-four to tell his story; St. John used twenty-one, but St. Mark covered all the details more vividly in sixteen and, true to the spirit of action that animates his kind, put a miracle in every chapter.

St. Mark, Dr. Palmer said, was the reporter among the apostles. His view point, his language and his marvelous ability to give action and climax, clash and color in a sentence should be a glowing example to the newspaper writers of this day.

Each of the other apostles speaks of skies that opened. Mark says they were rent asunder. He is the only one among his brethren who stopped dutifully to describe the color of a given scene. In the writings of his fellows it is told that the people went to the Sermon on the Mount. Mark writes vividly that the people ran.

In writing for the Romans he used colorful allusions and the references to wild beasts to touch their intelligence in sympathetic fashion at every stroke.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

The "Nit" Nott Got.

John Nott could not knit, so he invented a knitter which would knit and which Nott called the "Nott knitter." But the "Nott knitter" could not knit a knot, and Nott therefore had to tie the knots which the "Nott knitter" could not knit. But one day Nott while not tying knots for the "Nott knitter," invented an attachment for the "Nott knitter" which could knit knots and which he called the "Nott knotter." And when the "Nott knotter" was attached to the "Nott knitter" the "Nott knotter" would knit the knots which the "Nott knitter" could not knit. And not a knitter could knit knots like the knots that Nott knit with the "Nott knotter" for the "Nott knitter."

Then Nott fell in love with a knitter who knitted knots with the "Nott knotter" for the "Nott knitter," and he asked her not to knit knots any longer, but be a Nott forever. But the knitter said "Nit."—Ladies' Home Journal.

HE WAS A MIGHTY KING.

If the Record on the Tomb of Sardanapalus Be True.

An ancient legend tells us that Sardanapalus was the founder of Tarsus, while others ascribe that honor to Sennacherib, king of Nineveh, of whom the Bible record speaks. An interesting part of this legend about Sardanapalus, the last of the Assyrian kings, tells us that he recorded on his tomb near Anchiale, a nearby city, in one day, a feat surely worthy of any king. But the kings of those days, it must be remembered, took as much license with the record on their tombs as any Munchausen who ever lived.

We are also told that on this tomb was a statue of the king snapping his fingers, while this inscription was written beneath: "Sardanapalus, son of Anakyndaraxes, built Anchiale and Tarsus in one day. Eat, drink and play, for everything else is not worth this" (a snap of your fingers).

Whether this statue and its description are purely mythical or not, the tradition was probably current in Paul's time, as his own words indicate: "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die." What greater contrast could there be than between the strenuous, manly, undaunted apostle and the voluptuous, blase king who was said to have founded the city where, hundreds of years later, St. Paul was born?—Christian Herald.

Discusses Intricate Questions.

Few citizens have even heard of the American Mathematical society, to say nothing of the fact that its doings in the science of figures have been of value to European savants. And yet the society has been in existence for many years, has a membership of 710, including sixty-six life members, publishes essays and textbooks on mathematics and has a library of 4,902 volumes. The society discusses with ease such complex problems as the restricted problem of three bodies, the fourth dimension, the Fredholm determinant, covariant curves of the plane rational quintic and cyclic systems of osculating circles of curves on a surface. The last subject does not refer to kissing. —Washington Star.

Face Peeling Easy
Blonde or Brunette

"The blonde's complexion fades quickly because her skin is extraordinarily thin and fine," says Mme. Lina Cavalieri. "The brunette's, as a rule, is the reverse. The skin is thicker and has a tendency to an oily appearance."

For either the faded blonde's skin or the brunette's oily or sallow complexion, the best remedy is ordinary mercolized wax. Used every night, this will give you an entirely new complexion within about a week's time. The wax gradually peels off the worn-out surface skin, with all its defects, a little each day, without affecting the delicate underskin in the least. The latter will have the exquisitely beautiful glow of youth—indeed, one may readily lose ten or fifteen years from her age, so far as appearance goes, by a course of this simple treatment. The wax, obtainable at any drug store, is applied like cold cream.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Graduate's Story

By EUNICE BLAKE

"This coeducation of the sexes is turning out just as I predicted," said Edmund Chase, a middle aged gentleman with a family of sons and daughters growing up about him.

"Cases of impropriety are not of frequent occurrence," replied his friend Hiscox. "I don't know that I ever heard of one."

"No, it's not that. Young persons are naturally good—many of them much better than when they grow older. It's the imp of mischief that is in them at that time of their lives."

"How do you know so much about it?"

"How do I know it? Why, man, I've been to college. I didn't go to a co-ed institution. My alma mater was for men alone, but there was a girls' college not ten miles away. We were thinking so much about how to worry the faculty of that institution that we had little time for study. I went to college at sixteen, and in all the Greek dramas and such learned performances I was invariably selected for a girl's part. My chum, Billy Fitzgerald, was another fellow cast for feminine parts, and, when dressed to go on, no one could ever tell us for boys with a magnifying glass and a searchlight. What with rehearsing and playing our parts before audiences we learned to act the girl perfectly, even to disguising our voices.

"At Jones college—ours was Green; I'm a Green man, you know—they have an astronomical observatory. One night in the week the class in astronomy visited the observatory for a look at the heavenly bodies. It occurred to me that it would be a good scheme to dress as a girl and go in with the crowd. I had a cousin in Jones, and when she came to the term in which she could take astronomy as an elective I persuaded her to choose that study. So, you see, what Madge knows about the stars is due to my wish to play my prank. Good reason, wasn't it?

"I took Billy into the scheme with me, and one day Madge told the professor of astronomy that she was expecting her sister for a few days and would like to have her look through the telescope when the class visited the observatory. The professor gave the desired permission, and it happened—just happened, you know—that another girl of the class, Lou Tisdale, had a sister come to visit her at the same time, and she, too, asked and was granted permission for her sister to see the stars.

"When the night came round Tom Rawlins got wind of what we were going to do and declared that if we didn't take him in he would give the whole thing away. Tom was halfback on the football team and no more fitted to personate a woman than a gazelle. We tried to dissuade him, but it was no use. He got himself up as best he could, and Billy and I put a few feminine touches on him to help him out. We three fellows went to the observatory on the night in question—it happened to be clear—and all walked in with the crowd.

"There was a little telescope screwed on to the big one, called a finder. It had a big field of view so as to find the object wanted. One of the senior class who was making a specialty of astronomy had charge of the instrument, and when it came my turn she looked through the finder while I put my eye to the big tube. I was so interested at the proximity of her cheek that I didn't see any stars. But I controlled myself, and when Billy went up to have a look he did the same.

"If Tom had behaved himself and kept his mouth shut we would have all got out scot free and no harm done. What did he do when his turn came to look but blurt out in that confounded gruff voice of his:

"'I want to see Venus.'

"There was a babel of feminine voices at the time, but Tom's sonorous request sounded like a blow on a bass drum. There was no more doubt that the speaker was a man than that the earth was turning on its axis. Billy and I were, of course, scared to death and if we had had Tom where we could have punished him we would have beaten the life out of him. But we got even with him, for when the professor asked him who he was and what he was doing there in disguise I set up a soprano about: 'The villain! How dare he!' which Billy followed up with, 'Girls, let's put him out!'

"The students didn't know that Tom was ejected by two men. They could not have done it themselves, nor could we if, when he showed fight, I hadn't whispered in his ear, 'You get out of here mighty quick or you'll be a cut man tomorrow!' My voice called him to his senses, and he suffered us to hustle him out without resistance. Then Billy and I went up to the professor and said we were deeply grieved that the incident had happened while we were being kindly favored by the university and sincerely hoped that it would not interfere with further favors to strangers.

"The matter made a big stir in Jones college, but since Tom's identity was known only to Billy and me and we didn't tell he was never found out.

"No; I'm not in favor of the coeducation of the sexes or even in educating them contiguously."

"What college did you say yours was?" asked Mr. Hiscox.

"Green. I was a Green boy."

"Oh!"

Tents In India.

The use of tents in India is so extensive that catering to the demand has become one of the most interesting and important industries in that empire. The chief centre of manufacture is at Cawnpore, which has the largest tent factories in the world and not only does an enormous domestic business, but also exports very largely to other countries, including the United Kingdom, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Siam, the Strait Settlements, Egypt and Africa.

Why Gibbon Wrote In French.

A letter from Gibbon to Hume has lately come to light and explains why the great historian wrote in French. "The five years (from sixteen to twenty-one) which I passed in Switzerland formed my style as well as my ideas. I write in French because I think in French, and strange as it may seem, I can say with some shame but with no affectation, that it would be a matter of difficulty to me to compose in my native language."

He Had the Bill.

Tom (in restaurant)—Excuse me, old man, but would you mind paying my check? I haven't anything but a forty dollar bill. Jack—A forty dollar bill! Why, I never heard of a bill of that denomination. Tom—Here it is—a bill from my tailor!—Chicago News.

Contrasts in Mexico.

Perhaps nowhere else in the world is there a country so full of contrasts as Mexico. Here you will see a Mexican halfbreed barefooted wearing a dollar pair of trousers, a fifty cent shirt and a ten dollar sombrero. There at a single glance and within the length of a single city block you may see an Indian cargador, a donkey cart, an oxcart, a carriage, a railroad train a street car and a motorcar—almost every type of locomotion since Adam. You may tread the burning sands of a tropical desert with a wet of perpetual snow of towering mountains still upon your shoes. You may take a single railway journey of thirty-six hours in which the people you see at the railroad station will be dressed in four different weights of clothing. Everywhere you turn there is contrast, high lights and deep shadows.—William Joseph Showalter in National Geographic Magazine.

Pirates.

"Father, are all the pirates dead?"

"No, my son. They now run the coat checking privileges at the hotels and restaurants."—Town Topics.

A WEAK CHESTED BOY

"My boy Frank seemed weak-chested and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Ninga, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him, until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and found it to be exactly what was wanted to cure him." No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

And never think of big black bears
Nor ghosts when I've put out the light.

When I've been bad I wish that I'd
Not have to go to bed at all,
Because big black things seem to be
All ready to jump out at me
From everywhere along the hall.

Seven Wonders of the World.

The seven wonders of ancient times were the pyramids of Egypt, the hanging gardens of Babylon, the temple of Diana at Ephesus, the statue of Jupiter by Phidias, the mausoleum of Artemisia and the Colossus of Rhodes. Seven wonders of the modern world have been given as the wireless telegraph, the telephone, the aeroplane, radium, antiseptics, spectrum analysis and X rays.—New York American.

AFRAID SHE WAS DYING

Suffered Terribly Until She Took "Fruit-a-tives"

ST. JEAN DE MATHA, JAN. 27th, 1914.

"After suffering for a long time with Dyspepsia, I have been cured by "Fruit-a-tives". I suffered so much that I would not dare eat for I was afraid of dying. Five years ago, I received samples of "Fruit-a-tives". I did not wish to try them for I had little confidence in them but, seeing my husband's anxiety, I decided to do so and at once I felt relief. Then I sent for three boxes and I kept improving until I was cured. While sick, I lost several pounds, but after taking "Fruit-a-tives", I quickly regained what I had lost. Now I eat, sleep and digest well—in a word, I am completely cured, thanks to "Fruit-a-tives".

BRITISH WARSHIPS IN NORTH SEA FIGHT.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Reports have been received of naval engagements in the North Sea.

The wounded are to be taken ashore at Cromarty, Scotland.

The latest message says that the British ships were engaged.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—(Flash) — The War Office here officially admits that Germany has declared war on Britain.

GERMANS INVADE FRANCE AT TWO POINTS.

PARIS. Aug. 4—Germans have penetrated French territory at two points. The first army entered Longsaville, in the department of Meurthe-Et-Moselle, part of old Lorraine, near Longwy, and later invaded Circy-Sur-Vesouze in the same department.

The German entry into the Duchy of Luxemburg was headed by thirty-five automobiles filled with officers, these being followed by cavalry in force.

Several fresh violations of French territory by the German troops were reported to-day. Detachments visited outlying farms at Lepuix, near Belfort, and requisitioned cattle.

Britain Has Waited But is Ready

With her customary deliberation, Britain has waited until the last moment; but now she is ready to strike —and strike hard.

Whether her entrance into the conflict at this time will be able to offset the advantage gained by the quick blow struck by the Germans, is a matter upon which military experts differ.

BRITAIN READY TO STRIKE.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Striking like a thunderbolt, Germany has gained an early advantage in the European warfare. Hurling her troops into Russia and invading the neutral Duchy of Luxemburg, she has occupied points of strategic value.

King George Wires Personal Message to North Sea Fleet with Assurance of Confidence

Crowds Cheer the King's Proclamation

SWEDEN WILL BE NEUTRAL

London, Aug. 5.—Flash.--At One a.m., London time, King George wired personal message to Battle Fleet sailing against German arms assuring them of British confidence.

KING GEORGE READ MOBILIZATION ORDER

LONDON, Aug. 4. — A proclamation by King George, commanding the mobilisation of the British Army, was read to-day from the steps of the Royal Exchange. A huge crowd cheered and the British National Anthem was sung.

HOLLAND'S DYKE REPORTED BROKEN.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Germany has sent an ultimatum to Holland demanding the right to use Dutch territory in operations against France.

Holland refused to answer Germany's ultimatum, declaring that her attitude has already been clearly stated.

It is reported that Holland has opened her sea dykes to flood the country and stop the German invaders.

GERMANY'S QUICK REPLY.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Germany's reply to Sir Edward Grey's speech, indicating the British attitude in regard to the violation of Belgian territory by Germany, was a second ultimatum from Berlin to Brussels, saying Germany was prepared to carry through her plans by force of arms, if necessary.

The British Government was officially informed by Belgium to-day that German troops had invaded Belgium and that the violation of that country's neutrality, which the British Foreign Secretary yesterday intimated must be followed by action on the part of the British, has become an accomplished fact. . . . . .

GERMAN TROOPS MOVED QUICKLY.

The open breach between France and Germany was rapidly followed by the appearance of German troops on French territory, and by an incursion of bomb hurling German aeroplanes, which attacked the fortified town of Luneville without doing anything more than damage a roadway.

French airmen and outposts were also reported to have made raids on German territory.

A more tangible occurrence was the bombardment of a French naval station at Bona, Algeria, by a German cruiser, which, however, took to its heels before doing much damage, an dis cruising around the Mediterranean Sea, where considerable numbers of French war vessels are looking for such marauders.

SWEDEN WILL REMAIN NEUTRAL.

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 4.—It was stated to-day that both Germany and Russia made inquiries on Sunday as to whether Sweden would remain neutral. Germany's note was brief, merely demanding to know whether Sweden was "for or against us."

The Ministers declined to say what reply was given, but they are preparing to defend the nation's neutrality.

The German ultimatum to Belgium created a deep impression here and it is believed that if a similar ultimatum was addressed to Sweden she would follow the Belgian example in refusing to aid Germany.

A bill proposing a moratorium was introduced in Parliament to-day.

There are 3,000 Russians here, with no possibility of their being able to return home.

Word was received here to-day of the arrest at Oestersund in North Sweden, of an Austrian woman, who is accused of being a spy in the service of Russia. She is said to have travelled throughout Norway on horseback. Photos of the Norwegian fortresses and maps were found in her possession.

SCENE OF ANOTHER WATERLOO?

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Belgium, which was the scene of the last great world struggle just about 100 years ago, when Waterloo was fought, bids fair to be the theatre of the most gigantic land battle in history when British troops pour on to the Continent.

MISTAKEN IDENTITY O FEVSSELS.

FALMOUTH, Eng., Aug. 4.—The Kronprinzessin Cecilie of the Hamburg-American Line, which left New York on 25th July for Hamburg, put in here to-day.

The steamer Kronprinzessin Cecilie of the Hamburg-American Line should not be confused with the Kronprinzessin Cecilie of the North German Lloyd, which arrived at Bar Harbous, Maine, to-day.

BRITAIN BUYS TWO DREADNOUGHTS AND TWO TORPEDO-DESTROYERS.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Britain has purchased the two Turkish Dreadnoughts and the two Chilian torpedo-destroyers that are now under construction in British naval yards.

TORONTO WILD OVER THE NEWS.

TORONTO, Aug. 4.—This city went wild over the declaration of war. In the theatres, when it was announced, whole audiences stood up and cheered for the King and sang the National Anthem. . . . . .

Wireless Saved Cecelie's Gold

BAR HARBOUR, Me., Aug. 4.—Capt. Polack, of the Cecelie, said that his greatest apprehension of capture had been occasioned by a wireless message which he intercepted Saturday onthe first day of the return trip.

This message, sent by the captain, of the French liner Savoie, said the French armoured cruiser was off the Newfoundland coast guarding the fisheries in that neighbourhood.

"I was sure," said the captain, "that this vessel had been apprised of our whereabouts, but I knew that when they were it would mean certain capture unless we could circle them. The fog was in our favour."

Yesterday the captain caught a wireless rfom the British cruiser Essex, warning other boats of the Cecilie's approximate position.

THIN PEOPLE CAN INCREASE WEIGHT

Thin men and women who would like to increase their weight with 10 or 15 pounds of healthy "stay there" fat should try eating a little Sargol with their meals for a while and note results. Here is a good test worth trying. First weigh yourself and measure yourself. Then take Sargol—one tablet with every meal—for two weeks. Then weigh and measure again. It isn't a question of how you look or feel or what your friends say and think. The scales and the tape measure will tell their own story, and mean any thin man or woman can easily add from five to eight pounds in the first fourteen days by following this simple direction. And best of all, the new flesh stays put.

Sargol does not of itself make fat, but mixing with your food, it turns the fats, sugars and starches of what you have eaten, into rich, ripe fat producing nourishment for the tissues and blood—prepares it in an easily assimilated form which the blood can readily accept. All this nourishment now passes from your body as waste. But Sargol stops the waste and does it quickly and makes the fat-producing contents of the very same meals you are eating now develop pounds and pounds of healthy flesh between your skin and bones. Sargol is safe, pleasant, efficient and inexpensive.

Druggists sell it in large boxes—forty tablets to a package—on a guarantee of weight increase or money back.

2 British Cruisers Sent to Canadian Waters

Two East Cruisers Despatched From British Home Fleet to Protect Canadian Merchantmen and Dispose of the Enemy Hovering Off the Coast.

FURTHER REPORTS OF A SEA FIGHT

London Aug. 5-Special Cable-With the object of having commerce resumed at the earliest possible moment, it is understood that the Admiralty has detached several fast cruisers from the Home fleet to go to Canadian and United States coasts and give battle to German cruisers which are a menace to British passenger and trading vessels. It is also felt necessary to furnish abundant naval protection to Canada's Atlantic coast.

FURTHER REPORTS OF CANNONADING

PORTLAND, Maine, Aug. 5. — Heavy firing off this coast indicates that the English and French are at battle with German ships in these waters.

2,000 FRENCH RESERVISTS SAIL

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—The French liner La Lorraine with two thousand French reservists on board, sailed from this port to-day for France. She was given a hearty send off by the whistles of one hundred French, English and American vessels in the harbour.

KING'S MESSAGE TO THE FLEET

"At this grave moment in our national history I send to you and through you to the officers and men of the fleets of which you have assumed command, assurances of my confidance that under your direction they will revive and renew the old glories of our Royal Navy and prove once again the sure shield of Britain and of her Empire in this hour of trial."

BRITAIN DECLARED WAR—NOT GERMANY

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The early announcement that Germany had declared war on Great Britain was due to an error in the Admiralty's statement. A Berlin despatch states that shortly after 7 o'clock this evening Sir William Edward Goschen, the British Ambassador went to the Foreign Office and announced that Great Britain had declared war with Germany. He then demanded his passports.

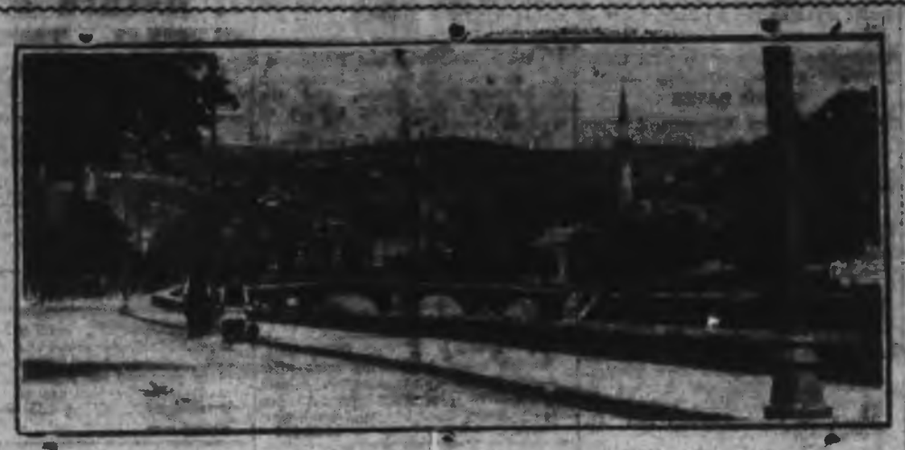
AIRSHIP SOURCE OF TERROR TO THE TOWNSPEOPLE

PARIS, Aug. 4.—French aviators were despatched from Nancy to-day to locate the Zeppelin dirgible that dropped the bombs on the town of Luneville. There is intense indignation in official quarters over the action of the Germans. While it is admitted that in war it is the privilege of an enemy to inflict every possible damage on the fighting forces of his opponents, the dropping of bombs on unprotected towns without warning is declared to be a violation of the rules of civilized warfare.

A New High Explosive.

According to the reports available here that bombs dropped at Luneville explosive, and were particularly dead explosive, and were particularly deadly. The fifteen soldiers killed are said to literally have been blown to pieces. Bodies were rent into small pieces, and heads and limbs torn into shreds.

It is stated that the Germans tried to destroy the historic Palace of Lorraine, but that their bombs missed the mark.



SCENE OF THE ASSASSINATION WHICH STARTED EUROPEAN WAR.—Sarajevo, Bosnia, near which the Austrian heir was killed. It was here that Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his consort were assassinated. This episode was made the excuse for Austria's declaration of war on Servia. From Sarajevo 150,000 Austrian troops are reported operating against Servia.

WAR STRIKES CHEESE MEN

Large Number of Cheese Boarded at This Morning's Meeting of Cheese Board Did Not Get Any Purchasers

WAR SCARE THE CAUSE

Sixteen hundred and forty cheese were offered at the meeting of the local cheese board this morning, and not a bid was made for one pound of the dairy product. The two buyers present, were Mr. Norton and Mr. Gillespie, and both stated that they had received advices and instructions not to buy any cheese on account of the grave war situation. The cheese could not be shipped, as the port of Montreal was closed, besides that, even if the whole amount could be moved, the bankers are refusing to buy exchange, so that it would be impossible to do business anyway.

Both buyers, as well as Mr. Publow, Chief Dairy Instructor and Sanitary Inspector for Eastern Ontario, advised the manufacturers to store the cheese in a reputable cold storage house, either at home in Peterborough or at outside places. Then when the situation brightened up the cheese could be sold. Mr. Publow cautioned the factories against sacrificing their products, assuring the millers that all dairy products would be required before long at a good price. He also advised them to make a class of cheese that will keep well, and urged the milk producers to supply the milk to the factories in a sound condition.

The following is a list of the factories and the amount of cheese they offered:

TRIP TO WINDSOR IS CANCELLED

Contemplated Outing of 57th Regt. on Labour Day is Off For This Season

MEETING LAST NIGHT

At a meeting of the officers of the 57th Regiment held last night it was decided to cancel the proposition of a trip on Labour Day for two reasons. The question has been under consideration for several weeks and reports were submitted last night from the O. C. companies that the men would be satisfied to take their pay less the portion required for regimental expenses.

Owing to the fact that so many men are out of work, and that there is a general scarcity of money, it was considered advisable to put this proposition to the men with the result that the three to four thousand dollars that would have been expended on a trip will be paid to the men.

Apart from this the present crisis puts the possibility of a pleasure trip on Labour Day out of the question.

Arrangements will be made to issue the pay at as early a date as possible, not later than Labour Day, when possibly a regimental rifle match will be held.

French Canada Stands Firm For The Empire

Enthusiasm and Patriotic Desire to Uphold the Empire Sweeps Over Quebec

MONTREAL, Aug. 5.—French Canada has rallied to the flag, and the entire population is united now that she knows Great Britain is fighting in order to meet her moral obligations and retain that world-wide reputation for integrity she has always possessed.

In the eastern part of the Dominion, and especially in this province, there has always to be considered the viewpoint of the two races—the English and the French-speaking. When any great question of national interest has to be considered this whole-hearted support, apparent on every side, is something that has gladdened the hearts of the English population here, and has aroused enthusiasm for the country's cause to fever pitch.

This was the viewpoint expressed by Col. Ostell, commander of the 65th Regiment here. Here is what he had to say on the matter when asked whether his regiment was in condition to obey the call to arms:

French Militia is Ready.

"We are prepared to do our duty. If continents are called the men of the 65th will not be backward. They are aroused to the seriousness of the situation. In my opinion, the Canadian militia has much work to do here in Canada to protect public works. Canada's highest duty it seems to me, is to be prepared to feed Great Britain. I have had many offers from citizens of old, and many have offered their services to the regiment."

The broader view of the whole situation is being taken by the French press. They hold that the war is being forced on to Great Britain, who is fighting for European and world-peace, and not merely for the re-conquest of Alsace-Lorraine. It has been taken as a matter of course that all Canada would give help if needed.

ONE NURSE VOLUNTEERS

Local Graduate Nurses' Association Has Been Asked For Assistance

SEVERAL MAY GO

Miss Mowry, Superintendent of the Queen Mary Hospital, has received a communication from Miss Gunn of the Toronto General Hospital, asking for volunteers from the Peterborough branch of the Graduate Nurses' Association, for service in the event of them being needed in the present war. Any local nurses wishing to enrol are asked to communicate with Miss Mowry at 189 Rubidge Street, or telephone 491.

Miss Mowry stated to the Examiner this morning that one young lady had already volunteered, but she did not care to divulge her name for a day or so, when probably more will have volunteered.

Price of Sugar Advances 10c.

Local grocers have received notification of an advance of 10 per cwt. in the price of sugar. The advance is due to the War situation, as all sugar is being held in the Old Country, thus cutting off the competition of the English supply. This follows a similar advance in the English and American markets.

The First Call For 25,000 Men

COL. CLEGG, THE COMMANDING OFFICER OF THE 57TH REGIMENT, HAS RECEIVED UNOFFICIAL INFORMATION THAT THE CANADIAN MILITIA DEPARTMENT HAS ISSUED AN ORDER FOR THE MOBILIZATION OF 25,000 TROOPS. THIS NOTICE HAS BEEN SENT TO ALL THE DIVISIONS OF THE CANADIAN MILITIA AND COL. CLEGG WILL LIKELY RECEIVE THE OFFICIAL INTELLIGENCE TO-MORROW.

ASQUITH TO ASK FOR ANOTHER $500,000,000

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The resignations of Morley, Burns and Masterman have been accepted by Asquith. Earl Kitchener and Lord Haldane had a conference just before the Cabinet meeting to-day.

In the House of Commons to-day Asquith announced that he would ask the Commons to-morrow to vote further credit of five hundred million dollars.

London Aug. 5---Apparently Germany's plans of advancing columns of its army into France have been checked to-day by Belgian forces, while the Kaiser's Russian expedition has not progressed far. Here skirmishing is reported in the North Sea between German and British scouting vessels, but nothing important has yet developed.

ANOTHER CABLE CUT—LESS NEWS

LONDON, Aug. 5.—(Special Cable.)—The cutting of the German-United States cable this morning by H. M. S. Berwick will still further curtail news for the United States and Canadian newspapers. It means that all the news from the war zone must now come through Great Britain, and therefore be censored by British officers.

INCREASE IN PRICE OF FLOUR AND SUGAR

Notice Issued by Local Firm to This Effect—Prices May Soar Higher

The price of flour and sugar has been increased locally each 10c a hundred. A local mill has issued a notice to the effect that pastry flour is $2.85 a hundred from to-day, or an increase of 10c. As far as can be ascertained, however, the present increase is not caused by the war, but is on account of present scarcity. Dealers say that before the new wheat is ground the prices will soar higher. The increase in sugar is the usual increase at preserving time.

With regard to the influence of war on prices, the Toronto Globe says: "Another evidence of the effect of the war on values of foodstuffs was had yesterday when prices of Manitoba flours were advanced 30 cents per barrel.

"While export trade at the moment was paralyzed on account of the heavy war risks and difficulties of transportation, it was expected that some arrangement would be made whereby shipments of grain and flour to the United Kingdom would be guaranteed against loss by seizure at sea. This tended to make the market firm, and when there was added to this an advancing wheat market and a strong domestic demand, higher prices were the inevitable result.

Some millers predicted that further advance would follow closely the outbreak of hostilities between Britain and Germany, provided that a satisfactory outlet could be secured for Canada's surplus.

HOW TROUBLE BINDS.

How frivolous and futile become the intrigues of partisans and factionists in times of real trouble. The Ulster agitation and the corresponding and resultant Nationalist reply have died down like a sudden capful of wind. In face of the danger to Great Britain and the Empire, and the call to duty of every Britisher and member of the Empire, the voice of warring contention has died away and is merged into an enthusiastic chorus of determination to meet the duty of the hour.

The war is on and Britain is into it on sea and shore. The British Government has wisely manoeuvred to place upon Germany the onus of declaring war on Britain as she declared war upon Russia and France. This places Britain in the right in this regard as she is in the right in the abstract, by virtue of the interests she represents. If it were needed, this attitude of Great Britain, have not only solidified world-wide sentiment in her favour, but have served to solidify every nationality and intrest in favour of using every effort to win the victory in the present tremendous crisis.

We were told that Ulster's violent attitude towards Home Rule was to prevent the dismemberment of the Empire, which was threatened by the extension of autonomous government to Ireland. In answer to this Sir Edward Grey in his epochal speech in the House of Commons, said that a united Ireland was one of the bright spots in the present crisis. He stated that the Orangemen of Ulster, and the Nationalists have buried their differences and were standing solidly behind the Government. Those who doubted the loyalty and bona fides of the Irish Nationalists will find food for thought and reorganization of opinion on reading the following paragraphs of the speech of John Redmond, leader of the Irish Nationalists, who spoke in Parliament after Sir Edward Grey. It shows that Ireland is united in the crisis. It is no wonder, as the report says, that John Redmond "electrified the House" when he said:

> "Ireland will be defended by her own sons. The Protestants of the north and the Catholics of the south will stand shoulder to shoulder in this great national crisis.
>
> "There is a possibility that from the present situation may arise a result which will be good for the future welfare and integrity of the Empire."

We have further evidence, of loyalty to the Empire, appreciation of the importance of its stability to the welfare and happiness of all the peoples sheltered under its flag, furnished here at home. While the whole of Canada has, in spirit and impulse, sprung to arms, nowhere more than in good old French-Canadian Quebec have enthusiasm, patriotism and a determination to lend personal and material aid swept over the people. French Canada has rallied to the colours with the elan and feverish enthusiasm characteristic of the gallant sons of Gaul.

We are all committed to the work, and whatever is before us we will face it with determination and courage, with every effort at our command and every resource in courage and material. Germany has long been ripening for retributton, and it will come through the united action of every section of the British Empire and the powerful allies, that have been forced by Germany's insolent and arrogant and aggression into the terrible concert of war, inconceivable in its horrors and fierceness, and devastating effects, no matter to whom falls the ultimate victory.

THE MORATORIUM.

Moratorium, a word much in evidence to-day, is little known for the simple reason that it has never hitherto been required. It is derived from the Latin verb, morare, to delay, and in law means a legal title to delay the making of a due payment—hence it has been extended to include any act of a legislature which suspends payment of legal debts. Britain—really London—has been long the great international exchange, the clearing-house where the debts and credits of world trade are balanced and settled.

This war leaves London in a position which prevents Germany, for example, from paying its accepted bills of exchange, which usually amount to $70,000,000 or $350,000,000. These represent imports, and are discounted in London and the course of trade requires a regular and uninterrupted movement of credit which leaves only a comparatively small sum to be squared by actual gold remittances. But so intricate and interdependent is the course of trade that when any large avenue is closed it spells ruin to all in the direct line of movement. Hence the moratorium, which in effect is an extension of the days of grace for an indefinite period. No bills of exchange become payable and the result is relief to every one with the minimum amount of hardship to each and of danger to the general fabric of credit.—Toronto World.

How The Present Great War Was Brought On

The scraps of cabled news from the various European capitals, when pieced together, make fairly clear the course of events to date.

Austria-Hungary suddenly made certain demands of Servia, on pain of invasion if they were not complied with by a certain hour. The Servian Government promptly complied with all but one, and offered to submit that one to arbitration. Austria-Hungary not merely pronounced this reply unsatisfactory, but at once invaded Servia. The invasion appears to have been virtually abandoned, probably for two reasons: The Servians have put up a discouragingly strong resistance, and Russia's attack on Austria-Hungary has made it necessary to withdraw most of her troops to defend her own frontiers. It seems at present probable that Servia will remain comparatively unmolested during the rest of the war; which goes to indicate that her alleged offence was its occasion, not its cause.

Russia, while carrying on diplomatic negotiations with Austria-Hungary for the purpose of preventing the dismemberment of Servia, proceeded to mobilize her whole military force. As the Austro-Hungarian Government could not or would not give satisfactory assurances on the territorial question, Russian troops were sent across the frontier, and thus a check was given to the invasion of Servia.

Germany was "surprised" by the action of Russia, but soon recovered sufficiently to send her an ultimatum demanding, within a few hours, an explanation of her intentions in placing troops along the German frontier. As no satisfactory explanation was given by Russia, Germany declared war in accordance with the ultimatum. Russia, at present aided by Servia and Montenegro, and with good hope of substantial aid from Greece and Roumania, has cheerfully entered into what may prove a life and death struggle with Austria-Hungary and Germany.

Germany, having declared war against Russia, proceeded to make war on France without declaring it. According to the latest authentic despatches she has chosen to avoid facing the French fortified line of defence by violating the neutrality of the Principality of Luxemburg. This is equivalent to making war, not merely on this little State, but on all the States that guaranteed its independence in 1867. It appears that by turning the flank of the French defence Germany has been able to send troops into France at two points, and that there has been a commencement of actual hostilities, with what immediate results remains to be seen.

Great Britain, one of the guarantors of the independence of Luxemburg, is in this way being drawn into the vortex of war. The most important announcement, so far as Great Britain is concerned, was made to the House of Commons by Sir Edward Grey as Foreign Minister. It was to the effect that as the French fleet has been left in the Mediterranean to protect British as well as French interests there it is incumbent on Great Britain to see that the western and northwestern shores of France are protected as far as practicable from attacks by hostile fleets. Germany has therefore been warned that any attempt on the part of her warships to either enter or leave the North Sea will be the signal for the instant and constant use of the whole naval power of Great Britain to render them powerless for mischief against France. The tendency of the violation of the neutrality of the smallest independent State in Europe will be to turn against Germany the whole force of public opinion throughout Europe, and possibly to constrain some of the minor States to enter the arena of war against her.—The Globe.

Congestion of London Streets

In spite of the taxicab and motor-bus, London's traffic is still a problem, as was admitted in the House of Commons last week, when a new bill for its regulation was read for the first time. Ten or twelve years ago the congestion of London streets had reached an amazing point. Blocks of twenty minutes or half an hour, during which all traffic was at a standstill and no vehicle could move an inch, were quite common in the busy streets, especially in the city and in the business quarter to the north and east of it. The motor-bus and taxicab put an end to all that, and until lately a stoppage of more than half a minute or at most a minute was almost unknown. But anybody who has made a hobby of timing these stoppages must have noticed in the last few months ominous signs of a return of the old congestion. At first the increased speed of the motor traffic made up for the narrowness of most of the city streets. But the volume of traffic is increasing so rapidly that it is overtaking the new facilities. Traffic blocks of two, three, and even five minutes are becoming more and more common. In the financial district where, of course, the congestion is greatest, it is an axiom that it never pays to take a taxi, because all the traffic has to take its place in a leisurely procession. The swifter vehicle has no chance to get ahead. The most obvious reform—and one which will inevitably come—is the total prohibition of horse-drawn vehicles. The horse-drawn dray is the greatest obstruction in the London streets to-day. Its pace is about five miles an hour, and it takes a great deal of room and a great deal of time to manoeuvre in. If all the traffic was motor driven a uniform speed of twelve miles an hour would probably solve the congestion problem in the city for at least a few years to come.

THE NEWSPAPER SITUATION

Why News Must of Necessity Be Scarce

The newspaper situation is an extraordinary one. Everybody feels and knows that events of the most momentous nature are taking place at dozens of important points, but the governments concerned have placed so complete an embargo on news that nothing whatever is being received in London from correspondents, nor from the news organizations and newspapers throughout the war zone. Every government concerned is forbidding the transmission of any intelligence likely to afford the slightest assistance to a hostile power.

The newspapers are defrauded of everything except occasional short messages directly concerning the war, and even these contain but few facts that can be accepted as really definite and authentic.

TELEPHONE AND CABLE LINES CLOSED

Telephonic communication with the Continent is completely stopped in England, and all telegrams from the Continent are closely scrutinized by the official censors before despatch and again before delivery, very few being permitted to pass in any form whatever.

The newspapers are unanimous in their patriotic response to the Government's appeal to refrain from the publication of any news calculated to be of use to possible enemies of the country.

CABLEGRAMS CENSORED

All outgoing cablegrams no matter what their destination may be will be severely censored and delayed in consequence. No code words of any description are permitted and even telegraphic addresses in code are refused. All cables must bear the full name and address of the receiver and the sender.

BERLINERS (ONT.) AGAINST GERMANY

Many Teutonic Descendants Hope Kaiser Will Get a Lesson

BERLIN, Ont., Aug. 5.—The news of the declaration of war by Germany against Great Britain reached this city about 9:30 o'clock, and spread like wildfire throughout Berlin and Waterloo.

An extra edition of The Daily Telegraph had the largest sale of any extra in its history, and citizens were eager to learn the latest information regarding the world's greatest crisis.

Although this is the German centre of the Province there was wild enthusiasm when the members of the 29th Grey's Horse made their appearance on the streets. In local theatres when the news was announced, "Rule Britannia" was struck up and sung with great patriotism.

There are many teutonic descendants in this vicinity who express the opinion that Kaiser Wilhelm is to blame for the present situation, and are hopeful that he will be taught a lesson.

Many young men are anxiously awaiting the call to arms, and are ready to respond to Britain's summons if required.

LOYAL ORDER OF MOOSE

What Was Done at the Annual Gathering at Milwaukee

The Supreme Officers of the Loyal Order of Moose, and the three leading men of our local branch of the wonderful order, its growth for the past year has equalled that of any other four fraternal bodies, over 150,000 in one year. They have assumed the care of 199 orphans at their new town. They have added new fireproof buildings to the extent of $1,000,000, all of which when completed will be comensurate for the need of years to come. The great central dining hall will feed 5,000. One hundred of these orphan boys were taken to the Milwaukee Convention last week that all the assembled delegates might see the fine little fellows they are caring for.

The Convention voted $25,000 to the relief of the Salem, Mass. fire victims, all of which were members of the order; 50 were left destitute. This will give the latter $500 each. The United States Government failed to furnish relief in this instance as they believed it was needed more by some of their leading millionaires.

The local body is growing fast and bids fair to rank well with other lodges of the order in like cities. They have as many as a thousand members.

G. N. Gordon, who will hold the post of Past Dictator of the new lodge will represent the lodge at all National gatherings and at meetings of the Grand Lodge of Canada.

Mr. McWilliams, who will be installed as Dictator, will wield the gavel, having charge of all sessions, and chairman of all committees.

W. B. Warne, Vice-Dictator, assistant to the Dictator and official in charge.

Col. G. B. Griffith, International Director of the Order for Ontario, has organized many fine lodges of the order in Canada and the United States. He has done much good work for the order in its upbuilding. In the recent great convention in Milwaukee he was given charge of the military programme, and evolved the finest parade they have every held, over 5,000 men were in line, the Colonel having less than two days to complete all arrangements. A platoon of Zouaves carried off all prizes for drill work and marching. The Colonel says Milwaukee is noted for two things.—How much beer they can make—and—how much beer they can drink—between the two occupations their time is entirely employed.

Peterborough Lodge will be organized about September 15th.

MR. AND MRS. TURNER SAFE IN ENGLAND

Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons received a cablegram yesterday morning from Mr. J. J. Turner, sen., informing them that he and Mrs. Turner had arrived safely in England. The text was as follows:

"Arrived safely Sunday night—all well."

It appears from a despatch that the Cunard liner Audania, on which Mr. and Mrs. Turner sailed, was bound for Southampton, but on account of the mines in the harbour, the liner was met at sea and escorted safely into Plymouth, where all is activity.

CARPENTIER TO FIGHT FOR FRANCE

Georges Carpentier, the white champion of Europe, who recently won from Gunboat Smith, the American heavyweight, on a foul, has joined the French army as a volunteer. In shouldering a gun, however, Carpentier reduces his fighting ability to the ordinary level of a soldier with perhaps many thousand superiors as a marksman. If controversies between nations were decided with six-ounce gloves instead of bullets, Carpentier would be a commander-in-chief of the whole FFrench army. By the way, why not adopt a universal treaty compelling all countries to discard firearms and swords and take to the more manly form of fists for settling disputes?

HOUSE IS SUMMONED

Canadian Parliament to Hold Session on August 18th

CALL FOR SOLDIERS TO-DAY

OTTAWA, Aug. 5.—The Cabinet last night, after being officially informed that the Imperial Government declared a state of war against Germany, decided to call Parliament to meet in two weeks, Tuesday Aug. 18.

The Cabinet was in session all day and the Duke of Connaught, who arrived during the morning, at once entered into the deliberations of the Ministry.

The Prime Minister did not announce what proposals would be laid before Parliament. The Government would have definite proposals to make, and in addition legislation would have to be passed legalizing certain things that have had to be done.

The latter refers to various actions the Militia Department that were found urgently necessary, but are not authorized under the Militia Act.

The Minister of Militia has been empowered to carry out partial mobilization wherever necessary, and various regiments and troops have been ordered out for defence duty in various ports of the country. No general mobilization order has been decided on yet, however, and will not until it is seen just what the Imperial Government wants Canada to do.

Whether or not the Canadian Government may eventually relieve Britain of the cost of the two Turkish battleships and two Chilian destroyers which she is reported to have just purchased, it is learned on high authority that this is not one of the proposals for the consideration of which the Cabinet decided to call Parliament.

An order for the mobilization of a Canadian contingent of some 20,000 men likely will be issued to-day. The men of the permanent force have already been stationed at strategic points and altogether there are now over 4,000 men under arms at Halifax, St. John, Sydney, Quebec, Esquimalt and the cable and wireless stations.

Members of the Dominion police and other constables specially sworn in are also being placed to protect the canals, harbors and transportation routes.

At Valcartier, near Quebec, where the contingent will be assembled and given a short training, several miles of targets are being erected for practice. It is not known by the Government yet where the Canadian contingent will be used when it is sent across—whether they will accompany the Imperial expeditionary force or remain in Britain. The Imperial Government is advising Canada to make ush Orders For Ross Rifles.

QUEBEC, Aug. 5. — It is known here that the Ross rifle factory has received orders from the Government to supply 15,000 rifles. Extra men are being taken on, and the output will be increased to 1,000 per week as soon as possible. The arsenal, too, is working overtime, and guards will be placed over both.

Rumored Capture of Spies.

KINGSTON, Aug. 5. — A report brought here from Petawawa camp is to the effect that two German spies were caught sketching at Petawawa camp and that they were taken to Ottawa. One report stated the men arrived at the camp by aeroplane, but no machine could be found.

To Guard Cornwall Canal.

CORNWALL, Aug. 5. — Two officers of the Dominion police arrived in town yesterday to place a force of about two dozen special police to do duty on the Cornwall Canal during such time as there is danger through the European war. Guards will be placed at all locks for the entire length of the canal, as well as all bridges, culverts, sluiceways, wastewiers, etc., in fact at every point pertaining to the safety of the canal. The big power dam near Millerochos will also be policed. The extra guard was placed on duty last night.

LAURIER CANCELLED LIST OF MEETINGS

Says Canada Should Render Assistance to Full Extent of Power

OTTAWA, Aug. 4.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier, leader of the Opposition, who curtailed his holiday stay at Arthabaskaville, and returned to his office at the capital on account of present war crisis, gave out the following statement to the press at noon to-day:

"It appears that up to the present time Britain is not yet engaged in war. We will hope and pray that the efforts of Sir Edward Grey may yet be successful in persuading the nations of the Continent to the restoration of peace. I confess that the prospects are very doubtful. It is probable and almost certain that Britain will have to take her share in the conflict, not only for the protection of her own interests, but for the protection of France and the higher civilization of which these two nations are to-day the noblest expression. The policy of the Liberal party under such painful circumstances is well known. I have often declared that if the Mother Country were ever in danger, or if danger even threatened, Canada would render assistance to the full extent of her power.

"In view of the critical nature of the situation, I have cancelled all my meetings. Pending such a grave question there should be a truce of party strife."

Britain Won The Fight

News That Kaiser's Fleet Broke Rules of Warfare Arouses Wild Indignation in London.

GERMANY REFUSES DEMANDS

LONDON, Aug. 5.—Shortly after midnight it was announced by the War Office that Germany had declared war on Great Britain in answer to the British ultimatum concerning the neutrality of Belgium. Shortly afterwards it was announced that Great Britain had declared war on Germany. King George sent a message of confidence to the British fleet which was sailing towards the enemy with its decks cleared for action, and it is believed that a battle is now raging for the supremacy of the seas.

Great Britain declared war on Germany at an early hour this morning. The momentous declaration of the British Government for which the whole world has been waiting, came before the expiration of the time limit set by Great Britain in her ultimatum to Germany demanding a satisfactory reply on the subject of Belgian neutrality.

Germany's reply was the summary rejection of the request that Belgian neutrality should be respected.

The British Ambassador at Berlin thereupon received his passports and the British Government notified Germany that a state of war existed between the two countries.

Premier Asquith, speaking in the British Parliament of the British ultimatum to Germany to keep her hands off Belgium, said: "His Majesty's Government is bound to protest against this violation of a treaty to which Germany was a party in common with England.

"We cannot regard the German reply as in any sense a satisfactory communication.

"We have asked that the German reply to that request and a satisfactory answer to our telegram should be given before midnight.

"We understand that Belgium categorically refused to assent to a flagrant violation of the law of nations."

All Europe is now in arms. On the one hand Austria-Hungary and Germany are opposed by Russia, France and Great Britain, Servia and Montenegro.

Italy has declared her neutrality but is mobilizing. Belgium, Holland and Switzerland have mobilized. The German demand that the Belgian Government should permit the free passage of German troops through Belgium was answered by hasty preparations to resist such an advance across Belgian territory.

Sweden has made no answer to enquiries from Russia and Germany regarding her attitude, but is preparing to defend her neutrality. Japan is making ready to live up to her alliance with Great Britain in case of certain eventualities. Spain is reported to be preparing a proclamation of neutrality.

Austria-Hungary for the present has retired from her campaign against Servia for the purpose of holding back Russia, and Servia has mobilized with the reported intention of invading Bosnia.

Germany has violated the law of nations once again. Before war had been declared between Germany and Great Britain, the German North Sea fleet assumed the offensive, and attacked scattered units of the British fleet. When the news became known in London the indignation of the populace knew no bounds. An attempt was made to wreck the German Embassy by thousands of infuriated citizens, and thousands of metropolitan police, including the whole of the mounted force, struggled for over an hour and a half against overwhelming odds. The building was partially wrecked, but nobody was seriously hurt among its occupants, although scores of people in the crowd were trampled by the police, who repeatedly charged the mob.

French Named Inspector-General.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—Field Marshal Sir John French, after a brief estrangement from the army as a result of the Ulster incident, has been appointed inspector-general.

The mobilization of the army reserves and territorials has been conducted principally by motor buses.

WHAT OTHER WAR COSTS

The voting of $525,000,000 by the British Parliament for emergency purposes brings out clearly the tremendous amount which the nations will have to pay for the present hostilities.

Some of the important wars are estimated to have cost as follows:

1793 - 1815—Britain and France	$6,250,000,000
1853-5—France - Austria.	225,000,000
1854-6—Crimea	1,525,000,000
1859-5—France - Austria	165,000,000
1863-5—U.S. Civil War.	3,700,000,000
1866—Austria - Prussia.	100,000,000
1870-1—France-Germany	1,560,000,000
1876-7—Russia - Turkey.	950,000,000
1899-1902—Boer War	1,250,000,000

TWOULD BE GREAT.

Instead of putting in our winter coal, wouldn't it be great if we could put in a few tons of this July weather.

CENSORS IN FULL CONTROL NEWS GATHERING DIFFICULT

War Correspondents' Reports Are Held Up—Messages Denuded of War News.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The newspaper situation is an extraordinary one. Everybody feels, and knows that events of the most momentous nature are taking place on the Russo-German frontier in the Baltic Sea, in Servia, on the Franco-German frontier and at dozens of other important points, but the governments concerned have placed so complete an embargo on news that nothing whatever is being received in London from the score of war correspondents who have been sent out nor from the regular correspondents of the news organizations and newspapers throughout the war zone. Even official news is being rigidly censored and every government concerned is forbidding the transmission of any intelligence likely to afford the slightest assistance to a hostile power.

London Papers Blank.

In consequence the London papers present a curious appearance, being denuded of everything except occasional short messages directly concerning the war and even these contain but few facts that can be accepted as definite and authentic for the remainder of the papers are made up of speculation, conjecture of opinions and official statements issued in London.

Telephonic Lines Closed.

Telephonic communication with the continent has completely stopped, and all telegrams from the continent are being closely scrutinized by official censors before being despatched and again before delivery, very few being permitted to pass in any form whatever.

All domestic news concerning military and naval movements also has to be submitted to censorship being published and the newspapers have been unanimous in their patriotic response to the Government's appeal to refrain from the publication of any news calculated to be of use to possible enemies of the country.

Cables Censored.

Furthermore, all outgoing cables, no matter what their destination may be, are being severely censored and entirely delayed in consequence. No code words of any description are being permitted and even telegraphic addresses in code are being refused, all cables having to bear the full name and address of receiver and sender.

PRESENTATION TO MR. GEO. ROGERS

Gold Medal Given Him in Recognition of His Bravery

Last evening at Frankford, Mr. Geo. Rogers, son of M. R. B. Rogers, of this city was presented with a gold medal, in recognition of his bravery, in his attempt to save the life of a young engineer who was in deep water and unable to swim. It will be remembered that Mr. Rogers had recovered the body in less than ten minutes, but efforts at resuscitation proved of no avail, in view of the fact that the young man succumbed to a weak heart, the doctor stating that death was not due to drowning.

The presentation of the medal was made by Dr. Malone, of Frankford, at a largely attended gathering.

Marble Dealers Conclude Convention By Enjoyable Trip To Rice Lake

Sensational Baseball Match Was Feature of the Trip--Members of the Association Left With Favourable Impressions of the City

The Ontario Marble and Granite Dealers' Association concluded their convention yesterday with a trip to Rice Lake. All admitted to have had an enjoyable time, and spoke appreciatingly of the of the river and its scenery.

The main feature of the day's outing was a baseball match between the Wholesalers and the Retailers, in which the former won by a score of 27—7. The batteries were: For the Wholesalers, Messrs. T. M. Howard, of Peterborough; H. S. McLeod, Peterborough, and Ritchie, of Toronto, pitchers; Mr. C. A. Metcalfe, of Sainsville, Ohio, catcher; for the Retailers, Mr. George Creber, of Toronto, pitcher; Mr. Thomas Shaw, of Shawville, Que., catcher. The results were as follows:

Wholesalers—T. M. Howard, Peterborough; C. A. Metcalfe, Sainsville, Que.; W. Forbes, London; T. D. McKennie, Toronto; J. H. Watson, Chicago; H. S. McLeod, Peterborough; F. A. T. Parsons, Toronto; E. Hampton, Stanstead, and Ritchie, of Toronto.

Retailers—R. Worthy, of Brampton; G. Creber, Toronto; M. G. Wardell, Toronto; M. Jones, Ottawa; A. J. Gould, Uxbridge; C. Wensley, Campbellford; Thomas Shaw, Shawville, Que.; J. Price, of Orillia, and R. M. Gullet, of Toronto.

Now the players did not like half measures, so they selected a diamond on the side of a hill, in order that they might take a good drive at the ball. Consequently a fly whose runs were made, and some in spectacular manner, for the slippery state of the grass rendered it necessary for some of the run-getters to crawl to the home plate, on their hands and knees. Mr. F. A. T. Parsons, of Toronto, in making a sensational slide to third, received the ball on his head and lost his Christie. However, in the fat man's race he was successful in winning the prize, and received a new straw.

In the evening the members took a ride around the city in a street car. They left in part on the midnight and the remainder this morning, all carrying with them a favourable impression of the city.

PARIS, Aug. 4.—The Matin says: "Had the Kaiser suddenly become crazy he could not have acted otherwise. After forcibly taking possession of the Luxemburg railways, to steal the secret door upon his enemy, he tries to intimidate and blackmail the worthy and faithful little nation of that ducky. It is more than infamy, it is a crime against civilisation and the rights of a nation. It is a blunder. Wilhelm is crazy."

Italy's Army Mobilized

ROME, Aug. 4.—The Italian army is mobilised. Details are suppressed by the censor, but it is certain that both the army and navy are now on a complete war footing.

Germany continues her efforts to get the Government to reconsider its declaration of neutrality, but so far these appeals have been ignored.

It is admitted that for the Government to go to war now to help Germany and Austria, with the country aflame with most bitter anti-Austrian feeling would mean an immediate revolution in which the loyalty of the army would be submitted to an almost impossible test.

SENTIMENT OF CANADIANS WAS WELL EXPRESSED

TORONTO, Aug. 5.—Leader Rowell of the Liberal Opposition to-day gave out the following statement in regard to the war situation: "The very threat of hostilities demonstrated a new essential unity of Empire," he said. "I believe the message sent by our Government at Ottawa to Great Britain truly voices the sentiments of the Canadian people. Canada will consider no sacrifice too great to defend the integrity and honour of the Empire."

PETER HAMILTON CO. SHIPMENT HELD UP BY WAR CONDITIONS

It was reported this morning that the Peter Hamilton Company received information this morning that two cars of machinery which they had prepared for shipment to Australia could not be handled on account of the precarious condition of shipping from Canadian ports. This is bringing the first results of the war right home to Peterborough, and this is one local shipment that is held up until the war cloud passes.

42 Merchant Ships Have Been Armed

LONDON, Aug. 4. — In German shipping and naval circles there is at present a good deal of concern about the arming of British merchant vessels. Although Mr. Churchill has said emphatically over and over again that the British Admiralty's scheme is intended for self-defence only, the latest issue of the German Naval Annual, whose inspiration is commonly attributed to the German Admiralty, contends that steamers thus equipped will be treated as privateers in time of war.

So far forty-two British ships have been equipped with 4.7 inch guns, and several lines, notably the Orient, have the scheme under consideration. It is at present mostly confined to food carriers, most of which run to and from South American ports or on the Australian route by way of the Cape.

A good many points, chiefly questions of international law and harbor regulations, have to be cleared up before much further advance is made.

VISITORS TO TORONTO.

Peterborough tourists and visitors can be accommodated in Toronto at 9 and 19 Orde St. Mrs. Read, late Supt. Y.W.C.A. 'Phone College 7980, opposite new General Hospital. 29d-26

Count Jacques De Lesseps Off To France

Passed Through City With Countess Who Will Also Make Perilous Journey Thru War

Count Jacques De Lesseps passed through the city on Monday night en route for Montreal, where he will embark for France to participate in the war. The Count and Countess have been summering at their summer home near Kirkfield, but on Monday they motored to Peterborough, spending a few hours in this city before leaving for Montreal.

It is stated that he will sail to-day on the Allan liner Virginian and cross the Channel on a special steamer.

The French Consul at Toronto, M. Rochereau de la Sablicre, says that COUNT JACQUES DE LESSEPS—Well-known aviator, and son-in-law of Sir William Mackenzie, who has left Canada to join the French aviation corps. His skill and experience will be invaluable to France.

Count De Lesseps intends to join the aviation corps, and take an active part in aeroplane manoeuvres during the war. Whether or not he takes his place at the wheel, his skill and knowledge of aviation will be of the greatest value to the French army.

Count De Lesseps was the second aeroplanist to fly across the English Channel from Calais to Dover, which feat he performed on 21st May, 1910, in a Bleriot aeroplane.

Undaunted by the terrors of war and capture on the high seas, Countess De Lesseps, the young daughter of Sir William Mackenzie, sailed from Montreal to-day with her husband, who is on his way back to France to offer his services as an expert airman to the French Government. Mrs. Wm. Beardmore, sister of the Countess, came down from Kirkfield to accompany her as far as Montreal. The two small baby boys journeyed with their parents, but returned after the sailing of the steamer, and until the return of their parents, will be cared for by Lady Mackenzie, who is at present at Kirkfield.

The skill of the Count in manoeuvring aeroplanes is well known to Torontonians, but skill counts for little against the shells of war, and the relatives in Canada are filled with anxiety for the safety of both the patriotic French officer and his Toronto wife.

EUROPEAN TRADE SHUT OFF

Only British Goods May Be Available for Regiments

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—The widening of the area of conflict in Europe with the consequent closing of all manufacturing establishments has convinced the most optimistic importers and handlers of European products that it would be impossible to make deliveries here on goods manufactured in the belligerent countries. The only possible exception is the British Isles.

The cancellation of the sailings of the steamers of the German lines, as well as of the French companies, was regarded last week as serious enough, but now that the workers of both France and Germany have been called to service in the military and naval arms of their respective Governments, it seems settled that deliveries for fall, winter, and possibly spring lines of textiles will not be made.

All indications, it was said to-day, pointed in the direction of a general falling back on American goods of all kinds, with little prospect of textile competition from abroad, unless it is from Britain.

KING'S ATTEMPT TO PREVENT WAR

Sent Message to Czar to Do All Possible to Avoid War.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—King George's telegram to the Russian Emperor in a final effort to avoid war and the Emperor's reply have been made public. The King, expressing the opinion that there had been some misunderstanding to lead to the breaking off of negotiations, said:

"I make a personal appeal to you to remove the misapprehension and leave open the ground for negotiations for possible peace." The Russian Emperor replied that he would have accepted the proposals had not Germany declared war.

"Germany," says the Emperor, "showed no disposition to mediate, and her preparations and those of Austria made it imperative that Russia should mobilize; but I gave most categorical assurances to the German Emperor that the Russian troops would not move so long as the negotiations continued."

The reply concludes: "I trust that your country will not fail to support Russia and France. God bless and protect you."

A cash register to record the number of words in various kinds of telegrams is being tried out in a New Zealand telegraph office.

WHY NOT SATURDAY INSTEAD OF SUNDAY?

Elder Johnston Discusses Interesting Theme in Tent at Corner of Harvey and Dublin Streets

A theme of special importance was considered last evening by Elder F. W. Johnston in the tent on the corner of Harvey and Dublin Streets in which he examined the reasons that are usually offered for Sunday observance. Taking for his text, Timothy, 3:16,17, where it says that "all Scripture is given . . . that the man of God might be thoroughly furnished unto all good works," he declared that if there is any proof whatever for keeping Sunday in place of Saturday the seventh day, we ought to be able to find it in the Bible. If not then the conclusion would follow that Christians ought forever to abandon the idea that Sunday has in it the slightest degree of sanctity.

The elder then proceeded to examine the supposed reasons, beginning with the view that many entertain that "Sunday was observed by the early disciples in honour of the resurrection of Christ.' This the elder said, was without any proof and could never be supported by any statement of Scripture; for according to Mark 16:9-14 they did not for some time believe He was risen, and how the elder inquired, could they celebrate the event that they did not believe had occurred.

The next favourite argument that is offered by first day keepers is that because Christ broke bread on the first day of the week that therefore it must be a holy hay. This being true, Mr. Johnston declared that any day therefore, that Christ broke bread, would be holy, and where we read in Cor., 11:23, that Christ broke bread on Thursday, then it must be a holy day also.

The next reason offered he said, was equally absurd — "that Christ met with his disciples on the first day of the week "and therefore it must be holy." But according to John, 20:26, He met "after eight days," which would at least be Monday. Then he supposed that we must keep Monday for the same reason.

The next argument offered by Sunday observers is that the disciples met together and broke bread on Sunday and therefore it is holy. If this be true, the elder said, then any day whatever that the disciples broke bread must be holy. Then, according to Acts, 2:46, they broke bread every day and as we don't have to work at all and keep every day because the disciples broke bread every day. How absurd!

Next our Sunday friends say that "Redemption is greater than creation. Therefore we ought to keep Sunday. But were we redeemed upon Sunday or Friday? the elder inquired. On Friday of course, for that is the time when we were redeemed by His blood, and when He said on the cross, "It is finished." If our Sunday keeping friends will only stand by this logic they will henceforth keep Friday and not Sunday.

But the last and only argument that many try to offer is that when John said in Rev. 1:10, "I was in the spirit on the Lord's Day," that therefore he kept Sunday. What logic to be sure, the elder declared. Where does it say that the first day of the week is the Lords' Day? Not a solitary place in the entire Bible. But we do read, however, that "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord. in Ex., 20:8-11, and in Mark, 2:27, 28. "The Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath. This, therefore, is proof that John was in the spirit on the seventh day and not on the first day of the week. We think, so the elder declared, no one will ever say after hearing these so-called proofs for Sunday examiners that Sunday was ever intended to take the place of the Sabbath, and so we invite every conscientious Christian to keep God's Day, or Saturday instead of Sunday, which was set apart by man.

THE LATE AUTOMOBILE TRAGEDY AT MOORE LAKE

Sad Death of John B. Sauve of North Bay—Loss of a Prominent Business Man

The North Bay Despatch and Tribune of July 31st, has the following reference to the sudden death of the late John B. Sauve, of North Bay, who was killed in an automobile accident near Moore Lake. Mr. Sauve was a half-brother of Mr. W. McCracken, manager of the local branch of Gordon-Davies Limited:—

"An automobile accident on Thursday afternoon cost the life of one of North Bay's prominent and most respected citizens in the person of John B. Sauve, who with his family, have been touring the province in their automobile, having left North Bay July 1st, visiting Peterborough, Kingston, Ottawa and other places. The party included Mr. and Mrs. Sauve, Miss Celina and Arthur Sauve, and they were nearing home after a month's pleasurable tour, when the accident happened. Shortly after leaving Moore Lake, a small station on the C.P.R. east of Mattawa, while travelling on a narrow road, with no thought of danger and happy in the anticipation that in a short time they would be with friends in Mattawa, the embankment on one side gave way suddenly, and without any warning the car was thrown violently over on its side. Mr. Sauve, who was at the wheel, was thrown out with his son, the latter being beneath. Mr. Sauve's head came in contact with some hard substance and his skull was fractured. The accident happened at three o'clock in the afternoon, six miles west of Moore Lake and medical assistance was secured as quickly as possible but without avail as Mr. Sauve gradually sank until death relieved his sufferings at ten o'clock. The body was brought to North Bay this morning (Friday) and was met by a committee of the Knights of Columbus, of which Mr. Sauve was a member. The late Mr. Sauve has been a resident of Nipissing all of his life and before coming to North Bay resided in Mattawa. When the Cobalt mining boom began he was early in the field as a prospector and miner and his faith in the Larose and Hollinger Mines, and the men behind them, resulted in his amassing a considerable fortune. He was a shrewd business man, kindly and courteous to all, a good citizen in the highest sense of the word, and one of whom it could be truly said, 'His word is as good as his bond.'"

GERMANS ARE BOTTLED UP

Details of Operations Are Very Meagre—Kaiser's Fleet Outmanoeuvred in North Sea

LONDON, Aug. 5.—Every nerve in Britain is strained to-day waiting for news from the North Sea, where a death struggle is in progress between the British and German fleets. Just at midnight when the 24-hours stipulated in the ultimatum to Germany expired the Admiralty sent to the Home Fleet the laconic message "Capture or destroy the enemy."

News of a naval engagement in the North Sea is confirmed, wounded from the battle have landed at Cromarty, in Scotland.

England's wireless broke loose last night. Immediately after midnight King George sent a personal message to the entire fleet now sailing against the German armada cleared for action.

"I have confidence that the British fleet will revive the old glories of the navy. I am sure that the navy will again shield Britain in this hour of trial. It will prove the bulwark of the Empire."

The King held a Privy Council sitting just before midnight. A decree had been prepared declaring that a state of war existed with Germany should the answer to England's ultimatum prove unsatisfactory. Instead, the Kaiser ignored the ultimatum and took the initiative in the war declaration.

The Admiralty offices were a blaze of light all the evening, and shortly after midnight the First Lord, Winston Churchill, rushed to Buckingham Palace with Sir Edward Grey.

High admiralty and naval officers were going and coming, and it is known that wireless signals were sent out to the first fleet under Admiral Callaghan.

The exact location of the Germans is known. Their action in sinking a mine-laying ship and chasing a destroyer was unwise, in the opinion of the naval experts, inasmuch as it revealed their position to the British admiral.

Britain must strike on the sea in order to prevent any invasion of its shores by Germany.

Germans Bottle Up?

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—It was reported here to-day that early in the morning the big wireless instruments on the coast had picked up news that the British Home Fleet had the German squadron "bottled up" off the coast of Denmark. What confidence may be placed in the story is problematical.

The wireless despatch if it be reliable would indicate that the Britains have outsailed and out manoeuvered their opponents. If true it means that the British admiral can choose his own time and method of striking home, the advantage of position being his.

Berlin Reports Victory.

BERLIN, Aug. 5. — The German defending forces last night repulsed an attack in force of the Russian army at Memel, the most northerly town in Prussia. The Russian army penetrated the empire at the railway and advanced on Memel. The frontier guards interposed no resistance until the fortifications outside of the town were reached. Here the German commander had massed his men, supported by a battery of artillery, and the Russians, when they attempted to charge, were raked by a cross fire and retreated in confusion. The Russian loss is said to have been heavy.

German Cruisers Taken?

ALGIERS, Aug. 5.—According to an unofficial report a French fleet has captured two German cruisers, the Goeben and Breslau.

Japanese Cruiser Off.

TOKIO, Aug. 5. — The Japanese cruiser Chi Yoda, which is now at Kure, has been ordered to proceed hurriedly to South China waters.

Belgian Town Captured.

BELFORT, France, Aug. 5. — A number of Germans were taken prisoners yesterday and brought into Belfort.

A squadron of the 11th French Dragoons stationed in Belfort rendered funeral honors yesterday at Joncherey to a German lieutenant, the first victim of actual conflict between France and Germany.

Several hundred Alsatians, Swiss and Italians, have enlisted here and have demanded to be sent to the advance outposts.

Bombarded French Port.

LONDON, Aug. 5. — The German cruiser Breslau bombarded the French naval station of Bona, Algeria, on the south coast of the Mediterranean, at four o'clock yesterday morning, afterwards steaming full speed in a westerly direction, according to a despatch received at the French Embassy here.

Liege and Namur Shelled.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 5. — News has reached here that the Germans are shelling Liege and Namur.

A state of siege was declared yesterday at the fortified towns of LIEGE, HUY, NAMUR and ANTWERP, which constitute the backbone of the Belgian defence plan.

German Steamers Taken.

BORDEAUX, France, Aug. 5.—Two German steamers in this port have been seized.

It is now believed that Dr. C. K. Robinson, wanted for the murder of Miss Blanche Yorke at Tamworth, is in New York.

Gen. Francisco Villa has proclaimed his independence from the Carranza Government, and has begun reorganizing his army.

The U. S. armored cruisers Tennessee and North Carolina will be used in sending gold to Europe for the use of American tourists stranded there.

George S. Bale, modern master of the Kingston Collegiate Institute, has been appointed principal of the Collegiate Institute at Niagara-on-the-Lake.

A bill to exclude from readmission into the United States all aliens who leave to engage in a foreign war was introduced yesterday in Congress by Representative Harrison of Mississippi.

Ismael Bourret, who is charged with the murder of Constable Bourdon on the Cote des Neiges road last March, along with three other suspects, one of whom, Poneault, is still at large, has confessed.

A political club with three hundred members has been organized by the Slavs of Welland, Ont., Russians, Poles and Croatians, who are subjects of Austria-Hungary, and every member has agreed not to answer Austria's call to arms.

DEFENCE STEPS TAKEN.

Various Moves In Canadian Plan Are Being Made.

OTTAWA, Aug. 5. — "An official memorandum says: "Portions of the militia have been called out for active service to protect the coasts and to safeguard public property in various parts of the Dominion. The steamship Margaret and the steamship Canada have been transferred to the naval service and all ships available in the naval service have been placed on active service.

"All measures prescribed by the scheme of defence have been taken by the various Departments of the Government.

"The naval volunteer force has also been called into active service.

"There has been a rumor that Austrian steamships, presumably merchants ships, are meditating an attack on one of the Marconi stations, and the necessary precautions have been taken."

Seize Wireless Station.

MUST CONSIDER THE QUESTION FROM THE STANDPOINT OF HONOUR

Sir Edward Grey Says That Great Britain Would Suffer Little More if She Should Intervene Than if She Stood Aside—Stirring Speech

LONDON, Aug. 3. — Sir Edward Grey in the House of Commons this afternoon announced that orders for the mobilisation of the British army as well as of the navy have been issued.

Sir Edward declared, amidst frenzied cheering:

"England must now consider this crisis from the viewpoint of honour and obligation as well as from her interest.

"The King of Belgium has telegraphed a supreme appeal to England to safeguard his country's integrity. The big question for England now, the question that overshadows all else, is the question of Belgium, her neutrality and the respecting of her integrity."

Germany to Blame.

Sir Edward Grey placed responsibility for the break on Germany when he declared:

"England has tried consistently to secure peace. It was not possible, however, because of the briefness of the time and the disposition in some quarters to force matters rapidly to an issue."

Dealing with the question of Great Britain's obligations, Sir Edward said:

"Up to yesterday we had given no promise of more than diplomatic support. I was asked at the time of the Algiers crisis if we would give armed support, and I said I could promise nothing to any foreign power unless it received the wholehearted support of public opinion.

"I gave no promise, but I told both the French and German Ambassadors that if war was forced on France public opinion in the British Isles would rally to France."

This part of the speech was received with loud cheering.

Sir Edward added that if a foreign fleet came down the English Channel to bombard the French coast, "We could not stand aside."

The Foreign Secretary stated the British fleet had been mobilized, and the mobilisation of the British army was taking place, but that no engagement had yet been made by the British Government to send an expedition abroad. He continued:

French Coast Defenceless.

"The French fleet is in the Mediterranean and the northern coasts of France are defenceless.

"We felt strongly that France was entitled to know before whether in the event of an attack on her unprotected coasts she could rely on our support.

"I gave the engagement to the French Ambassador last night that if the German fleet goes into the English Channel or into the North Sea to attack French shipping or the French coasts the British fleet will give all the protection in its power.

"The answer is subject to the approval of Parliament. It is not a declaration of war.

"I understand that the German Government would be prepared if we would pledge ourselves to neutrality to agree that its fleet would not attack the northern coast of France.

"That is far to narrow an engagement."

The House broke out into cheers at this remark. Sir Edward then recited the history of Belgian neutrality, saying:

"Our interest is as strong to-day as it was in 1870. We cannot take a less serious view of our obligations now than did the late Mr Gladstone in that year.

"When mobilisation began I telegraphed to both the French and the German Governments asking whether they would respect Belgian neutrality.

"France replied that she was prepared to do so unless another power violated that neutrality.

"The German Foreign Secretary replied that he could not possibly give a response before consulting the Imperial Chancellor and the German Emperor. He intimated that he doubted whether it was possible to give an answer, because that answer would disclose the German plans.

Britain Sounded Last Week.

"We were sounded last week as to whether, if Belgian neutrality were restored after the war, it would pacify us, and we replied that we could not barter our interests or our obligations."

Foreign Minister Grey declared that England would suffer little more if she should intervene in the war than if she stood aside while, in the latter event she "would lose the respect of the world, and this would counterbalance any saving there might be."

Another burst of cheering greeted this declaration. Sir Edward Grey then read a telegram from the King of Belgium to King George, making a supreme appeal for diplomatic intervention to safeguard the independence of Belgium.

In other parts of his speech Sir Edward Grey said:

"The intervention with Germany in regard to the independence of Belgium was carried out by England last night. If the independence of Belgium should be destroyed, the independence of Holland also would be gone."

The Foreign Secretary then asked the House to consider what British interests were at stake, "if in a crisis like this we were to run away." This was greeted with loud cheers, and Sir Edward continued:

"Do not imagine that if a great power stands aside in a war like this it is going to be in a position to exert its influence at the end. I am not quite sure whether the facts regarding Belgium are as they reached this Government, but there is no obligation upon this country to go its utmost to prevent the consequences to which those facts would lead if they were not opposed.

"We must be prepared and we are prepared to face the consequences of using all our strength at any moment — we know not how soon—to defend ourselves.

British Forces Prepared.

"So far as the forces of the Crown are concerned, the Premier and First Lord of the Admiralty have no doubt whatever of their readiness and their efficiency. They never were at a higher mark of readiness. There never was a time when confidence was more justified in their ability to protect our shores and our commerce.

If the situation develops, as it seems probable it will develop, we shall face it.

"I believe when the country realizes what is at stake it will support the Government with determination, with resolution, and with endurance."

From all parts of the House there came roars of cheering.

In a preceding part of his discourse, while discussing the question of Belgium, Sir Edward Grey said:

"It is said we might stand aside and husband our resources in order to intervene in the end and put things right.

"If in a crisis of this kind we ran away from our obligations of honour and interest with regard to the Belgian treaty I doubt whether whatever material force we might possess at the end would be of much value in face of the respect we should have lost."

RUSSIAN SYNOD'S APPEAL.

Church Dignitaries Issue Manifesto to the Peasants.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 5. — The Holy Synod yesterday sent messages to the priests and congregations of the Orthodox Church throughout the empire quoting the text from the book of John, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend," invoking them to "defend their little brothers and sisters in Christ," and declaring that faith is the invincible weapon.

The all-powerful Russian Church has declared entirely on the side of the state policy and has issued orders throughout the length and breadth of Russia which have the result of making this a holy war in the eyes of every Mujik in the empire.

CANADA'S MONEY SITUATION IS SATISFACTORY

Finance Minister Fielding Has Followed Fielding in Strengthening our Financial Situation

TORONTO, Aug. 5. — "Canada's financial position is now impregnable," said Mr. D. R. Wilkie, president of the Imperial Bank, as he discussed the action of the Government in making notes legal tender, in increasing the limit of circulation, and promising to do everything to meet the exigencies of the present or future situation. "We can afford to give credit to the Minister of Finance. He has done practically the same as Finance Minister Fielding did in 1907, only at the present time the situation is much more serious."

"Have the banks made any change in their policy toward brokers?"

"No," replied Mr. Wilkie. "No loans have been called as far as I know, and the arrangements whereby banks gave brokers to understand that loans would not be called or additional margins demanded is still in effect. The condition attached to this arrangement, however, must be complied with—namely, that the brokers in turn will not demand extra payments from their clients. As soon as the brokers take advantage of the banks' decision and press their clients, the banks will immediately press the brokers."

Banking Circles Approve.

The action of the Finance Minister seems to meet the approval of the banking circles. "The making of notes legal tender is the most important provision to us," said one official.

In explaining the action of the Government, another banker said: "The bankers' crop note circulation has simply been advanced thirty days. Ordinarily our excess note circulation comes into force on 1st September. This year, if necessary, we could use it to-day. It is simply a precautionary measure, and we anticipate no demands at all. Paragraph 14, sec. 61, of the Bank Act, which states that banks must pay on demand their own notes in gold or in Dominion Government notes, has also been suspended. The banks can now settle all claims in their own notes, an dif a depositor wishes to withdraw his balance, he will have to accept the bank's circulation. Of course, this circulation is not illimitable. The Act demands specific collateral for it."

No Reason for Despair.

"If the Canadian people only hold themselves steady, I see no reason why Canada should not come through the threatening crisis with flying colours," was the comment of another banker, the general manager of one of the largest banks of the Dominion.

The Stock Exchange members went over for their usual morning consultation on the floor this morning. "There is no public interest in these meetings," said a member. "We go over every morning to consider matters that arise out of the unusual condition now existing. The rules of the Exchange do not cover many of the little points that are involved, such as in the case of deliveries and such like, and so that there will be uniformity among the different houses, decisions are made in the committee for the guidance of all. It may be months before the exchanges open."

Financial men, while realising the seriousness of the present situation, feel that Canada is in a strong position to off-set the drastic conditions that may result from a general European war. They emphasise the necessity of our people keeping steady, and of suppressing the alarmist. "Fear is sometimes a greater factor than fact," said one, and this is not the time to arouse fears. Anything done to injure our financial institutions touches not them only, but reverts to all businesses. "At a time like this we must forget selfish motives, and for the sake of the stability of our country, stand side by side," was the advise given by a local financier.

FIRE BURNED FIVE ACRES

A grass fire across the river from the new city pumping station at noon to-day destroyed the fences and newly planted trees on five acres of city property, and burned the grass off that area.

Dave Tope's Death Was A Terrible Shock

Speaking of the death of David Tope, the well-known Hamilton man, who was killed on Saturday on his way to Stoney Lake, the Hamilton Times says:

The many friends of David Tope received a big shock on Saturday when the news of his death reached this city, shortly after 1 o'clock and to-day his many friends are mourning the loss of the once great half-back of the Tiger football team and also of one of the best sports that Hamilton has ever known in some time.

David Tope was about thirty years of age and for the past ten years he was connected with the Tiger football club. Some ten years ago Davy started out to make a name for himself as a football player and played in the city Church League. He showed such good form that he was asked by the officials of the Tiger club to play play out with the yellow and black team which at that time was in the Senior O. R. F. U. David joined just as good a game as ever. During the first three years on the Tiger back division he set up a record that has never been broken on a football field, or three years he never missed a ball that was kicked to him, and was known by all as the surest catch on the Tiger back division.

Germans Suffer Heavy Losses at Vise and Liege

3,500 Killed and Wounded at Former Place and Double That Number Lost at Liege---Result of Yesterday's Fighting

London, Aug. 6.--The German army sustained another defeat early to-day. Two regiments of cavalry attempted a night surprise on the Belgian position at Liege. The Belgian artillery, entrenched behind strong fortifications at Fort Liege, repulsed the invaders with heavy losses.

Most of those wounded were abandoned by the German army when it was forced to retreat. The Belgian artillery carried the day. The Germans attacked immediately on arrival without waiting for either infantry supports or for the artillery. It was because of this mistake that the Belgian forces were able to gain the advantage. When the infantry and supporting artillery reached the scene of battle it found that the cavalry and motor cycle brigades had been decimated by the fire. The Germans charged but could not carry the Belgian position and finally withdrew towards the Meuse.

Brussels, Aug. 6.--The German losses at Vise alone were 3,500 in killed and wounded, and fully double that number lost at Liege and vicinity. Fighting has been of the fiercest character, and is still in progress, the Germans having renewed their attempt to cross the Meuse river at daylight to-day. Gen. Von Emmich, German commander, is said to be directing operations against Liege in person.

ENRAGED BY DEFEATS

VISE, Belgium, Aug. 6.—An eighteen year old girl was executed by the Germans because she shot an officer. The Germans are savage on account of continued defeats.

VIENNESE BABIES WITHOUT MILK

VIENNA, Aug. 6.—Hundreds of babies are starving as the result of the stoppage of milk supplies. The railways are being used solely for military purposes.

GERMAN AMBASSADOR HAS LEFT

LONDON, Aug. 6.—German Ambassador Lichnowsky left London early to-day under an escort of British troops. There was no demonstration incident to his departure.

THE BANK DISCOUNT RATE REDUCED

LONDON, Aug. 6.—The Bank of England rate today was reduced to 6 per cent. This announcement following the Bank Holiday. caused much elation in business circles. It is accepted that the Government has no doubt of the result of the war and believes that hostilities will not last very long.

SUMMARY OF WAR EVENTS

MORE SPIES NETTED IN LONDON

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The police have arrested additional Germans charged with espionage. Three were seized from the German embassy.

SAY RUSSIANS REPEL GERMANS

LONDON, Aug. 5. — Despatches from Warsaw say that Russian Army crossed the German frontier at Lyck on the Poland boundary driving Germans back ten miles.

FIVE AVIATORS KILLED.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The Central News says five German aviators were killed in an assault on Liege.

STRANDED IN DENMARK.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 5. — Eleven hundred Canadian and American visitors are stranded here from countries where the war is in progress.

WAR INTO CANADA?

OTTAWA, Aug. 5.—Wire received that a German cruiser is shelling Glace Bay. Germans aim to destroy communication with the Motherland. Preparations by Government were made for mining Glace Bay approaches.

GERMAN CRUISER SUNK.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The German auxiliary cruiser Louise with four hundred reservists aboard was sunk by British cruiser to-night.

USE AUSTRALIA'S NAVY.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The British Government has accepted Australia's offer of navy.

FRENCH FLEET AFTER GERMAN CRUISER

MILAN, Italy, Aug. 6.—A German cruiser attempting to reach the shore of France and bombard towns there, was overtaken by a French fleet and a fight is going on, according to a wireless dispatch received.

CANADA MAY VOTE $50,000,00 TO PAY HER SHARE IN WAR

OTTAWA, Aug. 6.—When a Canadian division goes abroad it is certain that the artillery and infantry arms will predominate. Cavalry will be few. Of the 18,000 men, about 12,000 will be infantry, 4,000 artillery, and the rest subsidiary service corps and reservists for "wastage."

The emergency session of Parliament, summoned for August 18th, will be devoted exclusively to the consideration of subjects arising out of the war and Canada's participation in it.

Vote $50,000,000.

It is likely that fifty million dollars will be voted to defray the expenses incidental to Canadian defence and participation of our troops in the struggle abroad.

The session is not likely to be long. It will not be an occasion for the display of any partisan differences, but rather for unanimity of view and action upon whatever proposals the government has to submit. An extra of the Canada Gazette to-day will contain a proclamation summoning Parliament, and also the formal proclamation of war.

N. W. M. P. Stay Home.

It is announced that the North-West Mounted Police will not be sent abroad save for the 54 army reservists which it contains. The force is needed in the country, and to recruit it anew would present many difficulties.

Italy Must Fight With Or Against Triple Alliance

Kaiser Refuses to Accept Italy's Claim to Neutrality in the Present Crisis--German War Lord Irritated by Strong Opposition to His Forces

(Special Wire to A. M. Stratton & Co.)

London, Aug. 6.---Germany has sent Italy an ultimatum that Germany will declare war on Italy if she refuses to assist them, or attempts to maintain the already declared neutrality.

ITALY'S REPORTED REFUSAL

PARIS, Aug. 6.—Italy has replied to Germany's ultimatum with the statement that Germany was the aggressor in the conflict with England, and sees no reason for not allowing her decision to remain neutral, according to news received here.

LONDON. Aug. 6.—War against Italy is expected to be the next declaration of the Kaiser. King Victor Emanuel and his advisers will take the stand that as the Triple Alliance is for defensive purposes only, Italy is not bound to aid Germany and Austria. It is for these reasons that Italy has declared that she will observe the strictest neutrality.

THE MAILED FIST AFTER ITALY

Special Wire to A. H. Stratton & Co.

LONDON, Aug. 6. — Germany has sent Italy an ultimatum that Germany will declare war on Italy if she refuses to assist them or attempts to maintain the already declared neutrality.

BANK OF FRANCE IS OPEN FOR BUSINESS

PARIS, Aug. 6.—The Bank of France opened for business to-day with the announced discount rate of 6 per cent. This was in accordance with the action of the Bank of England fixing its rate at that figure.

GERMANS HAVE BEEN BUSY

MONTREAL. Aug. 6.—The Montreal Herald prints the following significant hint: "This year the port of Montreal has done the biggest grain trade on record. The large increase has been caused by German vessels taking grain to German ports. Now we know the reason why."

BRITISH DESTROYER GETS GERMAN LINER

VALLOT, Malta, Aug. 6.—A British destroyer has seized a German liner and is bringing her to this port. All business here is at a standstill.

COST OF LIVING BOOSTED

Work Stopped in Several Places and Foodstuffs at Higher Prices

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 5.—Retail prices of provisions advanced fifty per cent. to-day. The stores were besieged and in some cases had to close, as their stocks were running so low. The local sugar refineries have closed, and the grocers are unable to obtain further supplies.

Work Stopped.

DUNFERMLINE, Scotland, Aug. 5.—Work in the coal mines in the counties of Fife, Kinross and Clackmannan, the outputs of which ordinarily are shipped to the Continent, has virtually stopped. The supply of flax, cotton and linen in the factories has been almost exhausted, and before the end of the week thousands of operatives will be thrown out of work. The prices of food are steadily rising.

Glasgow in Need.

GLASGOW, Aug. 5.—A food famine threatens in Glasgow and some of the stores had to close their doors at noon as pressing were the buyers. Prices jumped immediately. Sugar from 5 cents to 12 cents a pound, and many shops were sold out.

Advance in Montreal.

MONTREAL, Aug. 5.—The wholesale prices of foodstuffs were advanced in Montreal to-day, and it is anticipated by end of the week the retail prices of practically every commodity will follow suit. The decision to advance prices was taken by the wholesale grocers after informal discussions on the matter. Meats have gone up in price, bacon being a cent dearer today, with a prospect of another another advance in a day or so.

CHAPTER XII.

DRAWING TOGETHER.

Days passed, busy days, full of hard labour and achievement, rich in experience and learning, in happiness, in dreams of what the future might yet bring.

Beatrice made and finished a considerable wardrobe of garments for them both. These, when the fur had been clipped close with the scissors, were not only comfortably warm, and, even though on some days a bit uncomfortable, the man and woman tolerated them because they had no others.

Plenty of bathing and good food put them in splendid physical condition, to which their active exercise contributed much. And thus, judging partly by the state of the foliage, partly by the height of the sun, which Stern determined with considerable accuracy by means of a simple home-made quadrant—they knew mid-May was past and June was drawing near.

The housekeeping by no means took up the girl's time. Often she went out with him on what he called his "pirating expeditions," that now sometimes led them as far afield as the sad ruins of the wharves and piers, or to the stark desolation and wreckage of lower Broadway and the one time busy hives of newspaperdom, or up to Central Park or to the great remains of the two railroad terminals.

These two places, the former tiegates of the city's life, impressed Stern most painfully of anything. The disintegrated tracks, the jumbled remains of locomotives and luxurious Pullmans with weeds growing rank upon them, the sunlight beating down through the caved-in roof of the Pennsylvania station 'concourse,' where millions of human beings once had trod in all the haste of men's paltry, futile affairs, filled them with melancholy, and he was glad to get away again leaving the place to the jungle, the birds and beasts that now laid claim to it.

"Sic transit gloria mundi!" he murmured, as with sad eyes he mused upon the down-tumbled columns along the facade, the overgrown entranceway, the cracked and falling arches and architraves. "And this, they said, was built for all time!"

It was on one of these expeditions that the engineer found and pocketed—unknown to Beatrice—another disconcerting relic.

This was a bone, broken and splintered and of no very great age, gnawed with perfectly visible tooth-marks. He picked it up, by chance, near the west side of the ruins of the old City Hall.

Stern recognised the manner in which the bone had been cracked open with a stone to let the marrow be sucked out. The sight of this gruesome relic revived his fears, tenfold more acutely than ever, and filled him with a sense of vague, impending evil, of peril deadly to them both.

This was the more keen, because the engineer knew at a glance that the bone was the upper end of a human femur—human, or, at the very least, belonging to some highly anthropoid animal. And of apes or gorillas he had, as yet, found no trace in the forests of Manhattan.

Long he mused over his find. But not a single word did he ever say to Beatrice concerning it or the flint spear-point. Only he kept his eyes and ears well open for other bits of corroborative evidence.

And he never ventured a foot from the building unless his rifle and revolver were with him, their magazines full of high power shells.

The girl always went armed, too, and soon grew to be such an expert shot that she could drop a squirrel from the tip of a fir, or wing a heron in full flight.

Once her quick eye spied a deer in the tangles of the one-time Gramercy Park, now no longer neatly hedged with iron palings, but spread in wild confusion that joined the riot of growth beyond.

On the instant she fired, wounding the creature.

Stern's shot, echoing hers, missed. Anready the deer was away, out of range throught he forst. With some difficulty they pursued down a glen like strip of wooda that must have been Irving Place.

Two hundred yards south of the park they sighted the animal again. And the girl with a single shot sent it crashing to earth.

"Bravo, Diana!" hurrahed Stern, running forward with enthusiasm. The "deer fever" was on him, as strong as in his old days in the Hudson Bay country. Hot was the pleasure of the kill when that meant food. As he ran he jerked his knife from the skin sheath the girl had made for him.

Thus they had fresh venison to their hearts' content—venison broiled over white-hot coals in the fireplace, juicy and savory-sweet beyond all telling.

A good deal of the meat they smoked and salted and salted down for future use. Stern undertook to tan the hide with strips of hemlock bark laid in a water pit dug near the spring. He added also some oak bark, nut-galls and a good quantity of young sumac shoots.

"I guess that ought to hit the mark if anything will," remarked he, as he immersed the skin and weighted it down with rocks.

"It's like the old 'shotgun' prescriptions of our extinct doctors — a little of everything, bound to do the trick, one way or another."

The great variety of labours now imposed upon him began to try his ingenuity to the full. In spite of all his wealth of practical knowledge and scientific skill, he was astounded at the huge demands of even the simplest human life.

The girl and he now faced these, without the social cooperation which they had formerly taken entirely for granted, and the change of conditions had begun to alter Stern's concepts of almost everything.

He was already beginning to realize how true the old saying was: "One man is no man!" and how the world had been the world merely because of the interrelations, the interdependencies of human beings in vast numbers.

He was commencing to get a glimpse of the vanished social problems that had enmeshed civilisation, in their true light, now that all be confronted and had to struggle with was the unintelligent and overbearing dominance of nature.

And this was of huge value to the engineer. And the strong individualism (essentially anarchistic) on which he had prided himself a thousand years ago, was now beginning to receive some mortal blows, even during these first days of the new, solitary, unsocialised life.

But neither he nor the girl had very much time for introspective thought. Each moment brought its immediate task, and every day seemed busier than the last had been.

At meals, however, or at evening, as they sat together by the light of their lamp in the now homelike offices, Stern and Beatrice found pleasure in a little random speculation. Often they discussed the catastrophe and their own escape.

Stern brought to mind some of Professor Raoul Pictet's experiments with animals, in which the Frenchman had suspended animation for long periods by sudden freezing. This method seemed to answer, in a way, the girl's earlier questions as to how they had escaped death in the many long winters since they had gone to sleep.

Again, they tried to imagine the scenes just following the catastrophe, the horror of that long-past day, and the slow, irrevocable decay of all the monuments of the human race.

Often they talked till past mid night, by the glow of their stone fireplace, and many were the aspects of the case that they developed. These hours seemed to Stern the happiest of his life.

For the rapprochement between this beautiful woman and himself at such times became very close and fascinatingly intimate, and Stern felt, little by little, that the love which now was growing deep within his heart for her was not without its answer in her own.

But for the present the man restrained himself and spoke no overt word. For that, he understood, would immediately have put all things on a different basis—and there was urgent work still waiting to be done.

"There's no doubt in my mind," said he one day as they sat talking, "that you and I are absolutely the last human beings—civilized I mean—left alive anywhere in the world."

"If anybody else had been spared, whether in Chicago or San Francisco, in London, Paris or Hong-Kong, they'd have made some determined effort before now to get in touch with New York. This, the prime centre of the financial and industrial world, would have been their first objective point."

"But suppose," asked she, "there were others, just a few here or there, and they'd only recently waked up, like ourselves. Could they have succeeded in making themselves known to us so soon?"

He shook a dubious head.

"There may be some one else, somewhere," he answered slowly, "but there's nobody else in this part of the world, anyhow. Nobody in this particular Eden but just you and me. To all intents and purposes I Adam. And you—well, you're Eve But the tree? We haven't found that—yet."

She gave him a quick, startled glance, then let her head fall, so that he could not see her eyes. But up over her neck, her cheek and even to her temples, where the lustrous hair fell away, he saw a tide of colour mount.

And for a little space the man forgot to smoke. At her he gazed, a strange gleam in his eyes.

And no word passed between them for a while. But their thoughts—

CHAPTER XIII.

THE GREAT EXCITEMENT.

The idea that there might possibly be others of their kind in far-distant parts of the earth worked strongly ont he mind of the girl. Next day she broached the subject again to her companion.

"Suppose," theorized she, "there might be a few score of others, maybe a few hundred, scattered here and there? They might awaken one by one, only to die, if less favourably situated than we happen to be. Perhaps thousands may have slept, like us, only to make up to starvation!"

"There's no telling, of course," he answered seriously. "Undoubtedly that may be very possible. Some may have escaped the great death, on high altitudes—on the Eiffel Tower, for instance, or on certain mountains or lofty plateaus. The most we can do for the moment is just to guess at probabilities. And—"

"But if there are people elsewhere," she interrupted eagerly, her eyes glowing with hope, "isn't there any way to get in touch with them? Why should we expect them to seek us out? Why don't we hunt? Suppose only one or two in each country have survived; if we could get them all together again in a single colony—don't you see?"

"You mean the different languages and arts and all the rest might still be preserved? The colony might grow and flourish, and mankind again take possession of the earth and conquer it, in a few decades? Yes, of course. But even though there shouldn't be anybody else, there's no cause for despair. Of that, however, we won't speak now."

"But why don't we try to find out about it?" she persisted. "If there were only the remotest chance—"

"By jove, I will try it!" exclaimed the engineer, fired with a new thought, a fresh abition. "How? I don't know just yet, but I'll see. There'll be a way out, right enough, if I can only think it out!"

That afternoon he made his way down Broadway, past the copper shop, to the remains of the telegraph office opposite the Flatiron.

Into it he penetrated with some difficulty. A mournful sight it was, this one-time busy ganglion of the nation's nerve-system. Benches and counters were quite gone, instruments corroded past recognition, everything in hideous disorder.

Rivals Her Daughter in Youthful Beauty

A well-known society matron whose youthful beauty is so well preserved that she is regarded as her daughter's rival in this respect—though she does not pose as such—attributes her girlish complexion chiefly to two things. She says

"I am convinced that many cosmetics, by overloading the skin and pores, tend to age the complexion. Mercolized wax has just the opposite effect. It keeps the pores clean, permitting them to breathe, and removes dead particles of cuticle which are constantly appearing and which give the complexion that faded look. Whenever my skin begins to get the least bit off-colour, muddy or tanned, I go to my druggist's for an ounce of mercolized wax: I apply this nightly, like cold cream, for a week or so, washing it off mornings. This is what keeps my complexion so fresh, white and velvety even during the trying days of summer.

"The absence of wrinkles and flabbiness I owe to the use of a simple face bath prepared by dissolving one ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel. This keeps the skin 'tight' and firm." Social Register.

SOME BIG CATCHES AT YOUNG'S POINT

YOUNG'S POINT, Aug. 4.—Quite a large number of tourists are at the Point and South Beach and the fishing is excellent.

Last Friday while Mr. Robert Godfrey and Miss B. Walsh were out trolling, they caught a large lunge, just below the Point. Miss Walsh caught this beauty, which weighed 18 3-4 pounds, and Mr. Godfrey landed him. This is no "fish story," as there are dozens here and in Lakefield who saw the fish.

Mr. Robt. Dewer, while out with two gentlemen from Toronto, succeeded on Monday in landing four large lunge. All the guides are bringing in fish.

The country around here is suffering very much for rain and there is no pasture.

How To Stop Stomach Torment

Sound Advice From a Well-Known Physician.

Men and women who suffer from what they call Dyspepsia, Indigestion or just plain "stomach-trouble" usually seek regular relief in the form of some pepsin pill or tablet, or other artificial digestant. This experience teaches me, in a serious error in the case out of ten, the distress is caused by the development of acids in the stomach,—formed by the fermenting of the food. Instead of a digestant being required, something should be taken to dissolve or neutralise this acidity, when normal digestion will follow as a matter of course. This acid matter is distinctly poisonous and unless it is dissolved, digestion merely carries the mass of fermenting food from the stomach to the intestines, where its poison is absorbed by the blood and carried all over the body.

"If all the great army of people who suffer after nearly every meal would make it a point to take a teaspoonful of Bisurated Magnesia in a quarter glass of water after each meal, there would be no formation of acidity and consequently no distress or discomfort. Sour, acid, gassy stomach, heartburn, belching, bloating, etc., would then be a thing of the past. 'Bisurated Magnesia' is a physician's prescription. It is inexpensive and can be obtained at any drug store. It is prepared for just such trouble and the best proof of its efficiency is that it will stop the sharpest, biting stomach distress in five minutes from the time it enters the stomach, simply by dissolving the acids that have been formed there. Its action is absolutely harmless.

CURED AT SEVENTY-FOUR

Little Digesters are a Great Help to Mr. John F. Becker

The weight of years very often brings with it a still heavier burden, that of Indigestion or some Form of Stomach Trouble.

Then "Little Digesters" come to the rescue—if you give them a chance, as did Mr. Becker. Here is his letter telling what they did for him:

New Dundee, Nov. 10, 1913.
To The Coleman Medicine Co.
Dear Sirs,—

I was for a long time troubled with bloating after meals, and my tongue was always coated. Seeing the "Little Digesters" advertised I bought a box, and they took all that trouble away, but I thought one box would not be enough, so I sent to you for more. They are a great help to my body.

Yours truly,
JOHN F. BECKER.

Excuse my writing with pencil, being an old man of 74."

"Little Digesters" aid the feeble stomach to digest the food perfectly. This means that you can enjoy every meal, and get the strength out of what you eat, if you take a "Little Digester" afterwards.

Good Sleep Good Health

Exhausted Nerves Were Fully Restored by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

When the nerve force expended in the day's work and in the act of living is not replenished by restful sleep at night you have cause to be alarmed, as physical bankruptcy stares you in the face. This letter directs you to the most satisfactory cure for sleeplessness.

Mr. Dennis Mackin, Maxton, Sask., writes:—"I have just finished using the sixth box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and I must say that when I commenced using it my nerves were so bad that I could scarcely get any sleep. I would lie in bed nearly all night without sleep, and anyone who has this trouble knows the misery of sleepless nights. The Nerve Food helped me from the start, and has built up my nervous system wonderfully. I now enjoy good, sound sleep, and instead of feeling tired in the morning I am strong and healthy, and well fitted for my daily work."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50; all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Safe Home Treatment For Objectionable Hairs

(Boudoir Secrets)

The electric needle is not required for the removal of hair or fuzz, for with the use of plain delatone the most stubborn growth can be quickly banished. A paste is made with water and a little of the powder, then spread over the hairy surface. In about 3 minutes it is rubbed off and the skin washed. This simple treatment not only removes the hair, but leaves the skin free from blemish. Be sure you get genuine delatone.

TIRED-OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by carelessness or ignorance of eating and drinking. Only a diseased kidney requires Dodd's Kidney Pills. But when the kidneys are overworked they need help, and Dodd's Kidney Pills help them. They make the kidneys and urinary organs well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A RUSSIAN WAY

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.

A man named Bogoff came to the United States in 1865 and acquired title to some lands in Montana. He returned to Russia, where he died without knowing the value of his property. A syndicate bought up all the surrounding land and wanted that belonging to Bogoff's heirs.

As a member of the syndicate I was sent to Russia to put the matter through. There was just one thing to be kept secret—Bogoff had paid about $700 for property worth over $100,000. I was to get hold of the land as cheaply as possible, giving no hint of its real value. Bogoff was a native of the port of Narva, on the gulf of Finland, and one day I landed there in search of information. I had my passport and other credentials and anticipated no trouble, but I was ignorant of the way things work in Russia. After taking up quarters at a hotel I called upon a lawyer to make inquiries and secure assistance. Yes, he had heard of the Bogoffs and thought the family could easily be found. I was to call again on the morrow and meanwhile he would gather such information as he could.

Two hours later the chief of police of Narva entered my room with two of his men. The astute officer questioned me for three long hours and was more suspicious at the finish than at the beginning. It was so queer that Bogoff should have purchased that land, so queer that he hadn't reported it on returning, so queer that I should make such a long journey to see the heirs, so queer that I should seek out a lawyer instead of calling at the police station. I knew exactly what all this meant. Had I said to the lawyer in the first place that there was a "divvy" in the matter for him and for the chief of police and two or three other officials all would have gone well.

When the chief realized that I could not be bled he had all my papers taken to his office. The police were ordered to look upon me as a suspicious person, and a detective was detailed to watch me day and night.

Thinking I might carry on the business from St. Petersburg, I went to that city and again called upon a lawyer first of all. He was sharp enough to realize that the property was of considerable value, and without any beating around the bush he told me that he would find the heir and put the matter through for the sum of $5,000. I refused to bribe him and as a result soon discovered that no lawyer would have anything to do with the case, and only two days had passed before I was summoned to the office of the chief of police. He closed the interview by saying that I would be shadowed while I remained at the capital and by advising me to take no further steps on my own account to discover the Bogoffs.

I had not been provided with money to bribe any one. I must either defy the police and work up the case single handed or return and report a failure. Being firmly convinced that Mrs. Bogoff was in Narva, I secretly left St. Petersburg for that town. Securing rooms in a boarding house and disguising my personal appearance to a considerable extent, I prosecuted my inquiries under one excuse and another until I at length discovered the woman. She was living in her own home and in poor circumstances and was rejoiced at the prospect of selling the land, which she remembered her husband referring to as a poor investment on his part.

I must have the assistance of a notary to make out the papers, and it was while seeking this assistance that the police got track of me again. As soon as they interfered I was balked. They not only warned every notary in Narva against me, but the widow was obliged to take a journey and go into hiding. Things might have stopped there had I been a cool and placid man. When I found the police hounding me again I lost my temper and gave the chief my opinion of things in general and of his own conduct in particular. I was arrested; on what charge I never knew.

As soon as incarcerated I asked leave to communicate with the American minister. This request was refused. I was not allowed books, writing materials or other food than the regular prison fare and was, in fact, treated in all respects as a criminal. On the third day the chief of police sent for me and asked if I would leave Russia if given my liberty. I replied in the negative and was returned to prison. My threats that the matter would be thoroughly sifted by our representative only made him smile, and he quietly informed me that he would keep me in prison for the rest of my life if need be. On the seventh day he sent for me again. I had now changed my mind. I saw that I could be sent off to Siberia if the officials so desired and that there was no longer the slightest hope of accomplishing my errand. I therefore answered him that I was ready and willing to leave the czar's dominions at a moment's notice, and as a steamer was to leave port that evening four police officers were detailed to escort me on board. Not only that, but I was locked up in a stateroom and not set at liberty until noon next day. I found Americans Englishmen and Frenchmen on the boat, but got no sympathy from any of them. On the contrary, I was called an idiot for my conduct, and every one agreed that I might have been packed off to Siberia without any one but the police being the wiser.

Was Never Free From Diarrhoea

More Than a Month at a Time Suffered Greatly, But

DR. FOWLER'S EXTRACT OF WILD STRAWBERRY CURED HIM

Mr. P. Victor, Peterborough, Ont., writes: "I would be very much surprised if I could find a person who has suffered greater from diarrhoea and sickness than I have, never being free from it for more than a month at a time. Many a time I have contemplated taking my life. Several visits from leading physicians failed to do me any good. A friend of mine, who knew how I suffered, visited me one day, bringing with him some of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, which after I had taken a few doses, gave me great relief. I sincerely hope this will catch the eye of those who suffer with the same complaint as I did."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has been on the market for close on to seventy years, and has been so universally used, from one end of Canada to the other, that many firms have undertaken to produce a substitute for it, and even going so far as to claim that their preparation is "The Same" or "Just as Good."

Do not accept their word for this, as these no-name, no-reputation imitations may be dangerous to your health.

Ask for "Dr. Fowler's" and insist on being given what you ask for.

The price of the original and genuine is 35 cents, and is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Relief at Once Cure Certain

Conclusive Evidence That Dr. Chase's Ointment Cures Itching Piles.

Mr. John G. McDonald, Pictou, N.S., writes:—"I used Dr. Chase's Ointment for itching piles, and found that the first application gave relief. After using a few boxes of the ointment I was completely cured, and can recommend it highly to all sufferers from this disease. You have my permission to use this letter for the benefit of others."

Mr. James M. Douglas, Superior Junction, Ont., writes:—"For about six years I suffered from piles, and often could not work for two or three days at a time, so great was the suffering from pain and itching. Doctors treated me in vain, and I tried many treatments before I came across Dr. Chase's Ointment. Two boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment cured me, and for several months I have had no return of this annoying ailment."

There can be no doubt that Dr. Chase's Ointment is the most effective treatment obtainable for every form of piles. 60 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

This photo was taken at Spithead at the recent manoeuvers and only includes a few ships of the first squadron.

THE KAISER'S BIG TASK

Germany has assumed the stupendous task of fighting practically all Europe with Austria as her only ally. This means that the combined land forces of the two nations aggregating 7,800,000 men will be thrown against a force of 9,8338,000 men of th triple entente and allies. Following is the number of soldiers mobilized by the different countries:

	War Strength
Germany	5,800,000
Austria	2,000,000
Total	7,800,000
France	4,000,000
Russia	4,360,000
England	731,000
Belgium	222,000
Servia	240,000
Montenegro	50,000
Total	9,838,000

LUSITANIA CHASED BACK TO PORTLAND?

Reported Last Night Her Attempt to Reach England Had Been Frustrated

PORTLAND, Me., Aug. 5—8.10 p.m.—Wireless operators intercepted messages indicating that the Lusitania is headed for Portland.

Message indicates that she was pursued by German warships.

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—In the face of possible capture by German cruisers in the waters just outside the harbour, the Cunard liner Lusitania passed out to sea at 1.55 this morning on what promised to be a record-breaking trip to Liverpool.

The German cruisers known to be only a short distance off the coast are the Dresden, Karlsruhe, and the Strassburg. Two French cruisers, said to be the Conde and the Descartes, are also reported to be in the vicinity of the eastbound trans-Atlantic lane.

While hoping to escape capture by the German cruisers by her speed, it was said the Lusitania's captain had the assurance of British naval authorities that he would be met off Fire Island by the British cruisers Essex and Lancaster, and convoyed by them as far as Newfoundland, where, it was reported, other British naval vessels would accompany the liner to the Irish coast.

Captain Dow, before sailing, said that his vessel was in fine trim and that he expected to make 25 knots an hour all the way across.

No Lights Shown.

The Lusitania slipped out to sea with only her masthead and sidelights showing, her 200 passengers having been notified that lights in staterooms might be blanketed when the vessel passed Ambrose Channel.

In the passage ways oil lamps replaced the usual electric lights. Passengers were permitted on deck, but warned that no lights could be shown.

LEFT TO-DAY IN RESPONSE TO AN OFFICIAL ORDER

Harry Watson, an employee of the Oriental Hotel, left on the 11:22 train for Halifax this morning, where he will report for duty on H.M.S. Niobe. Mr. Watson received a telegram ordering him to report at once. The telegram, when presented to the railway authorities, will be his passport to Halifax. Mr. Adamson, Sophia street, East City, has also been ordered to report.

SHUT OFF BRIGHT LIGHTS.

Ontario Safety League Asks Auto Drivers to Help.

The Ontario Safety League are asking automobile drivers to turn off the bright lights of their cars while using the well-lighted city streets.

It is pointed out that when the rays from these lights strike the eyes of any one approaching in the opposite direction it is absolutely impossible for those to see. Pedestrians crossing the streets, tracks, or standing at intersections, are practically blinded by the glare of the lamps and haven't a chance in the world to see what is ahead of them.

In city driving, particularly on streets where cars operate, it isn't necessary for the lights, and they are confusing to other motorists.

Auto drivers will save electricity and gas by discontinuing this practice and materially help the Safety First movement.

May Be Famine In Hospital Goods

Canada Dependent Upon Europe for Supplies of Drugs and Chemicals

TORONTO, Aug. 5.—A famine in hospital supplies and surgical instruments threatens Canada, and this afternoon the prices of drugs and chemicals advanced 20 per cent., which is considered by local drug men to be merely a start for record prices.

Canadian hospitals that have been endeavouring to purchase carbolic acid in one thousand pound lots find it impossible to be served. One large local drug and chemical house was compelled to turn down a one ton order of the odorous disinfectant this morning.

"Canadian houses are in a bad way," said Mr. Charles Hays, "and I do not think that any of us are stocked to carry on normal orders for more than a few weeks at the longest."

Heavy Chemical Exports.

A glance over the import list of the chemical business shows at once how dependent Canada is upon the European manufacturers. Nearly all our medicine bases come from Germany. There is not one carbolic acid works on this side of the Atlantic. Cream of tartar, an important factor in the manufacture of breadstuffs, is entirely a product of France, and to the warring nations we look for our supply of Epsom salts, nitre, sulphur, and photographic chemicals.

The French have an absolute corner in the manufacture of high-grade perfumery, and this luxury is liable to soar to unheard-of prices in the next few weeks.

Some in the States.

The United States can supply a limited quantity of chloroform, and the supply of sulphuric acid can be cared for locally, but the complex chemicals and surgical instruments, together with medicines and medical and scientific glassware, is completely off for the present.

There is a plant growing on mountains in central Europe that develops enough heat to push its flower stalks through snow and produce blossoms.

Farm and Dairy Market Report

Toronto, Monday, Aug. 3.—The world's markets were never in a more unsettled state than now. We are passing through the darkest period for many years. American markets have not yet been affected to anything like the degree that European markets have. Many failures are already reported from the other side as a result of wars and rumors of wars. The interdependence of nations was never brought to light more clearly than at the present time. Should Europe be turned into a battle field the effect on international trade would be no less serious than the effect on the financial standing of the nations concerned.

The first effect of war news has been a stiff advance in the price of wheat in Europe the prospects were called awful from the harvests and the wheat had to be harvested. In other lines of farm produce prices have been unaffected and our markets are generally the same as those that ruled last week.

WHEAT

The advance in wheat quotations since last writing amounts to eight cents. War news has been largely responsible for the same time crop reports from the wheat growing areas are not at all favorable Canada's crop for instance, will not be much over 40 per cent. of full. Ontario wheat has advanced in sympathy with Western wheat. Quotations now are: No 1 Northern, $1.36; No. 2, $1.33½. Ontario old crop, 95c to 96c; new crop, 90c to 92c.

COARSE GRAINS

Quotations on oats and corn have shown a tendency to harden in response to a good local demand. Otherwise quotations are unchanged: Oats C. W. No. 2, 44½c. No. 3, 43½c; Ontario, 40c to 42c; corn, 69½c; peas, 90c to $1.25; barley, malting 56c to 58c; rye, 62c to 64c; buckwheat, 55c to 56c.

At Montreal the market for corn and barley has been strong and the demand for oats heavy with an advance in price. Quotations: Oats, C. W. No. 2, 46c; No. 3 do; barley, feed, 57c to 58c; corn, 72c to 73c.

HAY AND STRAW

More hay is arriving on the market and is meeting with a ready demand. There is a strong demand for old hay and such more of it could be disposed of and at a considerable premium over new hay prices. Wholesale quotations are: No. 1 baled hay, $14 to $15.50; No. 2, $13 to $13; new baled hay, $12 to $13.50; baled straw, $7 to $8.50. At Montreal the hay situation continues to strengthen. No. 1 timothy quoted freely at $20 to $21.50 car lots.

EGGS AND POULTRY.

Egg receipts show a tendency to decline and prices are liable to advance soon. Wholesale dealers quote to the trade as follows: Strictly new-laids in cartons, 26c to 27c; extra firsts, 24c to 25c; ordinary firsts, 23c to 23c. Wholesale quotations at Montreal for eggs are: Fresh, 23c to 24c; selected, 25c to 27c; No. 1 stock, 22c; No. 2 stock, 20c to 21c. The price in the country runs all the way from 18c to 22c.

Poultry are quoted as follows: Fowl, dressed, heavy, 15c to 16c; light, 13c to 14c; live, light, 11c; heavy, 14c; chickens, dressed, milk-fed, 22c to 25c ordinary, 18c to 20c; live, yearling, 15c to 16c; broilers, 22c to 25c; turkeys, dressed, 18c to 20c; alive, 15c to 16c. Spring ducks, dressed, 18c to 20c; live, 15c to 16c; dressed, 18c to 20c.

POTATOES AND BEANS

Potato quotations continue on the downgrade as more new potatoes arrive. Ontario's are quoted at $1.40 to $1.60 a bag and imported, $7 to $8.25 a bbl. At Montreal quotations are:

Wholesale dealers are speculating as to be result of the war on the Canadian bean market, as Austrian beans play a large part in the Canadian trade. Present quotations are: Primes $2.20 a bus.; hand-picked, $2.30 to $2.35.

FRUIT AND VEGETABLES.

The market is flooded with cherries and consumption can have difficulty in disposing of receipts. Quotations are: Jerusalem, Can., bkt., 40c to 60c; outdoor, bkt., 35c to 40c; cabbage, case, $1 to $1.25; tomatoes, bkt. 60c to 65c; green peas, 11 qt. bkt., 40c; green beans, 35c to 40c; early apples, hamper, $1.60; 11 qt. bkt., 35c to 40c; gooseberries, 11 qt. bkt., 35c to 40c; red raspberries, qt., 12c to 13c; black, 6c qt.; 12c; red currants, 30c to 40c; black, $1 to $1.25; sour cherries, 11 qt. bkt., 40c to 60c.

DAIRY PRODUCE

Butter has assumed a distinctly stronger tone at all Eastern Canada markets. Some dealers at Montreal are inclined to doubt the wisdom of advancing quotations ahead of an export basis, fearing that the result will be increased production and more butter than the trade can handle at present quotations. It must be remembered, however, that so far it is estimated that production has fallen off 50,000 packages with a further shrinkage predicted during the next few months. The make will be practically ended in three months and supplies will be necessary for the next six or seven. Instead of an over-supply we may actually need to import before next year's make is on hand.

Cheese is distinctly quiet, as it has been for the last couple of weeks. Practically all country boards show slight reductions in price, from 1-16c to ⅛c. Holders on this side find English buyers indifferent at quotations that they must have if they are to come out right with their holdings. There have been several inquiries for cheese from the United States. The make is somewhat below that of the corresponding period last year.

MEMBERS OF 57TH REGIMENT WON'T SHRINK

From Duty on Battlefield If They Are Needed — Officers Are Awaiting Orders and the Whole Corps is in Suspense

OFFICERS VOLUNTEER

For the purpose of military administration the Dominion of Canada is divided into six divisonal areas and three military districts, with headquarters in each as points for mobilization in the respective commands. Just how quickly mobilization can be carried out is largely a matter of speculation, as such an experiment has never yet been tried. No one but th Militia Department knows whether, when once assembled, the men would find every article of campaigning equipment ready for their use at the armouries, but it is reported that the various armouries are practically fully equipped.

The 57th Regiment is in the 3rd Divisional Area, with general headquarters at Kingston. According to the general military scheme, if the local regiment was called out it would gather at Clarke, Ont., with the 40th, 45th and 46th Regiments. But as there is no accommodation at Clarke, those regiments, if called out, will mobilise at their respective individual headquarters. The 40th would collect at Cobourg, 45th at Lindsay, and 46th at Cobourg, and the 57th in Peterborough.

Should the 57th be called out as a regiment, the members will be summoned by notification and bugle call, and will assemble at the Armouries in full strength and ordinary formation.

The procedure will depend entirely upon the orders issued. If the whole regiment is called out they would find a large part of war equipment at the Armouries. The remainder would be issued as soon as they arrived in camp, and would include what is known as the Webb equipment, which has replaced the Oliver equipment. That could be provided from the local Armouries. The Regiment will either wear their scarlet uniform or their cotton khaki service uniform.

On the other hand, it is very probable that volunteers will be called for and not the whole regiment ordered out. In this case it is likely that unmarried men up to 35 would form the first line, unmarried men and married men up to 45 the second line, and all men up to 60 years of age able to carry arms, the 3rd line.

Of the local officers, Mr. C. Ackerman has volunteered and had his services accepted. Col. Miller has also volunteered and Mr. Harold Matthews has been given a commission in the cavalry, and is awaiting orders to go to the front.

Col. Clegg and Major Mills were waiting for orders all this morning at the Armouries, but up to noon none had arrived. Should volunteers be called for, they, too, will muster at the Armouries. The officers and men of the 57th Regiment are in a state of utmost suspense. At any time may come a cable, telegram or letter calling the whole regiment out. All show an admirable spirit and are ready to do their duty in defence of the Empire and the Dominion. Meantime all are anxiously waiting definite notification, either ordering mobilization or calling for volunteers, add it is safely to be predicted that, whatever the demand on the local militia and men, it will be answered in a manner that will reflect nothing but praise upon the city and the men themselves.

New Confidence Awakened By First Victories

Britain Now Entertains No Doubt—Sure of Her Fleet and Trusts Her Allies to Hold Ground Already Gained

The Banks Are Unafraid; First Panic Has Passed

LONDON, Aug. 6.—A great wave of optimism sweeps England. To-day there is renewed confidence in the power of the navy to keep away the German invader, and there is more belief in the ability of Britain's allies to hold back the German land forces until the British expeditionary forces can be landed in Belgium.

At the same time there is extreme anxiety and eagerness for news from the North Sea. Naval experts agree that the German admiral, Von Tirpitz, will not risk his all on a decisive naval action with the British fleet unless he has to. In the meantime, too, he has the main Russian fleet practically bottled up in the Baltic Sea, and it may be Germany's plan to exterminate it.

Recruiting for the army is going on with intense enthusiasm. There are more men offering than at present are required.

The money situation also shows some improvement and there are to-day few indications of the panic stricken feeling of Monday and Tuesday.

EIGHT LOCAL YOUNG MEN OFF TO FRONT

Left With Cobourg Heavy Artillery For Quebec This Afternoon—Company Given a Great Send-Off

ENTRAINED AT 2.30 O'CLOCK

Eight local boys were called to the Colours at midnight last night, when a telephone message was received at the local Police Station from Major Oddel of Cobourg, to notify them to repair to that town at once.

Major Oddell is in command of the Cobourg Company of the Canadian Garrison Artillery, which entrained for Quebec about 2.30 o'clock this afternoon, and of which the eight local young men are members.

The eight local Militiamen who were notified to report for service at once, at midnight last night, were Sergt. Lapp, E. Hargrove, C. Richardson, Percy Parrington, M. Huycke, L. Love, Percy Holland and L. Kieff.

With only one exception they left this morning for Cobourg.

The Cobourg Company of Canadian Garrison Artillery, including the local contingent of seven, was given a riotously royal send-off at the Cobourg Station about half-past two this afternoon. The Cobourg citizens band escorted the 150 men to the station, but the music of the band scarcely rose above the cheering and hurrahing of the throng.

The crowds cheered, sang patriotic songs, including "God Save the King," and waved Union Jacks.

Business was literally suspended for some time, and the crowds that thronged the street with difficulty opened up for the passage of the Cobourg Heavy Battery.

The only local boy who did not get the notification was Meredith Huycke, who is in Ottawa or Brockville. His family are endeavouring to get in touch with him, and he, too, may join the battery at Quebec, or en route.

WE SHALL DO OUR BEST.

An extra of the Canadian Gazette contains the following order-in-council:

His Royal Highness the Governor-General in Council is pleased to order that H.M.C.S. Niobe and H.M.C.S. Rainbow, together with the officers and seamen serving in such vessels, shall be and the same are hereby placed at the disposal of His Majesty for general service in the Royal Navy.

While Dreadnoughts and super-Dreadnoughts are tremendous engines of destrucelon they have only their appointed places in modern warfare; they cannot altogether supersede the swift cruisers that are adapted to patrol work, and would be of infinitely greater service to Canada in the present crisis when our shores are liable to naval raids. There is need for cruisers of the Bristol type to protect our coasts and our routes of commerce. The Government now sees the necessity of this, and the above order-in-council is the result of the rather belated recognition of duty on the part of Canada. It is proposed that Canada should purchase three Dreadnoughts to add to the British navy; but that would not meet the situation as well as three or four swift cruisers. These would, perhaps, give better service to Great Britain than three Dreadnoughts in the battle line in the North Sea. War does not need only impregnable ships and big guns, but the maintenance of the man behind the gun. An army and a navy must be fed, the home country must be fed, and it stands to reason that Canada could do Great Britain better service by using swift cruisers to protect its own shores and the trade routes to insure food supplies, than by having three Dreadnoughts in the battle line. Bread is as necessary a munition of war as bullets. The great need of Canada, and indirectly of the Empire, is fast cruisers of the Bristol type, such as Canada received tenders for under the Canadian Naval Act of 1910. The "Bristol" cruiser type brought out in 1909, consists of armoured cruisers of 5,000 tons, supplied with the most modern guns, and with a speed of twenty-six knots—nearly 30 miles—an hour.. Two or three of them in Canadian waters at the present time would be a great protection to Canada and a mighty help to the Empire; and if any such cruisers are open to purchase they should be secured by Canada and put into commission at once. There should be little difficulty in obtaining volunteers to man them, for there are hundreds perhaps in Canada that have seen active naval service.

The present Government has done well in deciding to put the Niobe and Rainbow in commission. Though they were bought merely as training ships by the Laurier Government, they, the Niobe especially, which is a fully protected cruiser of eleven thousand tons, might be easily adapted to scouting purposes, and adequately manned, give a good account of themselves. We need, and we might have had—but it is too late for regrets—two or three cruisers of our own manned by Canadian sailors to do the work that is so sorely needed at the present time. We must do the best we can, under the circumstances. If there is any truth in the rumour that a German cruiser is attempting to cut the Anglo-Canadian cable at Glace Bay, the wisdom of Canada having provided herself wih a fleet unit; in whole or in part, is greatly emphasised. We do not need Dreadnoughts; we need, as Lord Charles Beresford, one of the greatest naval authorities, said, "the racer, not the dray horse"—the cruiser not the Dreadnought.

WE MUST STAND UNITED.

In this hour of Canadian, imperial and world-wide crisis, all truly loyal subjects will stand together, and when the interests of all creeds, classes and parties are menaced, there should be found few base enough to seek to gain party advantage and inflame party passions at the expense of the national solidarity of sentiment and action that is incumbent upon all Canadians. In Great Britain, a truce has been called to all parties and factions; and Whig and Tory, Nationalist and Ulstrite are standing shoulder to shoulder—all their differences buried for the moment, so that all can enter unfettered into the discharge of the duty of the hour.

We in Canada should do the same. The petty quarrels of party, the petty interests of party should fade away and recede into the background; and a solid front be presented to the foe. It is a sorry time to quarrel about tribes when the enemy—the common enemy of all is at our gates.

Some few of the baser sort, in our own community, are forgetting this duty; and in other places, even responsible journals, are degrading their function to partizanship, and playing the traitor part in fomenting discord, when everything but the patriotic duty of the whole people to stand as one man in defence of this country should b forgotten and laid aside. Apropos to this the Globe has the following, under the heading of "Inflaming Canadian Party Passions":

Surely the time has come when appeals to the party passions and prejudices that divide political opinion in Canada are not only a menace to Canadity unity of sentiment, but also high treason against the Empire. It was surely beyond the limit of decency and patriotism when all last week, in certain Conservative newspapers supporting the Dominion Government, insinuations and insulting calumnies were published against Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Liberals in Parliament, and the entire Liberal party in Canada. It surely was intolrable enough, especially on the part of the chief Government organ in Ontario, to go on this week making the same false, misleading, and utterly mischivous editorial attacks. The Mail and Empire still declars, in face of the facts of 1909, 1910, 1911, that Canada would be cooperating in the naval defence of the Empire to-day "had the government of the country been in other hands than those of Sir Wilfrid Laurier." But the depth of indcency and malignity is now being struck when, in its bulletin service flashed on the sheet before the night-crowds on the streets, the mob-spirit is deliberately incited by such vulgar and untruthful appeals as this: "The 'Old Cock' said there was no emergency. What say you?"

Surely there are in Toronto, even in its excited night-crowds on the streets, intelligence enough and patriotism enough to resent such straight appeals to party passion? And surely the honourable and serious-minded Conservatives of Toronto and of Canada will refuse, in the name of one half of Canada's citizens, to allow, at this time of national peril, such studied and persistent insults to the other half of Canada's citizens and to their honoured political leaders. The questions of naval defence we would gladly discuss, but this inflaming of sectional feeling is both a folly and a crime.

THE FATE OF THE GERMAN EMPIRE IN "PROPHECY"

La Patrie, Montreal, publishes the following revival of a prophecy which will be interesting at the present time. It is a prediction that a clairvoyante made to William I. of the Hollenzollerns line, King of Prussia, the first Emperor of Germany, respecting the duration of the Germany Empire.

Wliliam I. of the Hollenzollerns, was King of Prussia in 1861, and Emperor of Germany from 1871 to 1888. The second son of Frederick William III., he succeeded his brother, Frederic William IV. He governed energetically, taking for his first minister, Bismarck; he reconstructed upon a sound basis the Prussian army and allied himself with Austria to crush Denmark in 1864; he afterwards turned his arms against his ally, Austria, which he defeated at Sadowa in 1866; and in 1870 conquered France, from which he wrested, by the treaty of Frankfort, Alsace and Lorraine.

An old resident of Flenburg, who recently celebrated his 90th birthday, relates that William I., then heir of the Prussian throne, visited a clairvoyante. He asked her if he would ever become Emperor of Germany.

"Yes," was the reply.

"In what year?"

The clairvoyante wrote twice upon a sheet of paper the date of the revolution of Prussia, disposing the digits as can be seen in the first column of the figures below:

1848	1871	1888
4	7	8
9	1	8
1871	1888	1918

After making her addition she said: "Yes, you will be Emperor of Germany in 1871."

"And when shall I die?" asked the prince.

Again she wrote according to the same disposition of figures, as in the second column of the above table.

Again she announced the result—"You will die in 1888." (He died in that year.)

"How long will the German Empire last?" was the next inquiry.

The reply was that given in the total of the third of above columns of figures—

"Till 1918."

It seems that the last line of prediction has not been fulfilled with the literal exactness of the first two. But the prophetess might have meant that the causes, the preparation of the end were made in 1918 to ripen in 1914. The immediate future will decide.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

One million six hundred thousand dollars gold was engaged for shipment to Canada in New York yesterday afternoon.

Fire destroyed a barn, shop and shed at Port Carling, Ont., yesterday afternoon, belonging to the Wm. Davies Co. of Toronto.

Geo. B. McLeod, aged 17, of Kingston, a wireless operator, and son of P. C. McLeod, is on some unknown German steamer and his parents are worrying over his safety.

When he drove his car at a fast clip against the sides of a street car Tuesday night, Jean Gagnon, of Quebec, chauffeur for Dr. Robert Larue, sent three occupants of the vehicle to their death.

There is every likelihood the Dominions Royal Commission will cancel entirely its engagements in Canada until the present condition of European affairs, in which Great Britain is involved, are cleared.

Hungarians In U. S. Would Revolt.

NEW YORK, Aug. 6. — One hundred thousand Hungarians in America have pledged themselves to raise a fund of $10,000,000 to finance a revolution in Hungary, according to Louis Tareai, editor of The Hungarian Daily Elore. Tareai says that such a revolution now is regarded as inevitable by many Hungarians who are determined to eliminate the Hapsburg dynasty, but he does not believe it will take place until the $10,000,000 is raised.

"The war started by Austria will so impoverish the already severely oppressed Hungarians that they will have no alternative except revolt," he added.

Five Thousand For a Flag.

PARIS, Aug 6.—(Via London.)—A substantial cash prize will go to the French soldier who captures the first German flag taken in the war.

Paul Charnier, manufacturer of flags in Paris, yesterday offered a reward of 5,000 francs ($1,000) to the Frenchman, no matter what rank, who wrests away from its bearer the first Teutonic standard. He posted the money in cash with Le Matin, a daily newspaper.

Great enthusiasm was aroused by his offer.

BLOUNTMEN TOOK THE FOURTH GAME

Split the Series With the League Leaders — Scored Timely Win Over Southpaw Heck.

HELPED THE CHAMPS

LONDON, Aug. 5.—Linneborn connected with a hit that should have broken the tie and won the game for London in the ninth round this afternoon, but an unlucky bound caused the pill to strike Osborn as he bolted for second and the side was retired.

An error by Dunn in the seventh opened the gate for four runs for Peterborough after the Indians had got away for a winning start. The Petes thus broke even on the set. The score:

SUSPENSE IN BRITAIN.

Admiralty Is Silent Regarding Situation In North Sea.

LONDON, Aug. 6. — What of the North Sea? The one question on the lips of all Britain remains unanswered. In London anxious throngs wait about the War Office all day and all night. Dense crowds are gathered at Westminster. The streets are packed with questioning humanity.

Official lips are sealed in silence and secrecy. No word has been spoken concerning the fleet that steamed to battle in the darkness of Tuesday's early morn. No communication has yet come from the vital sea.

Many rumors spent their empty force against the silence of the Admiralty. The newspapers published stories from Hull saying that heavy firing had been heard in the coast city at daybreak. If battle was raging within sound distance of this port it was regarded as a clash between British and German scout ships, since the main column of the Kaiser's armada is still reported as clinging to the German naval base at the mouth of the Elbe. Other stories said that two German battleships had been sunk.

Later in the day the Mayor of Margate reported to the authorities that tremendous cannonading could be heard at that point from the direction of the North Sea. He expressed his belief that the rival naval forces were engaged in a death duel not far from the British shores.

None of these reports were confirmed by the Admiralty. It seems evident that officialdom takes the view that any engagements near the shores of the mother island are merely clashes between scouting cruisers.

The exact position of the main British fleet is believed to be known to the Government to-day, as the wireless was busy for some time last night.

GERMAN SHIPS TAKEN.

British and French War Craft Are Playing Havoc.

ALGIERS, Aug. 6.—(Via London.)—Authentic confirmation of the report of the destruction of the German cruiser Panther and of the capture of the German cruisers Goeben and Breslau reached here yesterday.

After bombarding the Algerian town of Bona, the Goeben, Breslau and Panther were caught by British and French squadrons, which had been awaiting them. The French warships captured the Goeben and Breslau.

German Steamer Captured.

LONDON, Aug. 6. — Confirmation has been received of the report that a French warship has captured the German steamer Porto off Guernsey, Channel Islands. The Porto, which belongs to the Oldenburg-Portuguese Steamship Co., is a vessel of 1,800 tons and plies between Germany and Portuguese ports.

Third Cruiser Captured.

LONDON, Aug. 6. — The French Embassy announced last night that France has captured a third German cruiser. It is believed that the French fleet cut off one of the German North Sea scout cruisers and forced it to surrender.

Koenigin Luise Destroyed.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—The Admiralty last night announced that it had officially confirmed the report that a British torpedo-boat destroyer flotilla yesterday blew up and sank the German mine-laying vessel Koenigin Luise in the North Sea.

The Koenigin Luise is a twin-screw mail steamship of over 10,800 tons displacement. Some time ago she was taken off the passenger service of the North German Lloyd Line.

PRESS IS CALLED OFF.

Col. Hughes Requests Silence Regarding Militia Movements.

OTTAWA, Aug. 6.—Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes has issued a special request to the press of Canada to refrain from publishing anything about military operations and to abstain from publishing unauthorized statements about the assembling or moving of regiments, purchase of remounts, stores or supplies, erection of fortifications, etc. "We may be certain," he says, "that the agents of hostile powers are searching your papers eagerly for statements as to the movements of our artillery forces, the nature and disposition of our defences and other facts bearing on the prosecution of the war."

The publication of such information, he adds, will help the enemy, while its suppression will help Canada very considerably. France was hurt, he says, by the publication of war operations in 1870 and Japan was aided by the suppression of such news in 1904-5, and in the South African war many valuable lives were lost through the publication of war news.

He concluded with the assurance that the Department of Militia will give out such information as is usually supplied, having regard to the restraint referred to.

German Fleet In Baltic.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 6. — A German fleet of nineteen ships was sighted yesterday near the east coast of the Baltic sea between Memmel and Libau.

Russian warships in the Black Sea have captured many German merchantmen.

BRITAIN'S NAVAL STRATEGY—This map gives a good idea of the Admiralty's probable move against the German fleet. The German fleet unless it skulks behind fortresses will probably fail to elude the British cordon and be compelled to give battle between the north coast of Scotland and the rocky shores of Norway.

The Law and The Gospel Contrasted and Compared

(To the Editor of the Examiner.)
585 Harvey Street,
Peterborough, August 5, 1914.

Esteemed sir,—I would be extremely obliged if you would allow me a little space in your valuable paper for the sake of the folks who are listening night after night to Mr. Johnston here on the corner of Dublin and Harvey Streets, and for Mr. Johnston's sake as well. In the first place, I would say Mr. Johnston is preaching law instead of Gospel, seeking to bring back the people into bondage from which Christ has made them free. Mr. Johnston says we must keep the seventh day as the law given on Mount Sinai is binding for all time, and to keep holy the Sabbath day is one of those commandments. Just so. I believe it all, but I read in the Epistle to the Hebrews that God has made a new covenant with His people, for the first covenant was not sufficient to redeem men from sin, was never intended to, but its business was to convince, to condemn, to make a person feel how helpless they were, and as we are told in Galatians, chap. 3, the law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ and when it has done this it has served the purpose God intended it to serve. Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law being made a curse for us; for, "cursed is every one who keepeth not the law," and none did keep it; so all came under the curse. But Jesus died in our place, all our back sins were cancelled by His death and a new and living way was opened up by Him, leading to freedom from sin and the gift of eternal life.

Now, the law given on Mount Sinai if man could have kept it, would have led to life; but "the commandment which was ordained to life," the Apostle Paul says, "I found to be unto death"; all it could do was make him cry out, "Oh, wretched man that I am, who can deliver me from the body of this death"; and this, as I said before, was precisely what the law was given for; and we read, Christ is the end of the law to every one that believeth.

Now, God helping me, I will try and make this plain, for I desire to preach Jesus and not the law of Mount Sinai. "What is the difference between the Law and the Gospel?" The one you serve because it is your duty to serve, but there is no love in it; but the new covenant which God made revealed God's love, His great love; for the power of the cross of Christ is the love that is in it. We read that without shedding of blood there is no remission. What does this mean? It means just this—that if Jesus had stopped anything short of His suffering on Calvary we should not have been convinced of the love of God for us poor sinning creatures. Jesus did not die to appease the wrath of an angry God; I say this emphatically; He died to reconcile us to God, not reconcile God to us. He was not estranged from us, but we had got away from Him through fear because we had broken His commandment. The cross was to show us that with all our faults He loved us still; and when we realize this and our poor, struggling, broken hearts go out to Him, He takes us by the hand and says, "This my son was dead, but is alive again; was lost and is found." Now, the way is made much easier; we will no longer try to keep the law, for we have a loving Father on our side who says, "I will put my law in their heart." What does God mean by this? I will use a homely figure to show what He means. Is the husband's law in the heart of a devoted wife? Are his wishes grievous to her? No, no. His every wish, if he is a worthy man, is her delight; and so God's law when we love and trust Him is a delight, no longer a bondage, for we serve from love because He loves us and we love Him.

But what about this seventh day question which Mr. Johnston says if we do not keep after He has shown us we should keep it, we shall be branded with the mark of the beast, spoken of in Revelations, and on our poor heads will fall the seven last terrible plagues. I thank my God I am delivered from all such fears. We read in Galatians, chap. 5, verse 14: All the law is fulfilled in one word—"Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." If you do this you have kept the whole law, for you will not love your neighbour if God's law is not in your heart; you will bow down to idols, you will covet, and you will steal, you will steal your neighbour's wife, his goods, his break the law in every way if God's redeeming love has not reached your heart. But if His love is there that is the power which saves from sin and which keeps the laws of its God. "Yes," I fancy I hear Mr. Johnston say, "I will keep the seventh day, Sabbath."

Wait and let us see. Hebrews, chap. 4, we read that the rest which the Hebrew Sabbath typified was the resting from our own works as God did from His, rest from trying to keep the law and enter into the rest which comes from believing that God is working in us to will and to do of His own good pleasure. So that commandment to keep the seventh day has served its purpose like all the rest of the commandments.

I know this is a pretty great assertion to make, and many will open their eyes when I say this that every day is alike to the Christian. They are all the Lord's days, and the rest which belongs to Him is the rest of soul, of peace with God, of sins forgiven, of a conscience void of offence toward God and man. This is as I understand the 4th chapter of Hebrews.

The people are not all dead in these enlightened days who would make it the all-important thing to conform to the letter of God's word, which is only the shell which contains the kernel. But God has led me to find the kernel, and I can no longer be content to feed on the husk; to live on the husk is to die, but the kernel which is Jesus and all He stands for, gives life. Do we not read that if righteousness come by the law then Christ has died in vain, and that "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." Jesus has declared He will live and dwell by His spirit in the heart of all who will receive Him, and will lead us into all truth.

Let me say in conclusion that in order to receive the new birth there must come light into our souls, for this is what will condemn men. That light has come into the world, but men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil, neither will they bring their deeds to the light lest they should be reproved"; and in proportion to the light received does the law of God given on Mount Sinai begin to work and the soul passes through great suffering of mind if it is a sensitive soul. This increases until suffering becomes agony. Then, dear soul, if there be any such who may read these lines, "rejoice, for your salvation draweth nigh." These are the travailing pains of a new birth. Do not, I beg of you, for your own sake, for the sake of those who witness your agony and suffer with you, do not, I say, prolong those pains, but get it over as quickly as possible and enjoy the rest which comes to those who are born from above. There is really nothing mysterious about this birth. Jesus said, "The words I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life." Accept his teachings, eat them, digest them, and they will pass into your spiritual being and that new being will grow, and in proportion the old man will die; and as the new man will not need the law it passes out of his life, for the law is for sinners, for law-breakers, and the new man is not a law-breaker. This man is not under law, but under grace. Dear reader, do you know all that word grace stands for? If not, try and find out, for it would take up too much space here for me to tell you.—Yours, etc.,

Mrs. Burton.

GERMANS REPELLED

Belgians Administered Severe Defeat at City of Liege

PRISONERS AT SPA

BRUSSELS, Aug. 6.—(Via Paris.)—Several thousand dead and wounded is the toll paid by the German army of the Meuse for its attack on Liege. The Belgians made a heroic defense, repulsing the Germans after heavy and continuous fighting.

The fortified position of Liege had to support on Wednesday the general shock of the German attack. The Belgian forts resisted the advance fiercely and did not suffer.

One Belgian squadron drove back six German squadrons.

Eight hundred wounded Germans are being transferred to the city of Liege, where they will be cared for.

Prior to the attack on Liege Gen. Von Emmich, commanding the German army of the Meuse, issued a proclamation calling for an open road through Belgium for the advance of his forces, and suggesting that prudence would show it to be the duty of the Belgian people to accede to this in order to avoid the horrors of war.

The Germans committed repressions against the civil population of the town of Vise, eight miles northeast of Liege, burning the city and shooting many of the residents.

The Belgian War Office announced last night that fierce fighting had occurred in the environs of Liege, and that so far as the Belgians were concerned the situation is excellent. "The Germans," the announcement says, "were driven back by an heroic attack made by a Belgian mixed brigade, which already had earned for itself the highest honors. No German who passed the fort survived."

The Germans, completely repulsed, have been unable to renew their attack on Liege.

French troops are reported to have entered the Province of Hainault, a frontier province of Belgium, and to have joined the Belgian army on the invitation of the Belgian Government.

Two regiments of German Uhlans have been destroyed by the Belgian army.

Two Regiments Annihilated.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 6.—All reports received here regarding fighting on the border agree that the German invaders are meeting with stubborn and probably entirely unlooked-for resistance.

It is reported that two German regiments were practically annihilated when an armored train was blown up by Belgians. A mine was sprung when the train was crossing a bridge and the slaughter was appalling. A heavy artillery fire was opened upon the survivors and their retreat was cut off by a Belgian column, which took a number of prisoners.

When the train was squarely on the bridge the mine was exploded, completely destroying the locomotive and the two forward cars filled with Germans. At the same time the Belgian artillery opened fire on the remainder of the German force which had been convoying the train.

The carnage was fearful. The Germans, although caught by surprise, put up a strong resistance, but they had no supporting artillery and finally retreated toward the frontier. In the meanwhile a Belgian column had been rushed to the rear of the German position and the two regiments composing the assaulting column were caught in a trap.

Many were killed before the officer in command surrendered the column to the Belgians.

The Belgian loss was comparatively unimportant, according to the announcement made public here. The German prisoners have been taken to Spa.

Most of those wounded were abandoned by the German army when it was forced to retreat. The Belgian artillery carried the day. The Germans attacked immediately on arrival without waiting for either infantry supports or for the artillery. It is because of this mistake that the Belgian forces were able to gain the advantage. When the infantry and supporting artillery reached the scene of battle it found that the cavalry and motorcycle brigades had been decimated by the fire. The Germans charged, but could not carry the Belgian position, and finally the entire army was withdrawn toward the Meuse.

Le Peuple asserts that in the fighting between Germans and Belgians near Vise a platoon of Prussian cavalry was almost annihilated by the enfilading fire of the Belgians from a building on the bank of the river.

The Prussians in revenge, the newspaper says, fired on civilians.

At Flemalle, near Argenteu, a Belgian force surprised a body of Prussians, and killed seventy out of ten officers and eighty men.

German troops have crossed the Belgian frontier at three points — at Oelheim, seven miles north of Liege, and at Francorchamps and Stavelot, both about 25 miles to the southeast of Fleron, six miles from Liege.

The prompt destruction of bridges by the Belgian troops checked the advance of the Germans.

Belgian reconnoitering parties located three German army corps, the sixth army corps at Elsden, the seventh army corps, 40,000 strong, at Verviers, and the sixth army corps, in another locality not named.

The tenth German army corps operating along the northern line, and finding unexpected resistance, moved further northward, invading Dutch territory at Tilburg and crossing the Meuse at Bleden.

Accurate measurement has shown that few raindrops exceed one-fifth of an inch in diameter.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Aug. 5.—Despite the shock of England having entered into war and apparently having forsaken plans to guarantee the safety of grain shipments intended for British ports, prices on the board of trade today developed great strength. WINNIPEG, Aug. 5.—Trading on the wheat market was quiet and transactions few, with prices apparently on a war basis. Liverpool cables (unofficial) were to the effect that wheat sold privately at an advance of 4½d higher than last quotation, and the market here followed in sympathy. MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 5.—There were no new developments in export grain circles today, business still being at a standstill, but the local market for coarse grains continues strong and prices are steadily tending towards a higher level. The demand for oats was good at a further advance of one-half cent per bushel, with a good demand for car lots from both local and country buyers and quite an active trade is doing. A feature of the flour market today was the strong feeling in winter wheat grades. Prices were advanced 25c to 60c per barrel under a good demand and small offerings. Spring wheat flour is strong with an active business for local account. Higher prices are expected in the near future owing to the advance in prices for wheat of 8½c to 8 5-8c per bushel during the past few days. The tone of the market for rolled oats was also strong at an advance of 20c to 30c per barrel. Mill feed is active and very firm. The butter market is excited, with a good demand from western buyers. Sales of car lots finest creamery were made at 26c to 26¼c, and one or two cars were also bought for American account. The cheese situation is somewhat demoralized, but the feeling in the market is strong. The demand for eggs is good. Dressed hogs declined 25c per 100 pounds.

LARGE WAR VOTE WANTED.

Fifty Millions Is One Rumor Current at Ottawa.

OTTAWA, Aug. 6. — The Government is continuing to deal with details of all kinds in connection with the sending out of the contingent, the coast defences and other matters. A constant stream of cablegrams is passing between the Government here and the Imperial authorities on various matters, including some in which the Government has sought advice from the Home Government.

An important question to be dealt with by the Government and Parliament will be the means of raising the war funds. There have been rumors of a vote of fifty millions, but this is probably far about the mark. The first vote, at least, is likely to be much less. The total expense of the war, of course, will depend on its duration and the character of service the Canadian troops are called on to perform.

But whatever the cost and whatever means are considered the best for raising the money, there is not the slightest doubt that the temper and spirit of the Canadian people in the present crisis will ensure for the Government strong and united support.

The first army division of some 21,000 men will probably be enlisted and gathered at Quebec by the time Parliament meets on Aug. 18. They will include 13,000 infantry, 3,000 cavalry and the rest artillery, engineering corps, signalling corps, army medical corps, etc. If the war lasts any considerable time, another army division will be mobilized and it is felt that there will be no more trouble raising the second contingent than the first.

Many Spies Arrested.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—Reginald McKenna, the Home Secretary, announced yesterday that 21 spies had been arrested in the British Isles during the last 24 hours, chiefly in important naval centres.

The Home Secretary introduced a bill in the House of Commons to restrain the movements of undesirable aliens, with the object of facilitating the removal of spies. This was immediately given a second reading.

GEN. KITCHENER IS THE WAR LORD

Popular Appointment Made By Premier Asquith---Nation is Remarkably Steady Under Strain

FOOD PANIC IS LESSENED

LONDON, Aug. 6. — Field Marshal Earl Kitchener has been appointed Secretary of State for War, the portfolio held by Premier Asquith since the resignation of Col. Seely.

The gaps in the British Cabinet occasioned by the resignations of Lord Morley and John Burns, because of their disagreement with their colleagues concerning the Government's policy were filled yesterday. Premier Asquith announced in the House of Commons that Earl Beauchamp, First Commissioner of Works, has been appointed to the place of Lord Morley as Lord President of the Council, and that of the Rt. Hon. Walter Runciman, hitherto President of the Board of Agriculture, would succeed the Rt. Hon. John Burns as President of the Local Government Board Premier Asquith also announced in the House of Commons that a war credit amounting to one hundred million pounds sterling will be submitted to-day to the House for sanction.

There have been reports that England would send a land expedition to the aid of Belgium, which would unite with the combined French and Belgian forces in repelling the invader. But as yet there is no official confirmation here of such a belief. Great enthusiasm has been aroused by the single-handed victory of the troops in the smaller sister kingdom.

Symptoms of a panic over the question of food and money supplies subsided greatly yesterday. There is general confidence that the measures undertaken by the Government will meet the crisis, that the money market will not smash, and that the Atlantic route will be kept open for shipments from America.

The fact that the Cunard liner Lusitania was ordered to sail had a reassuring effect, as indicating that the Admiralty feels certain that the navy is in a position to keep the German cruisers off the area of the North Atlantic trade routes.

David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, announced yesterday in the House of Commons that the conclusion had been reached with the unanimous assent of banking and other interests, that there would be no necessity to suspend specie payments.

There was a small riot yesterday in Southwark, where a bakery which attempted to double the price of bread was dismantled by an angry mob.

A distinct surprise to the popular mind is the country's apparent preparedness to change the machinery of ordinary life to a war footing on short notice. Not only is the army mobilization proceeding with great smoothness, but the Government's railway service under the direction of a committee of management is being operated without confusion. The cricket and football grounds in a number of cities have been occupied as camps while schools and other public buildings are being transformed into hospitals.

London was quieter last night, than on any other night of the week. The demonstrators, a large proportion of whom were foreigners, have subsided into comparative quiet. The report spread by London newspaper agencies that the windows of the German Embassy were broken is denied by the commissioner of police, who declares that there was no hostile outbreak.

PETERBORO' MEN STERNLY PREPARED TO SHARE IN THE EMPIRE'S STRUGGLE

Crowds in the Street Eager and Anxious for Information---Strong Undercurrent to Aid Britain in Present Crisis

That Peterborough's patriotism runs strong and deep, one but needs to mingle with the men on the streets to realize. The taunting attitude of Germany has stirred the blood of the whole city—and in these few lines there is no going beyond the local boundaries. Sir Edward Grey's words are re-echoed, "If she will have it, she shall have it," and last night an unusually big crowd waited in front of The Examiner office in the hope of hearing that the German North Sea fleet had received the first touch of the promised chastisemnt. But, the news was meagre, and the crowd had to be content to wait till morning at least, and hope for tidings of victory.

No Doubts Entertained.

The spirit of those who waited for definite news was almost anxiety, but faith in the British navy left very few doubts as to the outcome. There is confidence on he street, and behind is a general desire to assist the Mother Country.

The papers are full of the British unity that quells little family differences to present an unbroken bulwark of sentiment and readiness for action against the common enemy. The example afforded by the close amalgamation of factions which had grown wide apart has keyed up the national pulse to stronger and more rapid beatings. One feels a new pride in his British connection. Only the nonentity and the sluggard regard the present crisis with passivity. An occasional muckraker may question the patriotism of a section of Canadians, but fortunately the national lute presents no rifts.

Welcome Beating for Kaiser.

Assurances of aid to the Crown have been forwarded from all parts of Canada, anad in Peterborough the desire to serve is deep and unquestioning. The citizens have really been edified by the Britain's attempt to avert the crisis, and are more than convinced that she is in the right. The average man's present desire is to see the ambition of Germany decisively checked, and there are many of them that will be ready to lend their share in the struggle if they are needed.

Above this desire there is also a strong feeling that the Teuton ambition has over-leaped its mount, and that a heavy fall is imminent. Your Britisher, born of the home soil, hasn't a doubt of the outcome, nor does he hesitate to say what his own course will be if he is called upon. It's a long walk from the heart of the Empire, but the Old Countryman is back home in his imagination. The Canadian regards the situation less heatedly, but the danger to the Empire he makes his own. During the past few days the actual seriousness of the German aggression has been presented without any reservations, and you hear men tell each other that they, too, may be called, men who have never heard the zing of hostile bullets.

And through it all, you noice a spirit of determination. There have been no outbursts of enthusiasm. Peterborough requires something extraordinary to draw a real outburst from its citizens, but the sentiment that Britain's war is Canada's war is so pronounced that there is no questioning what will be the answer from this city if the call to duty is sounded.

TO ENLIST 20,000 MEN

Canadian Militia Department Calls For Volunteers

TWO MOBILIZATION BASES

OTTAWA, Aug. 6. — Mobilization orders were sent out last night by Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia. Twenty thousand men are called for and as applications have come in from 100,000 volunteers there will be no trouble in securing the first army division in a very short time. The commanding officers all over Canada will act as recruiting officers. The enlisting will start to-day and will be entirely voluntary.

It will be an imperial force and have the same status as British regulars. The instructions that have been issued require that the men shall have standard physical qualifications and also high military and shooting qualifications. The enlistment will be till the termination of the war and the individuality of the militia regiments will be preserved as far as possible.

Other considerations being equal, officers, non-commissioned officers and men will be selected in the following order:

1. Unmarried men.
2. Married men without families.
3. Married men with families.

The men must be between 18 and 45 years as a rule.

Officers and men who have had experience but are not now members of the force can enlist. Officers of the reserve can join if otherwise qualified.

Further mobilization orders will be issued later.

Valcartier near Quebec will be the main mobilization centre and the place is rapidly being prepared for the troops.

There may also be a mobilization centre on the Pacific coast, Hon. Clifford Sifton is one of the latest volunteers. He offers his services in any way they can be used.

Lady Drummond has also sent a wireless despatch from the Calgarian, via Cape Race, offering to pay the expenses of eight nurses.

Steps for the protection of the Pacific coasts were taken by the Government yesterday when it purchased two powerful torpedo-boat destroyers for use at Esquimalt.

The destroyers were purchased from the Government of Chili for whom they had just been completed at the naval ship yards at Seattle.

They will add materially to the protection of the British Columbia coast.

Canals Are Guarded.

MONTREAL, Aug. 6. — Though a state of war exists to-day throughout Canada, to the average man on the street in this city, there was very little change in conditions. Business went on with little interruption.

The harbor and the Lachine and Soulanges Canals were the districts which presented the most warlike appearance to-day. Men of the Victoria Rifles, the Highlanders, the 65th, the Grenadiers and the 12th Hussars, are to be seen at various points, guarding the waterways and the port. No chances are being taken with foreigners who might become dangerous at any moment.

FOOD SHOPS BESIEGED.

Public In London and the Provinces Afraid of Famine.

LONDON, Aug. 6. — Another run on the provision stores in London and in the provinces occurred yesterday in spite of the Government's assurances that there was sufficient food to supply the population for months without counting that en route. Prices again jumped and some of the smaller shops were forced to close.

In the east end several stores where prices had been raised were rushed by infuriated women who carried off everything they could lay their hands on before the arrival of the police.

The situation has been aggravated by the throwing out o. work of 250,000 transport workers throughout the discontinuence of freight traffic to the continent. It is expected, however, that many of these will find employment in the army transport service.

The postoffice is flooded with mail, all the services to the continent having been held up.

GREAT BRITAIN IS SUPREME WITH ITS AIR EQUIPMENT

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—Probably no man in America is better informed concerning the relative strength and weakness of the aerial navies of the European powers than George E. A. Hallett, who at present is engineer and assistant to Lieut. John Cyril Porte, R.N., and one-half the crew of the trans-atlantic flyer America.

Mr. Hallett passed more than a year in Europe, first as instructor in the Imperial Russian Flying School at Sebastopol, later as student and aeronautical observer in France, England and Germany.

Mr. Hallet is of the opinion that in quality at least and in fighting efficiency England is the European leader in the air.

"The English may not have as many dirigibles and aeroplanes as the continental countries," Mr. Hallett said, "but when it comes to a fine equipment in perfect condition, and skill in handling it, Great Britain is my choice in an air fight."

"The Russians take to flying as naturally as any people I have ever seen. Once let them get in the air and they are daring, ingenious and resourceful.

"Where the Russians fall down, however, and fall down woefully is on the mechanical end of the game, the upkeep and the care of their machines.

"The German goes to the opposite extreme. They have wonderful mechanics, and they are well driven. Discipline is wonderful and they turn out fine work. But in the air the German is not an impressive proposition. He tries to learn to fly by a set of book rules, and he doesn't always meet with success. They haven't the instinct of flying.

"As for the French, everybody knows their mechanical skill, their daring and their enthusiasm. For all that, however, when it comes to real fighting, I think the English aviation corps are first."

WHY PRESENT WAR WAS ABSOLUTELY INEVITABLE

Military despotism in Germny is the decisive factor in making inevitable the present war horror of the world. Prussia, not all Germany, is the home and breeding-place of German militarism. The Emperor of all Germany is the incarnation and exponent of that Prussian policy of military autocracy. He has ruled all German States in unwavering obedience to the militarist maxim: "In Peace Prepare for War." He has used to the full his autocratic power in building up the German Empire and in making it not only a marvel of industrial efficency, but also a stupendous military machine. That military machine has burdened the people of Germany with an ever-increasing war budget until it awakened the spirit of revolt. The limit of economic folly was reached with the war budget of two years ago, when the revenues of the Princes and of all citizens of wealth were specially taxed. No new source of revenue remained. A crisis had come.

That crisis, from Germany's point of view, was not any menace from Britain of any fear of any British power. It was rather the very real and very rapidly rising menace of the new great Slav power on Germany's border, including, as it does, the Russin Empire and the entire line of Slav countries that encirels Germanic Austria from the Adriatic round to Bohemia. These Slav peoples are separated from the governing Teutonic race in the Austrian empire by the impassable gulfs of blood, language and religion. And in Europe the Slav population outnumbers the Teuton population by two to one.

Recent events, especially in the Balkan wars, have made it plain, not to the German Emperor alone, but to all the world, that the growth into an organized power of more than two hundred millions of Slav peoples along nearly three thousand miles of international frontier suggests a menace to the ambitions of Teuton supremacy in Europe. That Teuton supremacy is based on the sword. The German Emperor's appeal is to "My Sword." But if the new sword of the united Slav power is allowed to be unsheathed, and if its mighty reach is not shortened, German supremacy is threatened on its own ground and by the weapon of its own choosing.

It is now or never with German militarist despotism.. In five years it would be too late. The psychological moment came in the feud of Germany's ally, Austria, with the Slav enemy in Servia. The murder of the Austrian Prince by a Servian fanatic was the occasion, not the cause. It gave the Kaiser his excuse to strike. The time, too, seemed to him peculiarly opportune. Italy, he believed, could be counted on as the ally of both Germany and Austria in the Triple Alliance. Britain, even if held by her understanding with France and by her obligations to Belgium and Holland, was plainly on the very verge of a bitter and embarrassing civil war. Only a few weeks ago, when the Ulster problem was most hopeless, a despatch from Berlin stated that the Emperor was intensely interested in the situation in Ireland, and in the House of Commons, and was kept advised of every significant incident. Civil war in Britain at that time seemed inevitable. That was the Emperor's chance for Germany. He took that chance. That Italy refused, that the British ranks closed up and now stand solid, that France takes up the gauntlet, and that Belgium and Holland decline to submit—these are new facts on which the military despot may not have reckoned when he drew his Teuton sword against the Slav.

When the worst had come to the worst Britain had no alternative. Had the obligations of honour, as regards France and Belgium and Holland, been less binding than they are, Britain's high duty remained; duty to herself, duty to all British democracies, duty to the ideals of freedom and self-government in all the world. Were German autocracy to win, Holland and Belgium, and perhaps Scandinavia, too, might become German States, with a vast shore line in menace Britain on the North Sea.

More than that. Triumphant military despotism would become immeasurably more arrogant over all the world. Not for themselves alone, but for all the peoples of all countries in the great world-neighbourhood, Britain and al British Dominions must now take their places in the forefront for fredom.

Military despotism at its highest has taken the sword. Who can tell but in this supreme struggle it will perish by the sword?

DISAPPROVE IN UNITED STATES

Kaiser's Orders to Prevent Egress of Visitors Arouses Strong Denunciation

WASHINGTON, D.C., Aug. 5.—The Kaiser's orders to the effect that no foreigners may leave Germany during the mobilization period has raised a situation here that Government officials consider serious in view of the large number of Americans now being held in Germany.. and the flood of protest and demand of a course of action by this Government which is bond to follow in this country.

The serious import for Americans lies in the fact that it applies to men, women and children, and that the period of mobilization is likely to be construed by Germany as covering the entire period of the war.

Many members of the Congress were outspoken this morning in denunciation of the order, and although there was no evident disposition to broach the subject in either House or Senate, many expressions of disapproval were made in private conversations.

As a result of the situation, the entire staff of the German embassy was rushed to Washington late yesterday from the summer station at Manchester, New Hampshire. The German Ambassador is expected to arrive some time to-day.

No Immediate Famine

British Public Reassured And High Prices Declared To Be Unwarranted.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—The authorities are taking all possible steps to allay public anxiety in regard to food supplies, and to prevent unjustifiable attempts to artificially raise prices.

The Home Office has issued an official statement to the effect that there are four months' supply of wheat actually in the country, or being harvested; and large consignments of wheat now on the way here, much of which was already near British shores. There was no conceivable circumstance in which a war famine could arise, and accordingly fear of a scarcity was groundless.

The situation regarding meat was not less satisfactory. "Normal killings of home stock supply 60 per cent. of our annual consumption," reads the statement, "and we are not necessarily dependent upon foreign imports for the balance of our supplies, as in case of emergency it could be provided by slaughtering a larger proportion of our own stock.

Meat in Storage.

"This contingency cannot arise in the present circumstances. There is now an exceptionally large supply of foreign meat in cold storage and heavy consignments are on the way to our shores. Therefore no justification exists for any rise in the prices of bread or meat."

The circular concludes with the assurance that arrangements have been made with a view of controlling prices so far as possible.

However, prices of goods are soaring. The recall of the trawlers from the North Sea has greatly curtailed the fish supply.

ANOTHER WEST ENDER MAKES A COMPLAINT

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Really, Mr. Editor, what "bomb" has exploded to awaken residents in west end of Homewood avenue, after a Rip-Van-Winkle sleep. I see "West End" has really awakened. As to complaints made by him, I, as a ratepayer and resident, can say he has not given it to our "Efficient" roadmaster hard enough. Why should we be left in such a shape after trying to keep our places tidy and paying heavy taxes? Some one is to blame. The corporation labourers and road-roller must have left for the war.

Yours truly,
FAIR PLAY.

COMPLAINT ABOUT STREET WATERING

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Residents on Rubidge street are indignant at the shameful neglect to water the street south of Charlotte street. During the past month little, if any, water has been used in this section of the street, and the dust has become stifling. No one has seen the watering cart below Charlotte street for some time and to-day, clouds of dust are flying with every vehicle that passes. To allow one of the handsomest sections of the finest residential streets in the city to go so long without watering is inexcusable. If it is the fault of the man on the water waggon, it is time some one got after him, and the city should see to it that it gives value for the money received for street watering.

Yours truly,
HOUSEHOLDER.

THE CAUSES THAT HAVE LEAD UP TO THE PRESENT WAR

Treaty of Berlin in 1878 May Be Set Down as the Beginning of Trouble—Recent Assassination Touched Off Powder

The A-B-C of the war takes one back to the conflict between Russia and Turkey, ending in 1878 with the Treaty of San Stefano. For centuries the Christian people in the Balkans had been trying to rid themselves of the cruel yoke of the Turk and establish independent nations, and in Russia, which was closely related to them by blood and faith, they had already sympathizer. Russia hoped that, by acting as the champion of these people and setting them up in housekeeping, as it were, she would, through them, get an outlet to the Aegean and Adriatic Sea. This very natural ambition on Russia's part was dreaded by the Germanic people in Austria and Prussia as well as by Britain, which feared that Russia had designs on India, and the result was that when Russia's victories in 1878 caused Turkey, by the treaty of San Stefano, to cede most of her European territory to Bulgaria, Servia and Montenegro, the concert of Europe intervened and brought such pressure to bear on Russia that she agreed to the Berlin Treaty, only three months later, by which Turkey got back the main part of the territory that she had agreed to cede, and the dreams of the Balkan nations dominated by Slavs went a-glimmering.

Clash of Ambitions.

It will be readily seen that the Balkans was the meeting place of Pan-Germnic and Pan-Slavic ambitions, with the passions of the people of the Balkans all on the side of Pan-Slaviam and that it was probable that these rival ambitions, sooner or later, would come to a death-grapple, whether such a pretext as the assassination of an Austrian prince did or did not offer. The Berlin treaty, while it preserved the peace of Europe for over thirty years, has always been recognized as an artificial settlement of the Balkan question, and it seems probable that any settlement not in harmony with the sentiments of the races occupying the debatable ground will always be a temporary expedient.

At all events, in 1878 Austria got a distinct advantage over Russia. The Slavic nations were kept down to petty states and Austria got the two provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which were still recognized as Turkish territory, to administer, as the price of her acquiescence in the meagr enlargement of the Balkan kingdoms. Matters remained in this state until 1908, when Russia was known to be in an unusually helpless condition and Turkey was all wrought up over the Young Turk movement. That was the opportunity of the Germanic combination, and Austria tore up the Berlin treaty, and announced that she had annexed Bosnia and Hozegovina, while the Kaiser, with an army of invasion on the Russian frontier, demanded of the Czar that he forthwith consent to the seizure. The Czar did so without, it is said, even taking time to consult Britain and France, her allies, and the "mailed fist" won. the Russian frontier, demanded of the Czar that he forthwith consent to the seizure. The Czar did so without,it is said, even taking time to consult Britain and France, her allies, and the "mailed fist" won.

Russia Has Not Forgotten.

The humiliation suffered by Russia in 1908 has not been forgotten by her—far from it. Ever since she has been preparing to wipe out the injury. She gave encouragement to the Balkan nations when they made an alliance against Turkey. When the powers of Europe told the Balkan nations that they would not be allowed to take any Turkish territory even though they were successful, she winked the other eye. And if she had felt quite prepared to risk a fight with Austria and Germany without the aid of France and Britain, she would have insisted, after the war, that Servia should get the larger part of Albania and an outlet on the Adriatic. But Austria frustrated her desires and the price of peace was the creation of an independent Albania with Prince Wied, a German, as king.

The Assassination.

Once more the Slavs had to suffer a hardship, but they grimly bore it—and prepared. And while the long course of preparation for a settlement of another kind was in process, the Austrian Crown Prince, the arch-enemy of Pan - Slavism, was shot dead by a Slav. There is not the slightest reason for thinking that Russia had anything whatever to do with the shooting. The Crown Prince was more responsible than any other man living for blocking a dream of Servia, for which 50,000 Servians laid down their lives in the last Balkan struggle, and it is not surprising that a reckless Servian patriot should shoot him down in Bosnia, the very territory that had been seized by Austria. Russia admitted that Austria had ground for demanding a thorough investigation and the punishment of the murderous conspirators. She would have raised no objection to action by the Concert of Europe. Austria dared not appeal to the Concert of Europe, for seizure of the two Turkish provinces would have caused the conference to take a very ugy turn. And so Austria made demands on Servia that showed plainly that she was bent on war and would not stop short of an indefinite occupation of the country. Russia had reason to know the probable result of indefinite occupation of territory by Austria and the folly of trusting in the pledges the Germanic combination might give. She, therefore, began to mobilise her army. Germany, in effect, insisted that Russia should stop mobilisation. Russia went ahead. Germany declared war.

France, still smarting under the memory of the Franco-Prussian catastrophe is under the Dual Alliance a ready ally of Russia. Britain has friendly relations with both under the Triple entente. Italy is allied with Germany and Austria in the Triple Alliance, but being vulnerable and being also on friendly terms with Britain has decided to remain neutral. The smaller states seeking only to be left alone, are declaring neutrality or lining up against Germany.

Hateful as is war to all sane persons, it must be said that a knowledge of history and of racial ambition in Europe strengthens the feeling that a permanent solution of the Balkan question could not come without a tremendous combat.

Belgium Is An Historic Battle Field

Belgium is Bravely Checking the March of the German Forces —A Region of Ill-Omen For Military Despots

The Belgian people are defending their country with heroism and skill, and have won a notable success in the fighting around Liege. The garrisons of the forts there have driven back the German assailants aftere great losses had been sustained by them. The forward movement of the Germans has been checked for the time, an advance of two Uhlan regiments has been cut to pieces, and Liege, it is stated, can hold out indefinitely. A French army is now on the march to assist the Belgians, and the opening battles of the war may take place in the historic triangle lying between Liege, Brussels and Charleroi, in the centre of which is Waterloo. The Germans are operating in the valley of the Meuse, near the line of march by which in 1815 Napoleon advanced to meet Blucher and Wellington. The Prussian General had his base at Namur, and the British lay at Brussels. The Prussians were forced back at Ligny, and Wellington retired from Quatre Bras toward Brussels and made his stand at Waterloo. It would be a strange turn of the kaleidoscope of international relations were a Franco-British-Belgian force to contest the same ground a century later against a German army representing Europe's twentieth century Napoleon. The plains between the Meuse and Brussels are a region of ill-omen for military despots.

Gen. Lessard May Command at Quebec

Capable Officer Speaks French Well —Others Mentioned

OTTAWA, Aug. 5. — Although it has not been definitely decided yet who will command the Canadian troops to be mobilised at Quebec, it is considered likely in military circles here that General Lessard of Toronto will be given the position.

He is a most capable and experienced officer, and his knowledge of French is a very necessary qualification.

Col. Steele of Winnipeg, who commanded the Strathcona Horse in the South African War, is also mentioned, but his age is against him.

Moreover, General Lessard is the senior officer. Col. Gwatkin, Chief of Staff, is a third possible choice, but he may be required here for organisation and administrative purposes.

A WAR THAT IS MADNESS

(New York World, Aug. 5.)

Germany has run amuck. There is no other explanation of the Kaiser's policy in forcing a general European war.

Fortunate it is that Great Britain is compelled to cast her sword into the balance without further loss of time.

The issue is now joined. Either German autocracy must be crushed, or European democracy will be obliterated. There is no middle course. If the forces that the Kaiser has loosened are victorious, the map of European republicanism may as well be rolled up, and the American people prepare to make the last great stand for democracy. All of continental Europe that is not Russianized will be Prussianized. France will be reduced to the status of a third rate power. Belgium, Holland and Denmark will fall successively into the maw of German imperialism. Italy will become a vassal state, the sun will have set upon the British Empire as well and the mailed fist of the conqueror will make ready to strike the final blow at democracy in the new world.

The course if the German Government during the last week cannot be reconciled with any theory of political sanity. Wantonly and deliberately the Kaiser has plunged his sword into the heart of civilization. The whole world is paying the penalty of his madness, neutrals as well as belligerents. Upon the American people alone, three thousand miles from the scene of conflict, is levied a tribute of millions of dollars a day in disorganized commerce, disorganized industry and disorganized finance, and the final reckoning that must be paid for this maniacal onslaught of German autocracy defies calculation. The human imagination is staggered as it faces the inevitable consequences of this supreme achievement of paranoia.

It is still possible to sympathize with the German people in the great tragedy that has overtaken them, with their backs to the wall fighting a more powerful coalition than ever Napoleon faced. But there can be only one answer to the Kaiser's uhallenge to Europe. German autocracy has made itself the enemy of mankind. Its destruction will be the emancipation of the German people themselves as well as the salvation of European republicanism.

GERMAN MENACE FROM BELGI UM AND HOLLAND. — What the German, occupation of Belgium and Holland means to Great Britain is readily seen from the map, sh owing the location of the Belgian seaport of Ostend and the Dutch p ort of Flushing. Ostend is 60 miles from the British coast and Flus hing 100 miles. With German warships on the watch at these po rts the menace to British shipping entering the Thames would be t errific.

TACTICS OF 1870 ARE NOW BEING REPEATED BY GERMAN ARMY

Commander-in-Chief of German Army Using Father's Schemes of Forty-four Years Ago.

PLAN OF CAMPAIGN

They tell of the field marshal Count von Moltke, that when on that fateful July day of 1870 an excited aide burst into his private office and gasped out the word that France had declared war, the old warrior hardly looked up from the documents he was reading.

"Upper pigeonhole on the right hand side of my desk," he said. And there, in fact, was the carefully worked out plont for the invasion of France, which was soon carried through to a successful issue. Every contingency had been provided for in the von Moltke plans, which represented the careful labour and study of years. For every possible move of the French army a check had been provided, and it was largely due to the patient and thorough study of the great chief of staff that the German operations were so quickly and so consistently successful.

New von Miltke Commands.

That was forty-four years ago. Now as then, it is Count von Moltke, son of the great field-marshil — who is chief of staff of the German army. Now, as then, the mobilization of the German troops has been accomplished with startling celerity and already armies—if the despatches are correct—have been thrown across the French border.

And it would almost appear as if the son had taken out again his great father's plan of campaign from its dusty pigeonhole and was starting the German legions on to Paris over almost the same routes which their predecessors travelled in 1870.

Luxemburg Again Invaded.

In 1870 one of the Prussian columns marching on Paris was sent through the territory of the grand duchy of Luxemburg, the unity state which lies on the southern boundaries of Belgium, and the neutrality of which was guaranteed in 1867, both Prussia and France being among the powers which pledged themselves to preserve it.

Now, as then, the neutrality of Luxemburg was violated, for it appears that already Luxemburg has been invaded by a German army of at least 100,000 men, marching towards France over practically the same route which a Prussian army followed in 1870.

Army on Second Route.

In 1870 the second German army centring on Paris was started across the frontier not far from Strasburg. And now comes an unofficial report that this younger Count von Moltke has sent his second army into the enemy's territory by almost th same route.

In 1870 Prussia and her allied states had only one enemy to fight. There was indeed some fear that Austria might give aid to Napoleon III., but that was never realized. And at worst the elder Von Moltke could send his armies forward with no danger that his country, stripped of troops, would be invaded from the rear.

Now the son must face—is already facing—exactly that contingency.

Real Battles Between Germany and France Will Come Later.

LONDON, Aug. 6. — The military correspondent of The Times says it will take Germany nine days or more to place upon the French frontier forces adequate to challenge the French masses, and it will take France about the same time to assemble all her army. The advance on one side or the other or on both can hardly begin before Aug. 14. The first decisive battles of the war are expected to take place between Aug. 16 and 22.

During the next week or ten days, combats and battles, of which we shall probably read, will not be the shock of main masses but of covering troops which are organized on all the continental frontiers, and have a special mission. This mission is to cover and protect from hostile intrusion the zone of concentration of the main armies; and the mission may or may not include offensive operations.

CONQUERORS FROM EUROPE

(By Grantland Rice in Colliers)

There are certain occasions when enough is entirely too much, if not even more superfluous. The victory of the Oxford relay team was held to be probable. It was generally expected that England would outpoint us at golf. Our polo defeat was a bit startling, but it was generally conceded that in sport many things might happen.

But since the heroic days of John L. Sullivan and Kid Lavigne America's supremacy in the prize ring had been unquestioned. From the featherweight on through the mastodon class America had ruled by greater power and greater skill—barring the brief reign of Robet the Red of Cornwall, otherwise known as Fitzsimmons. And he had shifted his home to American soil.

So with the slump of other champions it was expected that the successors to Sullivan, Corbett, Jeffries—to Lavigne, McGovern, Britt, Nelson, and Wolgast—would in a less high-browish realm of sportdom achieve revenge. Vain hope—fantastic dream. The landslide moves apace. Our lightweight champion is outpoited in England, and for the first time in eighteen years a Briton wears the lightweight olive athwart his clammy brow. And as this blow falls our best white heavyweight, Mr. Gunboat Smith, is retired by a Frenchman. Nor does the fact that Smith lost for fouling help lighten the sogginess of things.

It may be that we, through too easy a trail, are slipping a little. It may be that others, nurtured and strengthened in defeat, are coming forward. Or it may be that this is just one of those years when Fate, with a chuckle, turns the expected upside down." Our opinion is that America has taught the world the lesson of victory—the lesson of careful training—of concentration—the lesson of dash and speed and aggressiveness—and having absorbed this lesson the rest of the world will no longer be any field of easy conquest. Which should mean a new stir in competition and a far greater interest in international sport than the past has ever known.

The coasts of Great Britain will be surrounded with towers on which will be mounted guns designed for rapid firing at air craft.

SUGGEST THAT CANADA GIVE FOOD SUPPLY

Members of Trades and Labour Council Wait on the Local Member Urging It

The Examiner this afternoon secured an interview with Mr. J. H. Burnham with reference to the deputation from the local Trades and Labour Council, which waited upon him this morning. Mr. Burnham explained that the Trades and Labour Council were anxious that the Government should make up for lost time as far as possible, by contributing something to the war, and the only thing they could contribute immediately was foodstuffs. The Council considered it desirable that Parliament should send food to those doing the fighting for the preservation of the Empire. They suggested the laying up of a store of $30,000,000 of food so that it should not go out of the country and be used for purposes other than that of feeding the British line of battle on land and sea. Thus Canada could make up in food what she lacked in battleships, and is in a particularly good position to do so now that she has just completed her harvest. The deputation also suggested placing an embargo on cattle being shipped from the country. Mr. Burnham reduced their request to writing and forwarded it to the Premier to-day.

German Cruisers On Canadian Coasts Watched By British

Two German Cruisers Are Hovering About the Canadian Shore Line —Three British Cruisers on the Job Also.

The rumoured attack on the Glace Bay wireless station proved to be merely rumour, but at any moment the fast German cruisers now in North American waters may appear off Canada's coasts and do what damage they can to cables and defensible positions. There are three German cruisers that might prove dangerous to Canadian ports and shipping.

They are the Strassburg and Karlsruhe, modern and highly efficient though small armoured cruisers of 3,478 tons, mounting 12 guns of 4.1-inch calibre, and capable of a speed of 26.75 knots, and The Dresden, a protected cruiser of 3,544 tons, mounting also 12 4.1 guns, but with a maximum speed of 24 1-2 knots. It is believed they were ordered north to harass British trans-Atlantic shipping and protect outgoing German vessels. If they are in Canadian waters they will assuredly try to seize a port where coal is stored and replenish their stock.

The British squadron which was on guard in Mexican waters will almost certainly follow the Germans to the north. The Berwick, Suffolk, Essex and Lancaster are all fine modern armoured cruisers of the County class. Their displacement is 9,800 tons, their speed in the vicinity of 24 knots, and their armament 14 6-inch guns, and 8 of 3 inches. The German ships are not in their class, and if encountered would have to depend for escape on their superior speed.

Besides the armoured cruisers the protected cruiser Bristol was in West Indian waters when the crisis came. She is fast enough to outrun the Germans, having made almost 27 knots, but her lack of armour puts her at a disadvantage in attacking the enemy. Her armament is heavier than that of either the Strassburg or Karlsruhe, and consists of 2 6-inch guns and 10 4-inch quick-firers.

Of the whereabouts of the German cruisers we are likely to hear many rumours till they disclose their position by a descent on our coast. Then we shall know, and the British pursuit will begin. The enemy may cause a good deal of trouble if he remains in or near the Gulf of St. Lawrence. No Canadian troops could be despatched, even if ready to go, were the three fast Germans at large on our seaboard.

Condition On Meat Market

The price of meat has risen on the Toronto market. Speaking with one local purveyor this morning, the Examiner was informed that quarters of beef are selling on the Toronto market for $17.50 a hundred as compared to $16.-$16.50, and $17.50 a month ago. This increase will not yet affect local prices, however, although the dealers opined that prices might go up any time.

On the other hand, however, another dealer said that prices may drop on account of the stopping of exports and the consequent abundance of cattle. He gave an instance of a Dummer farmer who sent three carloads of cattle to Toronto several days ago, and none had yet been disposed of.

LOOKING AFTER ITS FRIENDS.

The Government's choice of a chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Comission is not popular with the labour men, and for the reason that he has not given satisfaction in the labour difficulties which he investigated. The Government has been concerned, apparently, more about the politician than the discriminating and wise judge.—Kingston Whig.

Lundy's Lane Centenary

Member of Ottawa Historical Society on Way Home in City To-day

Mrs. J. O. Simpson, of the Women's Canadian Historical Society of Ottawa, was in the city this morning on her way home from Niagara Falls, where she had been attending the celebration in connection with the one-hundredth anniversary of Lundy's Lane, held recently. A luncheon was tendered the guests at the Clifton House, Niagara, on July 28th, after which they went to the historic burying grounds where wreaths were placed on the monument. Speeches were made by Lieutenant-Governor Gibson, Clarence Warren, President of the Ottawa Historical Society, and Hon. Peter Porter, of New York. Cordial greetings were exchanged with the Americans, the advocacy of peace prevailing on both sides.

As a substitute for red in danger signals, which is the colour less easily distinguished by the colour blind, experts have advocated blue circles with wide yellow rims.

CRUISER AMPHION SINKS.

British War Vessel Runs on Mine and 130 Men Perish.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—An Admiralty report says that the British cruiser Amphion was sunk yesterday morning by striking a mine off the Dutch coast. Paymaster J. T. Gedge and 130 men were lost. The captain, 16 officers and 135 men were saved.

A previous report said that the German mine layer Koenigin Luise had probably placed some mines before she was sunk by the British torpedo boat Lance.

The Amphion was a light cruiser of 3,400 tons. She was attached to the third destroyer flotilla under Captain H. Fox, commanding officer. Her regular complement was 219 men. She was commissioned in April, 1913.

Lance Sank Koenigin Luise.

LONDON, Aug. 7. — The British torpedo boat destroyer Lance was the hero of the first naval engagement in the present war, sinking the river boat Koenigin Luise, which had been fitted out as a mine layer.

The Lance fired only four shots. The first destroyed the bridge of the steamer, the third and fourth tore away the stern and the Koenigin Luise sank in six minutes.

The Lance rescued 28 of the German crew. Several were wounded. Two of them each lost an arm, and a leg of four others was shot away. None of the Lance's crew was injured.

The Koenigin Luise was caught in the act of laying mines some sixty miles from Harwich.

Spy Trawler Taken.

LONDON, Aug. 7. — A German trawler was captured by a British warship near the Orkney Islands, to the north of Scotland yesterday. She is believed to have been engaged in spying, as carrier pigeons were found on board.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

But in a rear room Stern found a large quantity of copper wire. The wooden drums on which it had been wound were gone; the insulation had vanished, but the coils of wire still remained.

"Fine" said the explorer, gathering together several coils. "Now when I get this over to the Metropolitan I think the first step toward success will have been taken."

By nightfall he had accumulated enough wire for his tentative experiments. Next day he and the girl explored the remains of the old wireless station on the roof of the building overlooking Madison Avenue.

They reached the roof by climbing out of a window on the east side of the tower and descending a fifteen-foot ladder that Stern had built for the purpose out of rough branches.

"You see it's fairly intact as yet," remarked the engineer, gesturing at the broad expanse. "Only, falling stones have made holes here and there. See how they yawn down into the rooms below! Well, come on, follow me. I'll tap with the axe, and if the roof holds me you'll be safe."

Thus, after a little while, they found a secure path to the little station.

This diminutive building, fortunately constructed of concrete, still stood almost unharmed. Into it they penetrated through the crumbling door. The winds of heaven had centuries ago swept away all trace of the ashes of the operator.

But there still stood the apparatus, rusted and sagging and disordered, yet to Stern's practised eye showing signs of promise. An hour's careful overhauling convinced the engineer that something might yet be accomplished.

And thus they set to work in earnest.

First, with the girl's help, he strung up his copper-wire antennae from the tiled platform of the tower to the roof of the wireless station. Rough work this was, but answering the purpose as well as though of the utmost finish.

He connected up the repaired apparatus with these antennae, and made sure all was well. Then he dropped the wires over the side of the building to connect with one of the dynamos in the sub-basement.

All this took two and a half days of severe labour, in intervals of food-getting, cooking and household tasks. At last, when it was done—

"Now for some power!" exclaimed the engineer. And with his lamp he went down to inspect the dynamos again and to assure himself that his belief was correct, his faith that one or two of them could be put into running order.

Three of the machines gave little promise, for water and dripped in them and they were rusted beyond any apparent rehabilitation. The fourth, standing nearest Twenty-Third Street, had by some freak of chance been protected by a canvas cover.

This cover was now only a mass of rotten rags, but it had at least safeguarded the machine for so long that no very serious deterioration had set in.

Stern worked the better part of the week with such tools as he could find or make—he had to forge a wrench for the largest nuts—"taking down" the dynamo, oiling, filing, polishing and repairing it, part by part.

The commutator was in bad shape and the brushes terribly corroded. But he tinkered and patched, hammered and heated and filed away, and at last putting the machine together again with terrible exertion, decided that it would run.

"Steam now!" was his next watchword, when he had wired the dynamo to connect with the station on the roof. And this was on the eighth day since he had begun his labour.

An examination of the boiler-room, which he reached by moving a ton of fallen stone-work from the doorway into the dynamo room, encouraged him still further. As he penetrated into this place, feeble-shinging lamp held on high, eyes eager to behold the prospect, he knew that success was not far away.

Down in these depths, almost as in the interior of the great Pyramid of Gizeth — though the place smelled dank and close and stifling — time seemed to have lost much of its destructive power. He chose one boiler that looked sound, and began looking for coal.

Of this he found a plentiful supply, well-preserved, in the bunkers. All one afternoon he laboured, wheeling it in a steel barrow and dumping it in front of the furnace.

Where the smoke-stack led to and what condition it was in he knew not. He could not tell where the gases of combustion would escape to; but this he decided to leave to chance.

He grimaced at sight of the rusted flues and the steam pipes connecting with the dynamo-room—pipes now denuded of their asbestos packing and leaky at several points.

A strange, gnome-like picture he presented as he poked and pried in those dim regions, by the dim rays of the lamp. Spiders, roaches, and a great grey rat or two were his only companions—those, and hope.

"I don't know, but I'm a fool to try and carry this thing out," said he, dubiously surveying the pipe. "I'm liable to start something here that I can't stop. Water-glasses leaky, gauges plugged up, safety-valve rusted into its seat—the devil!"

But still he kept on. Something drove him inexorably forward. For he was an engineer—and an American.

His next task was to fill the boiler. This he had to do by bringing water, two pails at a time, from the spring. It took him three days.

Thus, after eleven days of heart-breaking lonely toil in that grimy dungeon, hampered for lack of tools, working with rotten materials, naked and sweaty, grimed, spent, profane, exhausted, everything was ready for the experiment—the strangest, surely, in the annals of the human race.

He lighted up the furnace with dry wood, then stoked it full of coal. After an hour and a half his heart thrilled with mingled fear and exultation at sight of the steam, first white, then blue and thin, that began to hiss from the leaks in the long pipe.

"No way to estimate pressure or anything," remarked he. "It's bull luck whether I go to h—— or not!" And he stood back from the blinding glare of the furnace. With his naked arm he wiped the sweat from his streaming forehead.

"Bull luck!" repeated he. "But by the Almigsty, I'll send that Morse, or bust!"

CHAPTER XIV.
THE MOVING LIGHTS.

Panting with exhaustion and excitement, Stern made his way back to the engine room. It was a strangely critical moment when he seized the corroded throttle-wheel to start the dynamo. The wheel stuck, and would not budge.

Stern, with a curse of sheer exasperation, snatched up his long spanner, shoved it through the spokes, and wrenched.

Groaning, the wheel gave way. It turned. The engineer hauled again.

"Go on!" shouted the man. "Start! Move!"

With a hissing plaint, as though rebellious against this awakening after its age-long sleep, the engine creaked into motion.

In spite of all Stern's oiling, every journal and bearing squealed in anguish. A rickety tremble possessed the engine as it gained speed. The dynamo began to hum with wild, strange protests of racked metal. The ancient "drive" of tarred hemp strained and quivered, but held.

And like the one-hoss shay about to collapse, the whole fabric of the resuscitated plant, leaking at a score of joints, creaking, whistling, shaking, voicing a hundred agonized mechanic woes, revived in a grotesque absurd and shocking imitation of its one-time beauty and power.

At sight of this ghastly resurrection, the engineer (whose whole life had been passed in the love and service of machinery) felt a strange and sad emotion.

He sat down, exhausted, on the floor. In his hand the lamp trembled. Yet, all covered with sweat and dirt and rust as he was, this moment of triumph was one of the sweetest he had ever known.

He realized that this was now no time for inaction. Much yet remained to be done. So up he got again, and set to work.

First he made sure the dynamo was running with no serious defect and that his wiring had been made properly. Then he heaped the furnace full of coal, and closed the door, leaving only enough draught to ensure a fairly steady heat for an hour or so.

This done, he toiled back up to where Beatrice was eagerly awaiting him in the little wireless station on the roof.

In he staggered, all but spent. Panting for breath, wild-eyed, his coal-blackened arms stretching out from the whiteness of the bearskin, he made a singular picture.

"It's going!" he exclaimed. "I've got current—it's good for a while, anyhow. Now—now for the test!"

For a moment he leaned heavily against the concrete bench to which the apparatus was clamped. Already the day had drawn to its end. The glow of evening had begun to fade a trifle, along the distant skyline; and beyond the Palisades a dull purple was settling down.

By the dim light that filtered through the doorway, Beatrice looked at his deep-lined, bearded face, now reeking with sweat and grimed with dust and coal. An ugly face—but not to her. For through that mask she read the dominance, the driving force, the courage of this versatile, unconquerable man.

"Well," suddenly laughed Stern, with a strange accent in his voice, "well then, here goes for the operator in the Eiffel Tower, eh"

Again he glanced keenly, in the failing light, at the apparatus there before him.

"She'll do, I guess," judged he, slipping on the rusted head-receiver. He laid his hand upon the key and tried a few tentative dots and dashes.

Breathless, the girl watched, daring no longer to question him. In the dielectric, the green sparks and the splits of living flame began to crackle and to hiss like living spirits of an unknown power.

Stern, feeling again harnessed to his touch the life-force of the world that once had been, exulted with a wild emotion. Yet, science-worshipper that he was, something of reverent awe tinged the keen triumph. A strange gleam dwelt within his eyes; and through his lips the breath came quick as he flung his very being into this supreme experiment.

He reached for the undometer. Carefully, slowly, he "tuned up" the wave-lengths; up, up to five thousand metres, then back again; he ran the whole gamut of the wireless scale.

The Valiant Eagle.

The eagle has been used as a device on royal banners from very remote times. It was the ensign of the ancient kings of Persia and of Babylon. The Romans adopted various other figures on their camp standards, but Marius made the eagle the chief ensign of the legions, and to the subdivision assigned various other figures. Constantine was the first emperor to introduce the two headed eagle as a royal or national device to indicate that his empire had two heads or kings, but was nevertheless one body or empire. The two headed eagle is now used to signify a double empire. Austria claims to be the successor of the Caesars of Rome, and also of Charlemagne, and the one head represents the eastern and the other the western empire. Russia also has a double headed eagle, having added that of Poland to her own.—London Standard.

Evolution of the Checker.

That formidable person, the chancellor of the exchequer, who levies toll in the house of commons today, draws his lofty lineage from the reign of Henry III. Henry, thinking it desirable that the lord high treasurer should be provided with a guardian, gave him one in the name of a "check." The checker, keeping his name, has now become the cornerstone of the treasury edifice. The lord high treasurer disappeared with the Duke of Shrewsbury, whom Queen Anne appointed a few days before her death. It was George I. who put the office of lord high treasurer in commission in 1714, and in commission it has since remained. Five persons have the honor—the first lord, three junior lords and the chancellor. But the chancellor proved too strong for all of them, and the board, once a reality, has, like the board of trade, long since ceased to meet.—London Chronicle.

TO GROW HAIR ON A BALD HEAD

BY A SPECIALIST.

Thousands of people suffer from baldness and falling hair who, having tried nearly every advertised hair tonic and hair-grower without results, have resigned themselves to baldness and its attendant discomfort. Yet their case is not hopeless; the following simple home prescription has made hair grow after years of baldness, and is also unequalled for restoring grey hair to its original colour, stopping hair from falling out, and destroying the dandruff germ. It will not make the hair greasy and can be put up by any druggist: Bay Rum, 6 ounces; Larona de Composee, 2 ounces; Menthol Crystals, one-half drachm. If you wish it perfumed, add 1 drachm of your favourite perfume. This preparation is highly recommended by physicians and specialists, and is absolutely harmless, as it contains none of the poisonous wood alcohol so frequently found in hair tonics.

Regularity—
of the bowels is an absolute necessity for good health. Unless the waste matter from the food which collects there is got rid of at least once a day, it decays and poisons the whole body, causing biliousness, indigestion and sick headaches. Salts and other harsh mineral purgatives irritate the delicate lining of the bowels. Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills—entirely vegetable—regulate the bowels effectively without weakening, sickening or griping. Use

CANCER A PUZZLE

In Many of Its Phases It Baffles Medical Science.

ITS CAUSES ARE NOT KNOWN.

Neither Is It Revealed Whether the Disease Is Hereditary or Not—In Its First Stage It Is Curable—How the Malignant Growths Spread.

"The word 'cancer,'" says World's Work, "though it figures largely in popular speech, is used with less and less frequency in medical literature. There is probably no word comprehensive enough to include all the kinds of abnormal growths to which the human frame is subject. Cancer is merely one shape in which this tendency to malformation manifests itself.

"The human body in its ideal condition is a symmetrical product. It consists of a multitude of parts, each developing not only with reference to itself, but in perfect harmony with the rest of the organism. A subtle influence, known as the power of organization, regulates this highly important matter. An arm, a leg, a nose, a chin—any organ or member which one cares to name—does not develop independently, but preserves important relations with the rest of the body. Our four fingers and thumbs have constantly in mind the rights of one another. When one reaches a certain size it does not keep on growing, but stops. If it still went on a single finger would reach a length of several feet in a lifetime.

"Any observant person, however, is aware that this law is constantly violated. On almost any part of the body little independent growths start into existence. These are composed of minute groups of rebellious cells, small colonies which for some reason ignore this law of development and start on an independent existence of their own. They serve no physiological purpose. When harmless, as they frequently are, they are merely inconvenient blemishes. When dangerous they end by destroying life.

"Mild manifestations of this lawless tendency are the queer formations commonly known as warts and moles. There are other more noteworthy protuberances, such as 'weens,' that grow inexplicably, frequently upon the scalp, reach a certain size, and then stop. This latter growth belongs to the general class of tumors known as benign. They are benign simply because after developing sluggishly to a certain point their growth is mysteriously arrested. Between benign tumors and the most malignant cancers there is only this difference: That the latter have the power of unlimited growth.

"The true cancer, once started on its riotous career, keeps on and digs deep into healthy surrounding tissue and destroys it, until finally, for a variety of reasons, it kills the patient. In some cases a benign growth which has remained quiescent for years suddenly develops a new vitality and becomes malignant. There are those who maintain, though the occurrence is certainly rare, that a harmless wart may sometimes develop into a genuine cancer. The point to be brought in mind is that all these abnormal growths are related; that the only thing that makes one malignant and another not is this tendency to keep growing.

"A genuine cancer in its final stages has another development. It no longer confines its activity to the original seat, but starts new cancers in other parts of the body. Certain groups of cancer cells break away from the primary headquarters, escape into the blood stream and start new growths elsewhere. This is the phenomenon known as 'generalized cancer.'"

Millions of dollars have been devoted to the study of cancer and its cure, and every known scientist is wide awake to the study of the disease and to grasp hold of anything that may indicate a possibility of its alleviation. The points upon which the authorities on cancer in this country agree, says the New York World, are as follows:

First.—Cancer in its first stage is local and is curable.

Second.—The causes of cancer are not known.

Third.—It is not known whether or not cancer is hereditary.

Fourth.—There is absolutely no cure for cancer except to cut it out.

Fifth.—Go to a physician at the first sign of trouble. Preferably, be examined by a physician at frequent intervals anyhow.

Sixth.—The idea that cancer in plants may give rise to cancer in man is fantastic. Tumors are not contagious.

Seventh.—Radium does not permanently cure internal cancer. It may check the growth for awhile, but sooner or later it comes back. Popular belief in radium is based on the fact that only the occasional cures are heard from—not the failures. The failures outnumber the cures 100 to 1.

ENCOURAGING SETTLERS.

Immigration Eighty-Five Years Ago Was Pretty Much Up-to-Date.

A curious old document which has been reprinted in facsimile in The Canadian News, of London, Eng., brings to the mind once more the common-place that there is nothing new under the sun.

Looking back at this notice, which was issued from the "Office of His Majesty's Resident Agent for the Superintendence of Settlers and Emigrants in the Canadas" at Quebec in the year 1829, there in the opening paragraph is stated emphatically that lands "will be granted on very easy terms to industrious families for actual settlement who are possessed of means to bring them into cultivation." His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor "has been pleased to order to be reserved the Township of Ops, in the district of New Castle, Upper Canada, for the reception of industrious emigrants, who may arrive from the United Kingdom during the present season, and who may be disposed to settle in that province; the price fixed for these crown lands to actual settlers is 4s. Halifax currency, per acre, payable in five years, with interest from the time of taking possession, and one year's interest in advance."

The actual rate of interest is not mentioned, but there could be little kick at having to pay only 4s. Halifax currency—about 80 cents per acre. The Government provided, through the means of "the location agent," a small log house for the temporary reception of "the emigrant and his family."

The modern cheap land-seekers' railroad rates were anticipated in 1829, when prospects could be provided "with a ticket from the office of His Majesty's resident agent at Quebec, to the location agent in the respective townships, who will direct the settler to such lot as he may choose, and vacant at the time, and on the back of such ticket directions will be found for the guidance of the settler in proceeding to their destination." Emigrants "not possessed of immediate means to go upon lands," and who were in want of employment, could obtain information "and protection" at the resident agent's office (it kept the fashionable hours of from ten to one in those days) and could learn of the probable demand "for laborers and artisans, rate of wages, etc., at the various works now in progress in the Canadas."

Nor were there boosters lacking in those days. The crown lands in the Township of Inverness and Leeds, on the Craig's road (in Lower Canada), was described as follows: "These lands are distant from Quebec about 36 to 40 miles on the south side of the St. Lawrence, with a good road nearly all the way. New roads are being opened into the lands which will afford employment to settlers; the climate is exceedingly healthy, many Scotch, English and Irish are already located in this part of the country."

Crippled With Rheumatism

And Skeptical After Trying Many Medicines — Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills Cured Him.

When the kidneys fail to purify the blood the poisons left in the system cause pain and suffering, such as backache, lumbago and rheumatism. Read how this skeptic was cured by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Mr. F. W. Brown, Kingsbury, Que., writes:—"I have been completely cured of backache and lame back by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I also recommended the pills to a man who was a cripple from rheumatism. He was skeptical, as he said that he had tried nearly everything on earth. Finally he consented to try them, and to his surprise was greatly benefited in the first week, and the pains left his legs until he was so supple he could walk without pain or difficulty. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills have worked wonders in this place, and we think there is no medicine like them."

Glorification of Futility.

When General Ben Butler was practicing law in the courts of the District of Columbia he was famous for the striking ideas he evolved and the effective methods he employed in order to get the interests of his clients before the jury in a favorable light.

In one case, in which he had a rather poor show of winning, the time came for him to cross examine a fellow lawyer, who had given testimony extremely favorable to the other side. Everybody listened intently for Butler's onslaught. It was expected that he would go after the witness with gloves off.

"Gentlemen of the jury," he said, with an air of confiding familiarity, "I would as soon think of shooting skyrockets into the infernal regions for purposes of illumination as to cross examine this witness in the hope of extracting the truth."—Popular Magazine.

Superstitions of the Gingalese.

An old Cingalese woman who lived in an ordinary native hut by herself died and was buried. On the following day a large iguana (a species of lizard which attains great size) entered the compound of a gentleman living close by and attacked his poultry. Hearing the noise and commotion, he came out and on ascertaining the cause got his gun and shot the iguana. No sooner had he done this than there arose a great uproar from the relatives of the old woman, who declared that he had killed her, because her spirit had passed into the lizard, in proof of which they pointed triumphantly to the fact that it had never before been seen in the vicinity and only appeared after her death. Rupees finally appeased the outraged feelings of the old woman's descendants.—Java Times.

COUNTING THE HINDUS.

Task of Taking a Census Is an Enormous One.

The task of taking a census of India must be stupendous considering that the population of that vast country numbers over 300,000,000 persons, scattered over an area of 1,803,657 square miles.

A staff of two million persons was employed for the purpose, and the census was taken in one night in March, at a cost of only $675,000.

The difficulties were especially great owing to the long lines of railway, the big rivers on which boats travel sometimes for days without coming to the bank, the forests to which woodcutters resort, often for weeks at a time, and the numerous sacred places, which, on occasions, attract many thousands of pilgrims.

People had to be enumerated wherever they were caught. In the case of railways, for instance, all persons traveling by rail who took tickets after 7 p.m. on the night of the census were enumerated either on the platform or in the trains. The latter were all stopped at 6 a.m. on the following morning, in order to include any travelers who up till then had escaped notice.

In spite of this, and owing to the vast work done preliminarily, the results for the whole of India were received complete nine days later, and were issued in print the next day. This rapidity, as the official report mentions with justifiable pride, "is not approached even in the smallest European state."

The summary tables show that the total population of India (including the native states) on the night the census was taken was 315,156,396 (as against 294,361,056 ten years previously), of which 217,586,893 were Hindus, 66,647,299 were Moslems, 10,721,453 were Buddhists, and 3,876,203 were Christians. The literates numbered only 18,539,578 persons, and agriculture claimed the labor of 224,695,909 persons, as against 35,323,041 persons engaged in industry.

Canadian census officials have apparently some lessons to learn from India.

Volcano In Mid Ocean?

An active mud volcano has appeared in lat. 19.30 N. and long. 93.0215 E., according to a notification issued by the Marine Department at Rangoon, recently. The height on 1st May was about 30 feet and length about one cable, showing two summits. The position of the volcano is apparently on the track between Kyaukpyu and Akyab, and is evidently off the long island of West Boronga, near Tiger Point. The Katoria, the B.I. vessel which first reported the volcanic eruption off the Arrakan coast, arrived in Calcutta from Rangoon recently, and in an interview with a newspaper representative Captain F. M. Austin said he sighted the eruption at close quarters, between Kyaukpyu and Akyab. He scouted the idea that it was a mud volcano or a volcano at all. "From all appearances," he said, "it is an island about a mile in extent, and from 25 to 30 feet high. What confirms my conviction that it is an island," he continued, "is its proximity to the island of Boronga, and I should not be at all surprised if it is found to be a part of that island. Another thing that strengthens this idea is the earthquake report issued from Simla. In that report it was stated that the shock came from about a thousand miles distant, and Boronga island is just about that distance from Simla. Since no other report that would account for the shock has been made it is more than probable that this eruption was the quake recorded on the Simla seismograph."

Toll of the Jungle.

The number of persons killed by wild animals and snakes in Assam during the year 1913 is reported to have been 269, as compared with 262 in the preceding year. The number of cattle killed by wild animals, says "The Indiaman," rose from 14,607 to 16,732, while the number killed by snakes fell from 545 to 262, the decrease in the latter case being attributed to the low level of the floods in the Kamrup district, where the mortality fell from 330 in 1912 to 20 in 1913.

It is noticeable that the number of cattle killed in the province by leopards is increasing steadily and has risen at the rate of about 1,000 a year. Two hundred and thirty-six cattle are said to have been killed by jackals in Kamrup, and over the whole province wild dogs have to their credit the substantial total of 802. The number of wild animals killed increased from 1,720 to 1,988. The number of snakes destroyed was 1,981, or practically the same as in 1912.

A Versatile Organist.

Geoffrey Norris, a well-known character in the country parts between Wigan, Southport, and Preston, Eng., is a man of remarkable versatility. Although he has a wooden leg, he has played the pedal organ at Wrightington Parish Church for a period of nineteen and a half years. Sexton and parish clerk for twenty years, he digs all the graves unaided, and has personally directed about 500 interments. He has held office in connection with every phase of Sunday school work, and has rung Good Friday "passing bell" for twenty years. For twenty-three years he has missed only one Sunday service, and that was when his own banns of marriage were called, as it is customary for those "named" to abstain from going to church on "banns Sundays."

Hatching Eggs in Rice.

Certain of the Chinese in the interior districts adjacent to Amoy employ a somewhat unusual method for hatching both hens' and ducks' eggs. The breeder first takes a quantity of unhusked rice and roasts it, cooling it down by fanning or allowing the wind to blow through until it is lukewarm. He then spreads a three inch layer of the rice in a wooden tub and places about 100 eggs thereon; another layer of rice, this second and subsequent layers being but two inches in thickness, is spread over the eggs. Each tub has six layers of rice and five layers of eggs, so that there are 500 eggs in each tub. The rice is heated once every twenty-four hours, the eggs being taken out at such times. The chicks and ducklings are produced in twenty to thirty days.—London Globe.

Seventeen Year Locusts.

The song of the cicada is the noisiest in the insect world. The seventeen-year cicada has been called the Rip Van Winkle of the insect world. From its tiny eggs there issues a creature with soft white body and mole-like front legs. It hurries to the ground and disappears beneath its surface sometimes to a depth of twenty feet. For seventeen years it digs its way around in absolute darkness and then comes to the surface to join in a marriage revelry of a few brief weeks. It is a full fledged creature of the air, though encased still in grave clothes of parchment, but it soon splits these up the back, pulls itself out, dries its powerful wings and flies away with the whirr of an aeroplane to live but a few brief weeks.—National Geographical Society Bulletin.

Advice From Mark Twain.

There is a gem in a letter from Mark Twain to Will M. Clemens, who wanted some advice:

"How can I advise another man wisely out of such a capital as a life filled with mistakes? Advise him how to avoid the like? No, for opportunities to make the same mistakes do not happen to any two men. Your own experiences may possibly teach you, but another man's can't. TWO GREAT NAVAL BATTLES TO MARK CONFLICT, SAY EXPERTS

Map of Europe, Showing the War Strength of the Nations, the Positions of the British, German and Russian Fleets, and the General Situation as It Appeared at the Outbreak of Hostilities.

Fleets of Great Britain and Germany Would Meet in the North Sea and Once for All Settle the Question of Supremacy.

KAISER'S FORCES EXPECTED TO LEAD IN ATTACK

Only the limits of human endurance and the financial resources of the great European Powers are the limits which American experts place upon the great struggle between the Triple Alliance and the Triple Entente.

In discussing at the outset the military and naval aspects of this conflict, these military experts expressed their belief that the struggle would not be a short one. It would be a battle of resources rather than a battle of preparedness. Victory was not expected to come repeatedly to the arms of one Power, but the struggle on land would surge back and forth, with successes here for the allies of the Alliance and then reverses elsewhere.

In this respect the struggle for supremacy of the sea would differ, for in the naval conflict only two decisive engagements were expected—one between the British and German fleets in the North Sea and the other between the French fleet, probably with British assistance, and the combined Austrian and Italian fleets. This second conflict would probably take place in the Adriatic Sea, where Austria must struggle to keep the ports of Trieste and Fiume open.

Might Surrender Alsace and Lorraine.

An American army officer, formerly an attaché at a European capital, who is a recognized authority upon these questions, made the interesting suggestion that Germany might surrender Alsace and Lorraine to France to keep that Power, and possibly England, out of the conflict. That would be greatly to the advantage of Germany, for it would enable her to concentrate her huge armies on the Russian frontier and would save her from the almost certain naval defeat she would suffer at the hands of Great Britain, which would cost her her overseas commerce and disable her merchant marine.

In the opinion of this expert this struggle is primarily the struggle of the Teuton against the Slav. It is the fear of Slavic domination which forced Germany and Austria into this conflict. France has declared that she has no direct interest in the Servian question. Great Britain is open in her opposition to the conflict.

Another officer of the army suggested that the conflict would be complicated with the jealousies of the allies. Italy, he said, would not view with pleasure any progress Austria might make along the Adriatic, nor would Germany be satisfied to see Austria gain control of Constantinople. In fact none of the Powers could afford to see another, even an ally, lay hands upon Constantinople and the Turkish European possessions, for it would place a gigantic strategic power in the hands of that nation.

Not a Defensive War.

This would not be a defensive war either in the land or naval engagements, but each Power would doubtless seek the advantage of striking the first offensive blow. It is clear that military and naval experts expected a war that would strain every resource of the Powers. If their prophecies are fulfilled the tax that the war would place upon Europe must change the history of the world for all time.

Discussing the possibility that Germany would be willing to surrender Alsace or Lorraine, or both, to France in order to pacify the French and keep the French army off its back, the expert consulted by our reporter said that Germany would thus be able to realize its great ambition—subjugation of the Russian provinces to the east, where there is room for the expansion of her overcrowded territories.

This expert did not believe that Great Britain would be tempted to join actively in the conflict. If she did participate it would be only in a naval way. Her only gain in crushing Germany would be to crush a commercial rival. Another interesting suggestion made by him was the precarious situation in which Belgium would find herself if Germany and France met in conflict. Belgium, in his opinion, would be forced to take sides with either one of the two Powers for her own protection.

"I should estimate the strength of the Austrians at about sixteen army corps of 35,000 to 39,000 men each," he said. "Germany must have in the vicinity of twenty-one corps, France seventeen or eighteen, while Russia has probably more than thirty. In a campaign between Germany and Russia we may look for a great battle, or series of battles, in Russian Poland, or, to be exact, in the military province of Warsaw, where the land is level, although highly timbered in spots, giving the military leaders a chance to display originality of action and to bring into play all sorts of military manoeuvres.

Three Strategic Centres.

"From the Russian standpoint I should say that there were three strategic centres on the Russian frontier. They are Vilna on the north, Warsaw in the centre and Kiev on the south. From these points Russia would direct a joint campaign against Austria and Germany. The Germans might direct their campaign against Russia from Königsberg on the north, Posen in the centre and Saxony further south. Austria might concentrate on the offensive against Russia at Gracow, at Lemberg, in Galicia, and in the south from Bosnia, which is now being used apparently as the base of operations against Servia. Budapest might also be considered a strategic point for an Austrian base.

"There should be no disposition to discount the fighting abilities of the Russian soldiers. Their defeat in the Japanese war was not due to lack of efficiency as individuals. They were badly handled, due to troubles in the commissariat and elsewhere.

"No army can be said to have a better general staff than that of Russia. The officers of higher rank are not deficient in either skill or training and they are highly educated. There is, however, some lack of education on the part of the officers of lower rank. They are good fighters, but not sufficiently educated, and this might prove to be a handicap worth mentioning. Russia has all the munitions of war that are necessary within her own border, such as food, animals and so forth.

Point in Russia's Favor.

"It should be remembered that the Russian railroads have a wider gauge than the German railroads, hence German cars and rolling stock are not available for use on the Russian rails. This is a military factor of importance.

"In Warsaw, which is really the most strategic position in a war between Germany and Russia, Russia has always maintained five or six army corps, and it is safe to calculate that there are fully that number there now, and most likely more. It is not as if they had to be brought there from some distant point. They are on the ground, ready to be used for an invasion of either Germany or Austria, as the circumstances may dictate. In this connection it should be remembered that none of these Powers may be expected to assume the defensive. Each will undoubtedly take the offensive. This makes it difficult to prophesy what the moves will be. It is such a gigantic problem that analysis of the forthcoming military movements would be difficult and perhaps useless to a certain degree.

"It seems certain that the Russian army corps at Kiev and Kishinev would be used for invasion of Austria. The great mass of troops at Warsaw may be used either against Germany or Austria. The Russian troops at Vilna would be certainly for use against Germany only.

"Russia and Germany will most likely have as their objectives the heart of the foemen's country. Germany's logical move against Russia would be directed with a view to taking Moscow and St. Petersburg. It is, of course, a long way from the German frontier to Moscow, and Napoleon's mistakes would have to be kept in mind. The Russians would undoubtedly seek to take Berlin. What the chances are of either Power accomplishing these objectives it would be difficult to say.

"There is always the consideration that Russia might seek to take Constantinople. If she made such an attempt it would necessarily upset all prognostications and change the course of events completely. Her Black Sea fleet is much more powerful than any other vessels in those waters, and a dash to Constantinople on her part might be successful.

Austria's Part in Doubt.

"Austria's part in the conflict would be somewhat in doubt. She might assist Germany in a campaign directed against Moscow. If France holds aloof from the conflict it is almost certain that German and Austria arms combined would take a part of the Russian empire before long. If France is active, Germany would have to fight on both sides and the possibility of a successful invasion of Russia would be greatly decreased. Russia would, doubtless, have occasion to use three great armies. Germany would employ one, and possibly two, armies on the eastern frontier and two, and possibly three, such armies on the western frontier.

"Generally speaking, the material of the Russian army is on a par with the Austrian, but I should say that the Germans were superior to both. France excels in artillery. Austria had a tendency some years ago to cling to the old brass cannon and failed to provide modern artillery on account of the great cost. I should judge that this defect has been corrected to some extent within the last two or three years.

"Germany has undoubtedly the best trained army. Her methods of training recruits are certainly wonderful. It is not long before the recruits have obtained the proficiency of a veteran.

"I look for France's first move to be an attack on Alsace and Lorraine, despite the fact that these provinces are well fortified, and it might seem foolhardy to wage war against an enemy so well entrenched.

British Troops Would Stay at Home.

"As for Great Britain, I think it should be kept in mind that her troops are for use at home and not on the Continent. England may be willing to finance a war on the Continent with troops of other Powers, but she will not send her own troops there. Of course, at home she will maintain a state of war, but British troops will not be seen on the Continent, despite all these preparations we hear about.

"Holland and Belgium are mobilizing for self-defence only. It is well that they do so. At that, I expect to see Belgium driven to the alternative of taking sides with either France or Germany for her own protection. French and German troops are certain to overrun Belgium in their desire to get at each other, no matter what Belgium may do. Belgian soil is bound to be desecrated by the invader.

"Would it be possible to carry on an extensive campaign in Russia or Germany in the winter? Well, I should think so. If the German troops have to march through Russia in the winter they will do it. Of course, the snows are sometimes pretty deep, but I doubt if that would stop army movements. In the spring the armies might be considerably hampered. Russian Poland has notoriously poor dirt roads no roads at all. In fact, the country is flat, and they seem to drive along most anywhere and the mire is almost as deep as the roads are wide."

OUR HARD COAL MINE.

Canada Has Only One Anthracite Colliery in Operation.

Perhaps of the thousands of holiday-makers who yearly visit the beautiful summer resort and natural park of Banff, in the Canadian Rockies, are aware that the district has another claim to fame besides towering peaks of foaming cascades, says a writer in The Family Herald.

Those who take the drive to Lake Minnewanka, to very close, almost within a stone's throw to this rival attraction, for about five miles to the east, after leaving the town, the road skirts near the Bankhead Miners. Few stay off at this very point, which, apart from its natural importance as a big mine, has a rather unique distinction in that it is the only anthracite mine in operation in Canada.

It is somewhat different from one's preconceived ideas of a mine, for instead of going down a shaft to get to it, one climbs up the mountain. The mountain is one of the Cascade Range, and the coal is found in many seams, of which five are now being worked at three different levels. The three levels are respectively 4,680, 4,980 and 5,244 feet above sea level.

The height of these, while entailing an expensive means of approach, is in the end an economy, for the cost of transportation of the mined product is reduced by the adoption of a gravity system. That is to say, a loaded car not only runs down the incline from the mouth of the level to the breaker, but also pulls up an empty car by a cable on the other track.

The average production of coal is about 1,000 tons a day, although on one occasion 1,400 tons were produced. About 500 tons of this are what is known as "marketable" coal. The great feature of the work here is the utilization of the waste product of coal mining—the coal dust—in "briquettes." Energy in the Sun.

At the distance of the earth from it (93,000,000 miles), the heat energy yearly expended by the sun is so great by amount as would be produced by the burning of sixty-six globes of the best anthracite coal, each as heavy as the earth, or 12,000 times greater each sphere in weight as the moon. But the greater part of this energy is, so far as we can see, dissipated upon empty space because, except where a planetary body is interposed in the path of the rays, there is nothing for them to act upon. Only about two-thousand-millionth of the sun's radiant energy is intercepted by the earth and only about one-two-hundred-and-twenty-five-millionth by all the planets together. This makes the sun look like a gigantic spendthrift, but if he did not radiate in every direction he would not be seen from another star; he would not be a star among the stars, and who can say that what he expends to make himself known and to maintain his rank in the universe is not as well spent as the gardening that he flings to his planets.—Garrett P. Servis in Spokane Review.

How to Win.

This is an age of specialization, my boy, and the only men who succeed in a big way are those who pick out some particular line of work and live with it until they get to know more about it than most other fellows. Concentration, consistent and persistent effort in one direction is the surest road to success. You'll never win in a big way—except accidentally—if you scatter your energies. The best steam engine in the world would race itself to ruin without its governor. Keep your mind on your job, specialize in your particular business and try to know as much about it as the man who created it, and, barring misfortune, you'll make more out of that knowledge than you will out of any chance success outside of your boat-head.—Maurice Switzer in Leslie's.

Scots In Nova Scotia.

The first attempt to colonize Nova Scotia with Scottish settlers was made by Sir William Alexander under a royal charter of 1621, when James I. was on the throne. In 1628, a son of Sir William Alexander brought out about seventy of his countrymen whom he placed on the north-western side of the basin of Port Royal. Nothing came of the experiment as Nova Scotia was for the second time ceded to France by the Treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye a few years later, and the Scottish fort was abandoned. A number of the settlers died during their short residence on the harbor of Old Port Royal, now Annapolis Basin, and the remnant went to New England or returned to Scotland. A number of natives of Scotland settled in Halifax in the early days and many of the Pre-Loyalist immigrants from New England were of Scottish descent. As early as March, 1768, the North British Society was instituted in Halifax, and has had a continuous career to the present time.

The great Scottish immigration which exercised such an important influence on the eastern counties of Nova Scotia, including Cape Breton, commenced in 1773, when over thirty families arrived from Scotland and settled in the present County of Pictou, where a few colonists from Pennsylvania had preceded them. In later years a steady tide of immigrants from Scotland flowed into Eastern Nova Scotia and did not cease until 1820, and even later.

To Raise Cattle in North.

Angus Brabant, inspector of the Hudson Bay Company's trading posts in the Mackenzie River districts, which annually send more than $1,000,000 worth of fine furs to the marts of the world, announced on his arrival in Edmonton recently that large crops of potatoes, beets, turnips and other garden vegetables were harvested last season at the eighteen posts. Most of these are well within the Arctic circle, from 1,500 to 2,100 miles north of Edmonton. He reports there are not less than 500 buffaloes in the two herds seen recently in the north country, besides hundreds of caribou and deer of all varieties. Mr. Brabant is of the opinion that thousands of beef cattle could be raised in the northern latitudes, and with that end in view he will take a small herd into "the farthest north" district as soon as river navigation opens this spring. He will also experiment with grains for feeding purposes.

"Gave a poor boy a penny," replied the hopeful.

"I didn't stop to ask," replied the son. "I gave him the money for licking a boy who upset my school bag."—Chicago News.

Music Hath Charms.

Dohnanyi, the famous pianist, tells a story of two Scotchmen who lived in the same flat. Each had a piano, upon which he strummed in his own room, and one day a friend suggested that they should run the two pianos into the same room so that they could play music written for two pianos.

The two men thought it was a good idea, and accordingly the pianos were both placed in the same room. They practiced diligently at a sonata for two pianos, but with little success for some time, the difficulty being that one had generally finished his movement two or three bars before the other.

At last, however, they succeeded in finishing one movement exactly at the same moment, and one said, "Aweel, Donald, now that we've been so successful with the first movement, suppose we try the second?"

Donald looked at him in profound astonishment. "Eh, but, Angus," he exclaimed, "that was the second movement that I was playing!"—London Tit-Bits.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE HONOR MAN

How He Made Good.

By VINGIE E. ROE

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

The great, pine shaggy shoulders of the Cascades reared against the turquoise summer sky. Far down below the turbulent white waters of the Rogue river foamed in their wild bed, and their murmur rose to the mountain crests.

Halfway between the two extremes a fine roadway climbed by steady grades along the giant hills.

Along this road for a matter of a mile were scattered little groups of men still at work upon it. They wore overalls and sateen shirts, and there was nothing in their appearance to differentiate them from other men, yet they were convicts.

Farther on the pine shanties and tents of the honor camp straggled along the road, hugging it close by reason of the steepness of the hills.

Here there was a cook shack where the life of the camp centered. There was no sign of authority anywhere, and McConnel, the superintendent, went about unarmed as far as any one knew.

A quarter mile from the camp, just below the roadbed, a single man worked alone with pick and shovel deepening a wash from a culvert pipe.

He was about thirty, dark eyed and haired, though the short curls at his temples were dusted with gray. He was slim and agile, with the suggestion of football and the track meet in every line of his body.

He looked out of place as he labored, stopping from time to time to gaze off over the feathery, whispering slopes dropping so swiftly to the river below.

"Heavens," he said aloud—"the good green earth!"

Presently, as he worked, holding his eyes to the prosaic task under his hand with an effort, a girl came along around the bend on the road above him.

"Hello, impostor!" she called in a strong contralto voice that carried splendidly in the clear air.

He straightened and looked up with a smile.

"Not on your life!" he said. "Haven't I told you I'm where I belong?"

"Nix!" said the girl shortly. And, sitting down on the fill, she dropped her length to the sloping surface a little above him, where she sat down, drew up her knees, clasped them in her arms and smiled at him with clear, womanly gray eyes.

"You're an impostor. You're not one of the boys at heart."

"No?" he said courteously at this blunt opening of the tacitly shunned subject of the camp. "You're wide astray."

She shook her brown head.

"I know a man," she said simply, "from a criminal."

He smiled a trifle grimly.

"Not in this case," he said. "You don't know what's in my heart."

She did not speak, but under breath she said to herself sharply:

"Pity I don't!"

She was McConnel's daughter, her parole was more important than the governor's in the home.

"I might be meditating," he said, glancing at her face and then resuming his interrupted work again.

A MESSAGE TO THIN, WEAK, SCRAWNY FOLKS

An Easy Way to Gain 10 to 30 lbs. of Solid, Healthy, Permanent Flesh

This, nervous, undeveloped men and women everywhere are heard to say, "I can't understand why I do not get fat. I eat plenty of good, nourishing food." The reason is just this: You cannot get fat no matter how much you eat, unless your digestive organs assimilate the fat-making elements of your food instead of passing them out through the body as waste.

What is needed is a means of gently urging the assimilative functions of the stomach and intestines to absorb the oils and fats and hand them over to the blood, where they may reach the starved, shrunken, run-down tissues and build them up. Then this person's body is like a dry sponge—eager and hungry for the fatty materials of which it is being deprived by the failure of the alimentary canal to take them from the food. The best way to overcome this sinful waste of flesh building elements and to stop the leakage of fats is to use Sargol, the recently discovered regenerative force that is recommended so highly by physicians here and abroad. Take a little Sargol tablet with every meal and notice how quickly your cheeks fill out and rolls of firm, healthy flesh are deposited over your body, covering each bony angle and projecting point. Your druggist has Sargol, or can get it from his wholesaler, and will refund your money if you are not satisfied with the gain in weight it produces as stated on the guarantee in each package. It is inexpensive, easy to take and highly efficient.

Caution:—While Sargol has produced remarkable results in overcoming nervousness, dyspepsia and general stomach troubles, it should not be taken unless you are willing to gain ten pounds or more, for it is a wonderful flesh builder.

Money Myths That Hover About England's Chancery Court.

Most people seem to think that there are countless and vast fortunes in chancery waiting to be bestowed upon their proper owners. This, as a matter of fact, is purely a myth, and how it arose it is impossible to say.

"We are supposed," said an official of the pay office recently, "to have the estate of a man named Hoffman valued at £18,000,000, and we are repeatedly receiving inquiries—almost always from Poland—but we know nothing of the estate." Another estate with which the pay office has nothing to do—that of the great Sir Francis Drake—is also the subject of many questions.

In all there are 3,836 estates in chancery, but the value of the largest is not more than £7,000. And, so far from many millions, the paymaster of the supreme court of judicature has only £1,250,000 in his hands awaiting claimants. A large proportion of this money, moreover, has been lying unclaimed since the early part of the eighteenth century.

If you think you are entitled to any of this money you should first study the official list at the law courts and then make a formal claim. But, it may be said, it very rarely happens that such applications prove successful.—London Answers.

PASSING OF ST. HELENA.

Made Famous by Napoleon, the Island Appears to Be Doomed.

When the great French emperor died in exile in 1821 there was probably a wish buried deep in his Corsican heart that the island which had been the scene of his humiliation might be wiped from the face of the seas.

Whether or no such a curse was ever cast upon the island, it is certain that St. Helena is doomed if not to extinction at least to become an uninhabitable rock. With the advent of steam navigation the island ceased to be a regular port of call, so that its always scanty exports dwindled almost to the vanishing point; plagues of insects destroyed its vegetation; rats, brought thither by foreign vessels, multiplied and overran its soil until the government was compelled to offer a bounty of a penny for every rodent captured. Then the English garrison, which had been practically the sole source of income to the inhabitants, was withdrawn, and the needs of the natives became desperate.

Then, as if this series of misfortunes was not enough, the termite—that curse of tropical and semitropical countries—invaded the island and will unless controlled reduce the city of Jamestown to a pulp of sawdust.—New York Independent.

Possibilities Overlooked.

He was a suburban garden faddist, who innocently bored all his friends by asking them down for week ends and showing them around his 2 by 4 estate. Just now it was Brown from the office. He showed him his three rose trees, his pocket shrubbery, his half inch fountain jet with its little basin and pair of goldfish. He showed him his summer house, which would accommodate two people at the same time.

"Never know what you can do with a bit of ground till you try!" said the host gleefully.

"Quite so—quite so!" returned the visitor. "But why don't you take a strip off the flower bed—say about six inches wide—turf it over and make it into a blooming golf links?" — New York Post.

Habits of the Cuckoo.

It is quite a mistake to suppose that the cuckoo neglects her egg after she has deposited it in the nest of another bird, declared Oliver G. Pike, in a lecture at the Camera club. The cuckoo kept a watchful eye upon her treasure and should any accident befall it she laid another egg in another nest. Mr. Pike said he believed, although it was impossible to prove it, that the cuckoo laid its eggs in the nest of a third of the same species as that by which it had itself been reared. Thus a cuckoo reared by a sedge warbler laid its egg in turn in a sedge warbler's nest. So wonderful was the spell which the young cuckoo exercised over other birds that he had seen birds other than its foster parents pause in their flight to feed it, giving it the food which was intended for their own young, and once he saw a young cuckoo fed by birds of five different species in succession.—London Spectator.

King Grasshoppers.

The champion aeronaut is the king grasshopper, which has the ability to jump 100 times its length. It can also sail for 1,000 miles before the wind. These grasshoppers sometimes go in such numbers that they make a cloud 2,000 miles in extent. Its great front lip hides a pair of jaws as effective as a hay chopper, and it has an appetite as voracious as that of a hippopotamus. A young chick finds itself shut inside the eggshell and must work its way out alone, but the young grasshoppers find themselves—the whole assortful—shut in a hardened case in the ground made by their mother, and it takes a half dozen of them working together to dislodge the lid which shuts them in.—National Geographical Society Bulletin.

Judging Distance.

Most people are unaware that the apparent distance of an object depends upon the use of both eyes. This fact, however, can be strikingly shown. Place a pencil so that two or three inches project over the edge of a table. Then stand alongside the table, close one eye and attempt to knock the pencil off by quickly hitting the projecting end with the tip of the forefinger. Almost invariably the person making the attempt underestimates the distance by an inch or more and, much to his surprise, misses the pencil entirely. One eyed people, accustomed to estimating distances with only one eye, of course have no trouble in hitting the pencil at the first trial.—St. Nicholas.

Straight Talk a Virtue.

Everybody respects the man who talks without circumlocution and who means what he says, whose tongue is not twisted and who goes right to the mark, never seeking to mislead or to misrepresent. Straight talk is a virtue that is practiced all too little. Imagine what a different world this would be if there were no other kind in business, in domestic affairs, in society, in diplomacy—between employers and workers, politicians and people, government and governed and in the professional and the business world! How large a part of many men's occupations would be gone if there was never anything but perfectly straight talk between man and man!—Christian Herald.

Wagner and Beer.

Signor Angelini Giustiniani, who traveled specially from Rome to Baireuth in order to be present at the first performance of "Parsifal" July 26 1882, gave an account of his impressions in the Rassegna Contemporanea. He was surprised at seeing Wagner drive up to the theater "in a carriage which also conveyed a large barrel of beer perched conspicuously on the box seat by the side of the driver. This was carried into the theater, presumably with a view to slaking the thirst aroused in Wagner and his friends by the performance of his masterpiece."—London Chronicle.

Two Queer Epitaphs.

Near Salisbury plain, in England, is the grave of one William Batton. His epitaph runs:

Oh, sun, moon, stars and ye celestial poles!
Are graves, then, dwindled into Buttons-holes?

Which is not as clever as this epitaph which a famous New York dentist composed for himself:

Stranger, approach this grave with fitting gravity.
Here lies a dentist—filling his last cavity.

GUN HAND COAL MINE.

Canada Has Only One Anthracite Colliery In Operation.

Few out of the thousands of holiday-makers who yearly visit the beautiful summer resort and national park of Banff, in the Canadian Rockies, are aware that the district has another claim to fame besides towering peaks or foaming cascades, says a writer in The Family Herald.

Those who take the drive to Lake Minnewanka, go very close, almost within a stone's throw to this rival attraction, for about five miles to the east, after leaving the town, the road skirts near the Bankhead Mines. Few stay off at this very point, which, apart from its natural importance as a big mine, has a rather unique distinction in that it is the only anthracite mine in operation in Canada!

It is somewhat different from one's preconceived ideas of a mine, for instead of going down a shaft to get to it, one climbs up the mountain. The mountain is one of the Cascade Range, and the coal is found in many seams, of which five are now being worked at three different levels. The three levels are respectively 4,650, 4,980 and 5,244 feet above sea level.

The height of these, while entailing an expensive means of approach, is in the end an economy, for the cost of transportation of the mined product is reduced by the adoption of a gravity system. That is to say, a loaded car not only runs down the incline from the mouth of the level to the breaker, but also pulls up an empty car by a cable on the other track.

The average production of coal is about 1,000 tons a day, although on one occasion 1,400 tons were produced. About 500 tons of this are what is known as "marketable" coal. The great feature of the work here is the utilization of the waste product of coal mining—the coal dust—to make "briquettes." The coal dust is mixed with coal tar pitch, subjected to a pressure of about 2,400 pounds to the square inch, and cut into little squares about the size of a tablet of soap. The result is a "briquette" which can be used for domestic purposes like ordinary coal, and also for locomotive fuel, giving out a very fierce, intense heat. About 500 tons of briquettes are turned out per d[illegible]

The briquett[illegible] is well known, and has been used for many years in England.

About 450 men are employed, working in two daily shifts of eight hours each. The rate of pay is very good, the lowest paid being to laborers, $2.47 per day, and ranging up to $10. The miners themselves are paid on the basis of the number of yards mined, the average received by them being from $3.50 to $5 per day. The majority of those working at present are foreigners, but I was informed by the superintendent, upon putting the question to him, that he could often find a job for a competent miner. The average payroll runs to about $35,000 per month.

The company is very good to its employes. It has provided excellent bathing accommodations for the men, every man as he comes off duty has a hot or cold shower bath, and leaves his working clothes in his locker, which is rented at a very moderate charge. The company also owns the entire village, and has it leased to them at low rentals, ranging from $7 a month upwards. It has also provided a baseball park, football and tennis grounds, skating rink and curling rink. A doctor is located in the camp.

This mine is the only anthracite one in Canada, its products are supplied mostly to private users, but some are supplied to the C.P.R.'s operating department for use in heating the coaches and stations.

The Waiters Took Revenge.

A story is going in Parliamentary circles about Senator "Tom" David, the "father" of the Anti-Tipping Bill. It was during the height of the debate in the Upper Chamber on the bill, which, it will be remembered, got a front place in the despatches on several days. On one of the days when he was not on duty, Senator "Tom" ran down to Montreal, and put up at the Queen's Hotel.

Dinner time came, and the Senator went in and took his seat at the table. He sat in undisturbed quiet for a few minutes, and no waiter came near to interrupt his cogitations. Then he began to look about him. He looked. He snapped his fingers. Still he could attract the attention of none of the napkinned gentlemen. Finally he got up and strode indignantly over to the head waiter. He reported the case and made a complaint.

"It's not my fault, sir," replied the head waiter. "I have done my best for you. I have asked every waiter in the room to wait on you, and none of them will do it."

Paul Chevre's Last Monument.

The last piece of sculptural work done by the late Paul Chevre, the well-known Parisian sculptor who made so many monuments for the ancient capital recently, was immediately forwarded to Levis, where it will be erected in front of the parish church. It is a huge bronze of the Sacred Heart, 10 feet high, and the pedestal is made of a beautiful cube of French granite.

Paul Chevre was working on this statue when he was taken suddenly ill and died at Asnieres a few months ago. His father, who is an old artist of 78 years of age, gave the finishing touches to the statue.

Paul Chevre was one of the survivors of the Titanic disaster. He never recovered from the shock of that terrible experience.

Not Exactly What He Meant.

In the closing hours of the recent session of the Montreal Methodist Conference, one of the clerical delegates arose and thus addressed the assemblage: "Before we adjourn, we should send a letter of condolence to our dear brother S——. He is lying at the point of death, and I am sure we all wish him Godspeed!"

Energy in the Sun.

At the distance of the earth from its 93,000,000 miles, the heat energy yearly expended by the sun is so great in amount as would be produced by the burning of sixty-six globes of the best anthracite coal, each as heavy as the earth, or 5,346 such globes, each equal in weight to the moon. But the greater part of this energy is, so far as we can see, expended upon empty space because, except where a planetary body is interposed in the path of the rays, there is nothing for them to act upon. Only about two-thousand-millionth of the sun's radiant energy is intercepted by the earth and only about one two-hundred-and-twenty-five-millionth by all the planets together. This makes the sun look like a gigantic speedthrift, but if he did not radiate in every direction he would not be seen from distant space; he would not be a star among the stars, and who can say that what he expends to make himself known and to maintain his rank in the universe, is not as well spent as the gratuities that he flings to his planets.—Garrett P. Servis in Spokane Review.

How to Win.

This is an age of specialization, my boy, and the only men who succeed in a big way are those who pick out some particular line of work and live with it until they get to know more about it than most other fellows. Concentration, consistent and persistent effort in one direction is the surest road to success. You'll never win in a big way—except accidentally—if you scatter your energies. The best steam engine in the world would race itself to ruin without its governor. Keep your mind on your job, specialize in your particular business and try to know as much about it as the man who created it, and, barring misfortune, you'll make more out of that knowledge than you will out of any chance success outside of your business.—Maurice Switzer in Leslie's.

Personal Property.

A Cleveland attorney took the Mediterranean trip a month ago. It was his first time across the water, and he stated on his return that he would have had a perfectly glorious time but for the silly questions asked him by customs officials.

It was on the pier at New York that his woes came to a climax. "Open your trunk, please," commanded the custom house officer. "Have you anything in there but personal property?" he continued.

"What do you mean by personal property?" countered the lawyer.

"For Heaven's sake! Don't you know what personal property is?" The officer looked him in amazement.

"I thought I did," answered the attorney, "and I can assure you that there is no real estate in my trunk."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Pepys' Library.

Pepys' library since 1724 has been in the possession of Magdalene college, Cambridge. Pepys directed in his will that his collection of books and manuscripts should be transferred on the death of his nephew, John Jackson, to either Trinity college or Magdalene college, Cambridge, and required that the college which received the books should submit to an annual visitation from the other, the purpose of which should be to ascertain whether the trust was being worthily fulfilled. "Could I be sure," Pepys wrote, "of a constant succession of heirs from my said nephew qualified like himself for the use of such a library, I should not entertain a thought of its ever being alienated from them."

Potato Juice Cure.

Potato juice as a remedy for sprains, lumbago, gout, rheumatism and bruises is recommended by Dr. Henton C. Howard of London in an article in the London Lancet. He cites numerous cases in his own practice in which the pain has been relieved quickly, sometimes by the first application, and the fluid that has exuded into the joint or the membranes has been absorbed within a few days.

Potato juice is used as an ointment, a liniment or a plaster. The raw potatoes are squeezed in a hydraulic press. The starch and nitrogenous matter are removed and the juice boiled down until it is made five times as strong as when fresh. Glycerin is added to preserve it.

Sargent and His Pictures.

When Sargent has finished a picture he is heartily glad to see the last of it. The story goes that a royal visitor to his studio said, after looking over the pictures, "I wonder you can bear to part with them." "Sir," answered Sargent, "having finished a picture, I am like a hen which has laid an egg. 'Come and take it away, come and take it away!' I exclaim. Its removal enables me to start another."—Sheffield (England) Telegraph.

Scots In Nova Scotia.

The first attempt to colonize Nova Scotia with Scottish settlers was made by Sir William Alexander under a royal charter of 1621, when James I. was on the throne. In 1628, a son of Sir William Alexander brought out about seventy of his countrymen whom he placed on the north-western side of the basin of Port Royal. Nothing came of the experiment as Nova Scotia was for the second time ceded to France by the Treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye a few years later, and the Scottish fort was abandoned. A number of the settlers died during their short residence on the harbor of Old Port Royal, now Annapolis Basin, and the remnant went to New England or returned to Scotland. A number of natives of Scotland settled in Halifax in the early days and many of the Pre-Loyalist immigrants from New England were of Scottish descent. As early as March, 1768, the North British Society was instituted in Halifax, and has had a continuous career to the present time.

The great Scottish immigration which exercised such an important influence on the eastern counties of Nova Scotia, including Cape Breton, commenced in 1773, when over thirty families arrived from Scotland and settled in the present County of Pictou, where a few colonists from Pennsylvania had preceded them. In later years a steady tide of immigrants from Scotland flowed into Eastern Nova Scotia and did not cease until 1820, and even later.

To Raise Cattle In North.

Angus Brabant, inspector of the Hudson Bay Company's trading posts in the Mackenzie River districts, which annually send more than $1,000,000 worth of fine furs to the marts of the world, announced on his arrival in Edmonton recently that large crops of potatoes, beets, turnips and other garden vegetables were harvested last season at the eighteen posts. Most of these are well within the Arctic circle, from 1,500 to 2,100 miles north of Edmonton. He reports there are not less than 500 buffaloes in the two herds seen recently in the north country, besides hundreds of caribou and deer of all varieties. Mr. Brabant is of the opinion that thousands of beef cattle could be raised in the northern latitudes, and with that end in view he will take a small herd into "the farthest north" district as soon as river navigation opens this spring. He will also experiment with grains for feeding purposes.

American Catacombs and Mummies.

Recent publicity has been given to the wonders of the cliff villages of the Gila canyon in New Mexico, where the lofty pumice or tufa walls of the box canyons are honeycombed with the excavated dwellings of a nation of dwarfs, whose mummies here and there found, preserved by the stone dust for centuries, are clad in woven clothes and ornamented with gay feathers at neck and waist. The remains of an adult man of this people measured only twenty-three inches in height, and the doors and windows of their "homes in the rock" are hardly passable by a half grown girl. Like the dwarf temples of Yucatan—of which Le Plongeon wrote so entertainingly—hovel, mansion, fortress and temple, seem like toys made with infinite pains for the children of a remote past; indeed, an antiquity fixed by the best authorities at least as far back as 6,000 years ago.—National Magazine.

Used Penny Well.

"Well, my son," said a good natured father to an eight-year-old son the other night, "what have you done today that may be set down as a good deed?"

"Gave a poor boy a penny," replied the hopeful.

"Ah, ah, that was charity, and charity is always right. He was an orphan boy, was he?"

"I didn't stop to ask," replied the son. "I gave him the money for licking a boy who upset my school bag."—Chicago News.

Music Hath Charms.

Dohnanyi, the famous pianist, tells a story of two Scotchmen who lived in the same flat. Each had a piano, upon which he strummed in his own room, and one day a friend suggested that they should run the two pianos into the same room so that they could play music written for two pianos.

The two men thought it was a good idea, and accordingly the pianos were both placed in the same room. They practiced diligently at a session for two pianos, but with little success for some time, the difficulty being that one had generally finished his movement two or three bars before the other.

At last, however, they succeeded in finishing one movement exactly at the same moment, and one said, "Aweel, Donald, now that we've been so successful with the first movement, suppose we try the second?"

Donald looked at him in profound astonishment. "Eh, but, Angus," he exclaimed, "that was the second movement that I was playing!"—London Tit-Bits.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE HONOR MAN

How He Made Good.

By VINGIE E. ROE

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

The great, pine shaggy shoulders of the Cascades reared against the turquoise summer sky. Far down below the turbulent white waters of the Rogue river foamed in their wild bed, and their murmur rose to the mountain crests.

Halfway between the two extremes a fine roadway climbed by steady grades along the giant hills.

Along this road for a matter of a mile were scattered little groups of men still at work upon it. They wore overalls and sateen shirts, and there was nothing in their appearance to differentiate them from other men, yet they were convicts.

Farther on the pine shanties and tents of the honor camp straggled along the road, hugging it close by reason of the steepness of the hills.

Here there was a cook shack where the life of the camp centered. There was no sign of authority anywhere, and McConnel, the superintendent, went about unarmed as far as any one knew.

A quarter mile from the camp, just below the roadbed, a single man worked alone with pick and shovel deepening a wash from a culvert pipe.

He was about thirty, dark eyed and haired, though the short curls at his temples were dusted with gray. He was slim and agile, with the suggestion of football and the track meet in every line of his body.

He looked out of place as he labored, stopping from time to time to gaze off over the feathery, whispering slopes dropping so swiftly to the river below.

"Heavens," he said aloud—"the good green earth!"

Presently, as he worked, holding his eyes to the prosaic task under his hand with an effort, a girl came along around the bend on the road above him.

"Hello, impostor!" she called in a strong contralto voice that carried splendidly in the clear air.

He straightened and looked up with a smile.

"Not on your life!" he said. "Haven't I told you I'm where I belong?"

"Nix!" said the girl shortly, and, sitting down on the fill, she dropped her length to the sloping surface a little above him, where she sat down, drew up her knees, clasped them in her arms and smiled at him with clear, womanly gray eyes.

"You're an impostor. You're not one of the boys at heart."

"No?" he said courteously at this blunt opening of the tacitly shunned subject of the camp. "You're wide astray."

She shook her brown head.

"I know a man," she said simply, "from a criminal."

He smiled a trifle grimly.

"Not in this case," he said. "You don't know what's in my heart."

She did not speak, but under her breath she said to herself sharply: "Pity I don't!"

She was McConnel's daughter: her parole was more important, and the governor's in the home matter, and

"I might be meditating important than now," he said, flicking for camp. ward at her face as escape right terrupted work again his eyes up- "It's a mighty be bent to his in- that of the quail—a mighty call—streams."

He stopped woods and the over the wi again and looked down roaring ri "To you whispering pine tops to the she said. ter. bend a more than to those others," grou nodding her head toward the swer head which hid the scattered The "and a common man might an- ron t. You are of better fiber."

They both fell silent, while the river ed and the little winds played in pine tops.

He did not look up again, and she atched his broad shoulders and lithe hips give and take with the motion of the pick for a long time.

Her gray eyes were speculative and very tender, while a tense line of anxiety drew in around her lips. Presently she shifted her position a trifle. As she did so a tiny stone under her foot became dislodged, starting to roll down the sharp decline. Watching, she saw it suddenly disappear in a narrow crack in the worn rock of the hillside.

A moment later there came a tiny thud as it struck bottom, a thud that reverberated with a strangely hollow sound.

The man did not seem to notice it and looked up as she rose after awhile to go on her way.

"Goodby," he said gently, but she did not speak.

At supper time the men came straggling in, some weary and hopeless, others singing, a pathetic file in the high blue shadow of the mountains, and crowded about the basins and the towels.

The girl hung upon the outskirts of the crowd, busy at some task, but covertly watching for the figure that was not like those others.

And she knew—long before her father stood at the cook shack door and checked them off by number as they filed in to the evening meal—she knew.

She did not need the sudden halt in the roll call, the repetition of his number, its iteration, the glances of inquiry, the questions, to tell her that had happened.

There was sudden confusion at it supper sat untasted on the ta The a search was made of t bles while tents.

Then there was e shacks and were made up a order, and squads she saw a gu d details given, and sight on her f suddenly spring into In ten m father's lip. out on minutes the honor camp was man h the hillsides starting the first a m nt, for this was the first time h had broken his parole.

The girl ran at her father's side, he and strong in her short skirt and grim mountain boots, silent, listening to the buzz of comment and speculation.

Like bloodhounds the squads went first to the wash below the high arched culvert which carried off the most threatening of the big mountain's rushing rivulets in the rains. Here lay his tools, but of himself or the way he had gone there was no sign.

"Skipped," said her father disdainfully, "and him a 'trusty'—the first man to play the infernal fool, for it'll mean a long addition to his term when he's caught. And he'll be caught. Now we'll spread out from here."

But here the girl pushed through and stood just over the long crack in the slanting rock. She leaned forward a bit, as if she wished her ringing young voice to carry downward.

"You're wrong, dad!" she cried strongly. "I tell you you're wrong! The man's been a hunter—a fisher. He's the putteed, gauntleted, tailored khaki kind, and the pull of the hills and woods has been too strong! He's gone for a time, but he'll come back. The freedom and the wild have waked the old longings in him, and he's flung out to the woods, but he'll come back. I know, for my rifle and my steel fly rod are gone."

"Rosie," said her father gravely, "you've never been a fool before. Go on back to your mother."

Obediently, having fallen contentedly silent, she went, and the squads spread up and down the great watershed in grim and orderly fashion.

When the midnight stars stood overhead there was a tiny, whispering sound at the culvert, and a man came crawling cautiously out of it, having merely raised the mat of drooping ferns that concealed the mouth of as fine a natural underground cavern that gave at the upper end as one might need for such a purpose as his.

Now he straightened cautiously and listened. Far up on the ridge he could hear occasional scattered shouts where his fellows searched for him. He smiled grimly.

His dark eyes were full of fire and grim determination, and the excitement of great hazard marked his clean lined face. He was starting for freedom. But the first careful step appalled him by its consequence. He put his foot on something that rolled and sent him rattling down the wash, while the object of the disaster slid with him.

With his heart stopped still he put out his hands and felt of it. It was a steel fishing rod, its joints tied together. Dangling from it he found, as his fingers slipped along it, a reel full of line and a fly book.

It had been placed directly across the culvert's mouth.

With his face a study in the darkness he crept slowly back, reaching with his sensitive hands along the rocky bed. They came upon the cold metal of a gun—a neat, light rifle.

"Lord!" he said under his breath. Then he sat back up on his heels, motionless in the darkness.

The men came straggling back at dawn for food, ate, talked, compared notes and went out again. All day they hunted the hills and the gorges, slept a bit by turns and returned to the search.

McConnel was grim and angry. He hated to send word to the authorities until he had satisfied himself that he could do nothing himself.

The girl watched slyly from her gray eyes and said nothing, though she was as tense as a drawn string.

The next morning they were a haggard bunch that clustered around the long tables in the cook shack, and McConnel stood at the telephone calling for the valley town. He was sending for help.

The voices of the men were hushed for his benefit, and there was only the clatter of knives against heavy plates.

Suddenly there was an exclamation, the rasp of a chair pushed back on the rough floor, and a man sprang up with a tragic finger pointed to a window that commanded the road.

"Heavens!" he cried shrilly. "There he comes!"

In one hand he carried the lengths of a steel rod and a string of trout fresh from the cool shadows of the spray dashed rocks. In the other he bore a light hunting rifle, while on his back, properly slung with the trick of the true hunter, its slender feet tied on his breast and its weight on his shoulders, there rode a young spike buck.

"Good morning!" he smiled. "By George, I'm hungry!"

McConnel walked up to him, and for a long moment the two men looked each other between the eyes with glances sharp as steel. Then:

"Wash up," said the former shortly. "You're just in time."

As he turned to obey his dark eyes traveled to where the girl stood at the far side of the tables with a dish in her hands, and they were full of a smiling light. Her lips were trembling and her lashes wet with tears.

He nodded ever so slightly.

Presently as he washed at the basins she passed him, and her hand rested for a moment on his muscled arm under its torn sleeve with an eloquent caressing touch.

"Man," she laughed tremulously, "oh, man!"

Widows' Caps.

The widow's cap is a survival of an old Roman custom. Widows were obliged to wear their weeds for ten months, and the bereaved woman shaved her head as a token of mourning. Naturally the widow could not very well appear in public with a bald head, so dainty caps were made in order to hide the disfigurement. The cap still remains, though the immediate necessity for its existence has long passed away.—Pearson's Weekly.

Quaint Old Welsh Custom.

One of the quaintest of all Welsh customs is the unsheathing of the sword of Taliesin that takes place every year on the shores of Llyn Geirionydd, near Trefriw, north Wales. A short distance from the lake is a large, flat topped bowlder, supposed to have been Taliesin's pulpit. On this rock the old bard (who is said to have flourished about 540 A. D.) performed his weird religious rites, and ever since the rock has been known as the "Court of Taliesin." Once a year, in August, a group of bards assemble at the "court"—the chief bard standing on the rock and the others on a circle of white stones surrounding it. Here the rites are performed solemnly and quaintly in the presence of a large crowd. The naked sword is returned to its sheath when the chief bard has ascertained from the people that there is peace in the land. The sword remained unsheathed during the three years of the Boer war. The ancient ceremony is followed by witty and humorous bardic addresses, recitations and songs.

Mansfield's Manner.

"Richard Mansfield possessed a dominance that never failed him, I believe. The strange thing about this is that he didn't need it. He had 'fascination' enough without it.

"That fine, dry old manager and good man, A. M. Palmer, and I were once visiting Mansfield at Southampton, and late at night Mr. Palmer would come into my room, and we would talk an hour or so. It was always about Mansfield; that was always the way if you were near him; it was inevitable that you could think or speak of little else. One night I said:

"'I think you understand him as well as any man could.'

"'Understand him?' The old man laughed in his quiet way. 'There's only one man on earth who understands Richard Mansfield. That's Richard Mansfield.' Then, after a pause, he added with sudden vehemence, 'And he doesn't!'"—Booth Tarkington in Bellman.

Reis and the Telephone.

While Bell invented the telephone and Edison, Berliner, Marconi and many others have improved it, the true inventor and discoverer of the principles of telephony was a German scientist to whom too little credit has been given—Philip Reis. In 1861 Reis exhibited a partially articulate electric telegraph at Frankfort and showed that variations in an electric current caused by a vibrating membrane could reproduce the necessary vibrations. Reis transmitted musical sounds and even words. Elisha Gray, whose application for a patent on the telephone was filed in Washington [illegible] hours after Professor Bell's [illegible] tion.

Stellar Elements.

The spectroscope shows the lines so far in stellar research of forty-five elements well known here in the earth. Hydrogen exists in all stars in enormous quantities. Iron and a number of other metals likewise are incandescent in the sun, and in all other suns bright enough to send rays into the grating for analysis.

An element named coronium is now seen glowing in the envelopes of the sun, but it has not been discovered here on earth yet. Helium was seen in the sun for a number of years before it was finally discovered in the earth. Stars vary in the character of the rays emitted; therefore all suns are not alike. And the differences indicate differences in their ages.—New York American.

GERMANS LOST 25,000 MEN AROUND LIEGE

Churchill Denies Previous Report of General Naval Engagement in The North Sea

Canadians Will Likely Be Sent To Scene Of Conflict

Volunteers Are Being Hastily Mobilized and Made Ready for the Front—May Help English Picked Forces

TO-DAY'S OTTAWA NEWS

Special Wire to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Aug. 7.—It is approved that the Canadian army division for service with British troops on the Continent will sail with united strikes in three weeks' time as transports provided for them. Mustering commences at all points to-day, and the wheels will be rolling on all railways bringing men to Quebec to the big training grounds at Val Cartier at an early date.

Twenty-five thousand men will be taken to Val Cartier, though only 21,000 will be sent on. Two hundred targets are now in the process of erection for shooting practice, which will be carried on for about a week and there will be careful selections of already selected forces.

The army division will consist of three brigades, four battalions each. There will be 12,000 infantry. The artillery will consist of 72 guns, field, horse and heavy, with 3,000 artillery men. Five hundred cavalry will probably be included, and the remainder will be made up of an auxiliary corps. The Canadian troops will not act for garrison duty, but to assist Great Britain's expeditionary force on the continent in the forefront of battle. Such is the expectation in headquarters here.

Kaiser Makes Strong Appeal To His Troops

BERLIN, Aug. 6.—The Emperor has issued an order to the German army and navy, in which he says:

"After 43 years of peace, I call upon all Germans capable of bearing arms. We have to defend our most sacred possessions in the Fatherland and home against the reckless assault of enemies on all sides of us.

"That means hard fighting. I am confident that the ancient warlike spirit still lives in the German people—that powerful, warlike spirit which attacks the enemy wherever it finds him, regardless of cost, and which in the past has been the dread and terror of our enemies.

"I have confidence in you German soldiers—in each and all of you. An ardent, indomitable will for victory is living in each and all of you. I know, if needed, each and all of you would die like heroes.

"Remember our great and glorious past, and you are Germans. God bless you."

"WILLIAM."

NATIONALISTS ESCORT THE IRISH SOLDIERS

DUBLIN, Aug. 6.—There was a great demonstration here to-night over the British regiments which were embarking for active service. Reservists who were starting for England were escorted to the station by Nationalist volunteers with bands of music. A great number of Unionist Protestants are joining the Nationalist volunteers for the defense of the country.

HAS LITTLE FEAR OF FINES

Notwithstanding that he was fined a day or two ago for drunkenness, Thomas Casey handed two more dollars in the court this morning for the same offence. Wm. Ryan paid a like fine for a similar offence. Allen, charged with being drunk and disorderly, was fined $5 and costs, in all $6.75.

B. & B. DEPARTMENT STAFF CURTAILED

Instructions have been issued to the Bridge and Building Department of the G.T.R., Belleville District, that the staff of the Department is to be curtailed. This arises from the depression in traffic, which in turn is a result of the war. Should the war continue and the factories receive few orders, the railway traffic will suffer in consequence.

Forest Fires Around Fernie

Special Wire to The Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 7.—Forest fires are raging to-day in the vicinity of Fernie, B.C. The town of Corbin was saved by wind shifting. Three hundred men in the town were commandeered to fight the flames. Hundreds are imperilled and three are known to be dead.

Churchill Assures The Empire That The Fleet Has Met No Reverse

No General Engagement Between British and German Fleets Has Occurred in the North Sea—Britain's Optimism Remains Undimmed—Reports of Naval Battles Off the English Coast Have Not Been Verified

A DEFINITE STATEMENT MADE IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS TO-DAY

Special Cable To The Examiner:—

London Eng. Aug 7—In the House of Commons this afternoon First Lord of Admiralty Winston Churchill denied that any General Naval Engagment had taken place between British and German Fleets.

LONDON, AUG. 7.—OFFICIAL STATEMENTS FROM THE ADMIRALTY DO NOT CONTAIN MUCH NEW INFORMATION. WINSTON CHURCHILL, FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY, TOLD THE COMMONS THIS AFTERNOON THAT NO GENERAL ENGAGEMENT HAD BEEN FOUGHT YET, AND REASSURED BRITAIN WITH THE STATEMENT THAT SHE HAD SUFFERED NO LOSSES BEYOND THOSE ALREADY STATED. HE SAID FURTHER THAT MINE LAYING AS PRACTISED BY THE GERMANS WAS NEW IN NAVAL WARFARE AND MIGHT EFFECT NEUTRAL SHIPPING THROUGHOUT THE ENTIRE WORLD.

BRITAIN'S OPTIMISM UNDIMMED

LONDON, Aug. 7.—All things considered, Britain's optimism of yesterday continues. The army recruiting goes on rapidly. Belgium's brave stand against the invading Germans is startling the whole world. Within this week it is expected that Britain's first army corps will land in France and proceed over land to help the plucky Belgians.

24 HOURS ARMISTICE TO BURY GERMANS

BRUSSELS, Aug. 7.—The Germans, who have partially captured Liege, have asked for a 24 hour armistice to bury their dead. They fought in close formation and their losses were tremendous.

120,000 GERMANS BUZZ AROUND LIEGE

Special Wire to A. H. Stratton & Co.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 7.—One hundred and twenty thousand Germans are now attacking Liege. They are attacking a suburb, and are now fighting in the streets. It is rumoured over 25,000 men have been lost so far in this battle.

GERMANS LOSE 25,000 MEN

PARIS, France, Aug. 7.—The Germans have entered the city of Liege, but the forts still remain in Belgians' hands. It is said the Germans lost 25,000 men in this three days' fight.

RUSH BRITISH FORCES TO BELGIUM

LONDON, Eng., Aug. 7.—A number of big liners have been requisitioned, and will be used for rushing British troops across to Belgian ports, but no announcements as to their going will be permitted until they are actually landed.

BELIEVE GERMAN FLEET SANDWICHED

LONDON, Eng., Aug. 7. — Special Cable—That a powerful section of the German battle fleet had been cut off from the main fleet in the neighbourhood of Kiel and is now sandwiched in a critical position between two lines of the British fleet, is the opinion of naval experts here to-day with all published facts before them.

SUMMARY OF WAR EVENTS

With a rigid censorship in operation, there is a great dearth of reliable war news. What is received one day is frequently contradicted the next. The Examiner can only print what it receives and not all of that. It is not responsible for the reports it prints; in fact many palpably absurd reports are not used at all. We are doing our best to meet the natural desire of the public for news of war events. We are doing our best to cull the reports we receive, and to use our best judgment in printing only what has an appearance of reliability. The public must be patient. The story of a great war like the present cannot be told in a day. Everything so far has a decided trend in favour of Britain and her allies and the first movements have not been encouraging to Germany and Austria.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 7.

Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, this morning in House of Commons, denied that any general engagements had taken place between British and German naval forces.

French frontier reported quiet. French troops reported to have entered Lorraine.

Admiralty admits that British cruiser Amphion has been sunk by a mine.

British will raise an extra emergency army of 500,000 men.

Italy is enforcing its neutrality proclamation and has ordered the German cruisers Goeben and Breslau to leave the port of Messina. They left for sea and British and French cruisers win.

It is reported that Liege, Belgium, has been captured by the Germans.

Persistent reports continue to come of big naval engagement in the North Sea, and New York papers report the defeat of German fleet.

Servia has been heard from. A Rome despatch states that an Austrian brigade was totally annihilated at Semendria and that Austrians are in full retreat across the Danube.

A Madrid despatch states that a German cruiser was sunk and one captured near Canary Islands. One British cruiser damaged and proceeding to Gibraltar.

The Turbania, carrying gold and reservists to Hamburg, reported captured by British destroyers in English Channel.

Fight between British and German cruisers reported from London.

The Germans are finding Liege, Belgium, a hard nut to crack. It is reported that they have entered the suburbs, but that the forts still hold out. It is said that in the three days' attempt to capture Liege the Germans have lost 25,000, killed and wounded.

It is officially announced that the east coast of England is made safe for British shipping. This does not necessarily infer a serious engagement, but that the German warships have been forced to retire out of danger and are practically "bottled up." Though for tactical reasons the Admiralty is withholding details of any possible engagement, there is no ground to fear that Britain is not still supreme in the North Sea.

The Germans at Liege have asked for twenty-four hours armistice, to bury their dead. Fighting in close formation, their losses have been tremendous.

Street Paving Company Was Asked To Wait

Unsettled Financial Conditions Are Partly Due to Fact That Foley & Gleeson Co. Are Not Paving Here Now

10,000 MEN LET OUT

To the Examiner this afternoon, Mr. Gleeson, of the firm of Foley & Gleeson, said that the company had intended to commence work on the streets of the city before this, but that on account of the unsettled condition of affairs the City Council had asked him to wait for a few days.

"Are you ready to start work here?" he was asked.

"Why, yes," was the reply. "We are ready to move our men and machines here any time that the Council wishes. But if they do not want us to go ahead with the work just now, why, we will have to postpone it."

Mr. Gleeson said that the City Fathers had been in consultation with the Montreal Bank here to make sure of the city's financial standing, if they should go ahead with the work.

"If work is suspended in other places and Peterborough owing to the war," said Mr. Gleeson, "a thousand of our men will be thrown out of work. We are now paving streets in St. Thomas, Belleville, St. Catharines, Kingston and other places besides Peterborough, and have altogether something over 1,500 labourers in our employ. Only five hundred of these can be retained if we are forced to stop the work. In Ottawa we have orders to go right ahead with the paving."

Mr. Gleeson, who as an employer of labour has had considerable experience, was inclined to take a pessimistic view of the labouring man's immediate future. He referred not only to his own men thrown out of work, but that 10,000 lumbermen had been thrown out of work in the lumber camps, with no prospect of their re-hired in the near future.

"If labouring men cannot get work in the middle of the summer," said Mr. Gleeson, "how in the world they are going to tide over the winter months is more than I can see."

TWO EX-NAVY MEN HERE WILL JOIN THE COLORS

Leave To-morrow for Halifax—One Has Previously Seen Active Service With the British Navy

ENLISTS WITH CANADIANS

A. C. Miller, 382 McDonnel Street, and Daniel McNamee, 319 McDonnel Street, ex-Navy men, have received word to report to Halifax for service on H.M.C.S. Niobe.

They expect to leave to-morrow.

Mr. Miller left the British Navy in 1903, after a service of seven years. He saw active service in 1900 in connection with the suppression of the Boxer rising.

Mr. McNamee served six years and seven months in the Navy, but never saw active service.

Mr. Harold Matthews was in communication by telephone with Major Perreau of the Royal Military College last evening, and learned that twenty would be chosen from this year's graduating class and twenty from next year's graduating class for the Imperial service.

However, Mr. Matthews has enlisted with the Canadian forces, and expects to be called at any time.

REAL ESTATE TRANSFER

Mr. T. H. Hooper, Confectioner, Buys Business Block

Mr. T. Hooper, confectioner, has purchased from Messrs. Long Bros., the business block now occupied by Coleman Bros. and previously by Mr. Hooper himself and Long Bros. Mr. Hooper will take possession September 1st. Coleman Bros. will still occupy their north store and move from the property which Mr. Hooper has bought to the store in the city formerly occupied by the K. & R. restaurant.

CLAIMS COMPENSATION

Mr. W. A. Bailey, of George Street, writes to Chief Thompson in respect to the robbery committed at his house recently, and opines that he should be honourably compensated. At the back of his letter appears the following postscript:

"Those newspaper reporters should not be allowed to make your Court into a farce, and some of the lawyers are no doubt better than me and an abomination, and turn the work of yourself and your officers from being a help to the wronged into almost aiding the criminal class."

NOTICE

Lieut. Clarence Henry has been instructed by Col. Hopkins, O.C. 45th Regiment, Lindsay, to recruit for foreign service men of "D" Co., 45th Regiment, and others wishing to serve. Men will kindly hand in their names at once to C. A. HENRY, LIEUT., 187 BETHUNE STREET, CITY.

Gone To Join His Regiment

Mr. Chas. Hastings, late of the Examiner staff, left yesterday afternoon with the Ontario contingent for Quebec. He expects eventually to be transferred to his own particular regiment in the mother country.

WHAT IS A NAUTICAL "KNOT"

In these days when one sees warships and cruisers mentioned with a speed capacity of so many knots per hour, a great many will be interested in knowing what is the length of a nautical "knot" and what its relation to a land mile is.

In nautical parlance a "knot" is a division of the logline on a ship, forming the same fraction of a mile as half a minute is of an hour; that is to say, the hundred and twentieth part of a nautical mile; so that the number of knots run off the reel in half a minute shows the vessel's speed per hour in miles, hence a nautical mile or 6080 feet, while a land mile is 5280 feet. A knot is, therefore, one land mile and 15-100ths of a mile.

GOOD JAPAN.

The attitude of Japan, the gallant Eastern ally of Great Britain is all that could be desired. Her offer to stand by Great Britain in the present Crisis will be a great help. We have in the East British possessions open to attack by German warships, such as Kong Kong, the Straits Settlements, and further east from Asia in British Columbia. If Japan's rather formidable navy can take care of British interests in the Far East, that will permit Britain to concentrate her immense naval force upon the European situation. A despatch received this morning of an attack of a German squadron upon a British cruiser off China will illustrate how Japan can and will be of use to us in the present conflict. There may be no need for the Japanese navy in European waters, but she has shown her good will already in the East by despatching a force of 10,000 soldiers to occupy a German position on the Chinese coast.

CANADA WILL HELP.

The spontaneous manner in which the people of Canada and the other dominions beyond the seas are rallying to the help of Great Britain is not unreasoning patriotic impulse. The matter has been reasoned out long ago. Al the people of the Dominions realise that Britain and the Empire stand for the highest ideals of civilization and human welfare, and that the integrity of the Empire is the guarantee of the continuance of this condition.

The hearty, widspread, and universal response shown by Canadians at the present time is what might be expected, and it will perhaps have no more than a rural effect. Though all the resources of Canada in men—and women, too—and money will be and are being placed at the service of the Empire, it does not seem probable that our soldiers and nurses will be called upon to take part in active service on the scene of actual hostilities.

It is hoped and seems probable that the forces of the Mother Country and her allies iwll be equal to carrying on th fight successfully. It promises to be short and decisive from the beginning. When we note the spirit that animates Great Britain's forces and the forces of her allies, and the evident conditions of readiness and resource brought out at the beginning, we cannot be regarded as too optimistic in feeling that the issue of the struggle will not be doubtful or long to wait for. It is true that Germany is a most powerful military nation, but ti is to be noted that her progress so far has not been the triumphant progress that gave her her fame in the battels with France almost a generation ago. France at that time was unprepared, and was by no means the France against which Germany is directing her exious to-day. If Great Britain, as she seems to have done, is clearing the seas, Germany will have to meet a concentration of land forces that will tax all her resources to overcome eroven hold her own with, especially with the slow-moving but dogged and hard-fighting Russian armies pressing her from the East.

But of the struggle is prolonged beyond expectation: if Canada's services in actual campaigning are needed, they will be ready and will count. The services Canadians rendered in the South African War set a value upon the quality of these services that will be appreciated and justified if the need and opportunity are again presented.

CONTRABAND OF WAR.

"Contraband of war" is something we shall from now on, hear of pretty often. Contraband of war consists of articles such as, according to the law of nations, a belligerent has the right of preventing a neutral ship from delivering to an enemy. But in time of actual warfare the zeal of combatants is likely to put a very liberal interpretation on these laws. There are, however, articles whose character has been very clearly defined. Cotton is one of these, and gold has been placed on the list exempted from lawful seizure except when consigned to a nation involved in war. Articles that are always contraband are munitions of war, guns, powder, and military stores generally. Grain is on the conditional contraband list. When it is consigned to the ports of an enemy it is liable to seizure. According to the rules agreed upon at a London conference grain cannot be seized when consigned to a neutral power. However, in the present hydra-neutral war, a shipload of grain can hardly be shipped from this side of the water, and consigned to any nation, not involved in war. But the people of Canada and of Great Britain and the Empire generally, can be comforted by the assurance given by Lloyd-George in the House of Commons, that adequate protection will be afforded to British mercantile shipping by British warships. With the almost infinite number of cargo-carrying craft sailing the seas under the British flag, this assurance is doubly important. Britain's might upon the sea, can be made to weaken, and to a degree cripple an enemy nation, by not only prohibiting free departure from and access to its seaboard, but by preventing food supplies from reaching its shores, as well as by its great guns.

KITCHENER.

One of Britain's greatest assets is Lord Kitchener. He needs no introduction, needless to say, to the British people. He is as well known an institution of the Empire as St. Paul's Cathedral or the C.P.R.

When Germany fought France in 1870, she had the brilliant and experienced von Moltke with his years. Kitchener, of whom we are apt to think as he was in the Boer war, then just thurned 60., is now a man of 64 winters, every one of them a good one. He is still apparently hale and strong, and riper both as soldier and as administrator than in 1900. He is not wearing out like Napoleon in his later campaigns.

Perhaps, after all, it is not an idle thing to recount once more in summary form the impressive career of Britain's greatest captain. Born in Ireland, he studied at Woolwich Academy, and in 1871 entered the engineers. He was on surveyor's duty in 1870, later held a cavalry command in Egypt, and was governor of Suakim (1886-1888). After 1890, as Sirdar of the Egyptian army, he built the Empire of Britain around the Upper Nile, winning back the Sudan for Egypt and avanging Gordon For this his honours were legion, including a title.

Then came the South African success. As in the Sudan, so here; he showed himself statesman as well as soldier. Appointed commander-in-chief in India, he reorganized the military forces there without any encroachment upon civil power. One feature of Kitchener's work is that he is a good citizen and constitutionalist as well as a good soldier.

After some other high positions and promotions, Lord Kitchener succeded Sir E. Gorst, in 1911, as British agent and consul-general in Egypt. There were misgivings in Radical quarters that he might come into bitter conflict with the Nationalist aspirations in the land of his greatest triumphs. But pessimism has been completely confuted. Kitchener's success in the sphere of civil statesmanship has been no less wonderful than his military feats. To-day he stands upon a great eminence and is the one man to manage the whole British machine in a great war.

As governor of Egypt, the conqueror of the Sudan, interesting himself, like a good engineer, in drains and dams, and though a bachelor, in matters of maternity and infant mortality, Kitchener fills the Egyptians with wonder and awe. His endless energy, quiet enthusiasm for all kinds of hard work, manifold knowledge and experience are an inspiration to the nation's best men. His last annual report tells of a substantial extension of the system of representative institutions, and hints a guardedly progressive policy as regards popular government. Improvement is marked in public health, various interesting and ingenious methods being adopted to educate the people on this head. An original method of protecting small cultivators against money lenders is another achievement. Lord Kitchener seems to be a sound democrat at the core in his expressing "every confidence in the common sense of the people of Egypt."

No wonder the British Government holds this man in London for a critical task. Never was hero more fit and seasoned to deal with a swollen Goliath. He is the Iron Earl (the title conferred only the other day), patient, rigorous, resolute and true, and may yet be the second Iron Duke.—Ottawa Free Press.

A FEW POINTS AS TO THE GERMAN MILITARY BUBBLE

A writer using the pen-name "En Avant" in this month's London Magazine, levels some severe criticisms at what he terms "The German Military Bubble." He admits that on paper the German Army is not only the greatest but the most perfectly organized army in the world but expresses the opinion that when subjected to the test of actual service the vast machine will fail. To the German tactician, he says, the science of warfare is cut and dried. Officers and men know by heart what they ought to do under a hundred different conditions, but it is the unexpected that happens in war time and under conditions which are unexpected they will be almost helpless.

In modern warefare the best soldier is he who can "muddle through" without waiting for instructions. This is precisely what the German soldier has never been allowed to do. He has never been taught to think for himself; on the contrary, his whole training has been designed to eradicate individualism and to reduce soldiers, battalions, regiments and brigades to a state of iron-bound automatism. Seven times in the past ten years "En Avant" has been present at the grand manoeuvres of the German army. He has been much impressed by the vast massing of the troops and the pomp and circumstance of it all, but never has he seen manoeuvres carried out with so little regard to the possibilities of modern fighting: whole brigades of cavalry sweep down upon unbroken infantry in a way which would be impossible in real fighting. "It is magnificent but it is not war."

Again, he has seen splendid opportunities occur during the German manoeuvres for a subordinate officer to achieve a startling success by acting on his own initiative but that would be against the regulations and the opportunity was allowed to pass. And, according to "En Avant," there is a still more insidious foe at work inside the German army. This is the spread of Socialism. The galling discipline to which the soldier has been subjected has led a large proportion of the reservists to accept the Socialistic propaganda and to be little inclined to go and get killed at the bidding at a quasi-aristocratic clique of unsympathetic officers. "En Avant" also considers the German commercial and financial system as unfit to stand thes train of a serious war. He believes that the German Navy, though it contains some fine ships, has failed to manufacture sailors.

When "En Avant's" article was written, even when it was published, no one dreamed that the test of the Germany military machine was so close at hand. Up to the present it would seem that things have gone very much according to the pre-arranged German programme. At four points armies are being driven into France with awful force. On the very first day of hostilities, however, a column of Uhlans lost a fourth of their force at Petit Croix while charging in a solid mass as "En Avant" saw them at manoeuvres. Germany's effort will be to repeat her great success of 1870-71, on the same lines, but on a still greater scale. But while she has been elaborating a scheme which served her well forty odd years ago, the whole science of military strategy has changed and has left her behind in the race. Let us hope that the opinions of the military authorities of other nations will be verified, and that Germany's military power will prove a bubble which will collapse in irretrievable disaster.

Germany Tried To Bribe Great Britain

Offered Belgium to the Island Power if Britain Would Remain Neutral

WANTED FRENCH COLONIES

LONDON, Aug. 7. — One of the most sensational features of the day's developments has been Premier Asquith's exposure in the House of Commons last evening, of what he characterized as the "infamous proposals" made to the British Government by Germany in its desperate efforts to induce Great Britain to take up an attitude of neutrality in regard to the war.

It was announced Wednesday that the Premier would make a statement in the House concerning the negotiations which took place between the British and German Governments preceding the declaration of war, and it was anticipated that he would have some startling revelations to make. The most daring predictions concerning the nature of the revelations fell short, however, of the actual facts and Mr. Asquith's exposure of what is universally regarded as Germany's infamy, caused a tremendous and painful sensation. The Premier stated that the Kaiser's Government went so far as to propose to barter the French colonies and Belgium in return for British neutrality, and his statement that the British Government promptly and indignantly declined to entertain the "infamous proposals," was greeted with round after round of cheering.

There was another stirring scene when the House of Commons was asked to vote a war credit amounting to £100,000,000 sterling $500,000,000). The enormous appropriation was passed almost in the twinkling of an eye, and with complete unanimity, the members rising and cheering vociferously.

The Premier made a brief reference to the appointment of Field Marshal Kitchener as Secretary of War. He said that Earl Kitchener's connection with the Government did not identify him with any political party. In a great public emergency he had responded to a great public call and he would have in the discharge of his most arduous task the complete confidence of all.

In behalf of Lord Kitchener, the Premier asked power to increase the army by not less than half a million men.

"I am encouraged to ask this," he said, "not only by reason of our own sense of the gravity of the circumstances, but, the knowledge that In-

King George and Queen Mary have set an example of frugality to their subjects by ordering that nothing but the simplest fare shall be supplied at their table while the war lasts. At the House of Commons the members only take shilling dinners, while a majority of the motor owners are laying up their cars so as not to uselessly consume petrol.

Over thirty alleged German spies were arrested in the last twelve hours in various parts of the country; in one case two suspected of planning to blow up an important line between London and Chatham dockyard. The anti-German feeling is running high and Germans are now rarely seen in public places.

The Bank of England yesterday reduced its discount rate to six per cent.

The reduction of the bank rate yesterday is regarded here as an official intimation that the financial situation in the British Isles is now well under way.

Business circles are making ready for the reopening of the banks today, when paper currency in small denominations is to be put in circulation.

JOFFRE IN COMMAND.

Widely-Popular French General Heads Nation's Forces.

PARIS, Aug. 7. — France's great army has been placed under the supreme command of Gen. Joseph Joffre, who enjoys great popularity with the men, as he does with the French nation generally. He is known as a man of strong will, and it is a common saying in the army that when Gen. Joffre has once made up his mind nothing will force him to change it. French military men express the fullest confidence in his skill.

Gen. Joffre is 62. He has been married ten years, but is childless. He is of medium height and stout, with a massive head, very fair hair, and thick drooping moustache. He is noted for his excellent horsemanship. He was trained as an engineer, and while on duty in Madagascar constructed the harbor of Diego Suarez, the principal one in the island.

The mobilization plans for the French army were drawn up by Gen. Joffre last April and the results of their execution have exceeded all expectations.

THE OFFER IS ACCEPTED

Ottawa Authorities Receive Message From Great Britain

CABINET PASSES ORDERS

OTTAWA, Aug. 7.—The following official statement was issued last night:

"On his return to Ottawa on Saturday, Aug. 1, the Prime Minister sent a cable message to the Imperial Government, informing them that Canada was prepared to send an expeditionary force for service abroad if required. Last evening a reply was received accepting this offer and the force will be organized at once by voluntary enlistment.

"Several important orders-in-council were passed yesterday. An order-in-council was passed providing for an effective censorship staff at Ottawa and Halifax and the several cable stations on the Atlantic and on the Pacific.

"Another order was passed calling out for active service such portions of the militia as may from time to time be desired by the governor-in-council.

"A further order was passed providing for raising and organizing a force for service abroad and for making and perfecting all necessary arrangements to call them to enlist and be enrolled in His Majesty's service for such period and under such conditions as may be arranged. The enlistment and enrolment will be entirely voluntary. It is understood that the chief difficulty will arise through the enormous number of applications to serve abroad.

"Another order-in-council passed yesterday prohibits the exportation from Canada during the war of arms, munitions, warlike equipment and various other articles which will probably be required for defensive purposes or which might be useful to the enemy."

"There appears to be an impression that, owing to the war, there may be a scarcity of food and fuel supplies in Canada. There is also a fear that prices may be advanced to an unreasonable extent.

"The Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, and the Hon. J. D. Reid acting Minister of Trade and Commerce, met yesterday and appointed officials of each Department to investigate the rumors of enhanced prices in order that the Government may take any action necessary to prevent an undue advantage of this kind being taken. As to supplies of food and fuel, the Ministers say there need be no cause for alarm, in respect to either, as there are ample supplies of these commodities available for use in Canada.

"It is hoped that the press of Canada will remember that the secrecy of military and naval preparations and organization is essential. It is also hoped that care will be exercised to refrain from publishing unfounded and disturbing rumors which would excite unnecessary alarm and apprehension."

His Royal Highness was present at yesterday afternoon's Cabinet meeting, which lasted from four o'clock to nearly seven o'clock.

The board of censors referred to above will include Major F. C. Hamilton, Major E. Chambers, gentleman usher of the Black Rod, and Mr. Fred. Cook, all experienced newspaper men.

The first army division of 20,000 men will call in about two weeks. Whether they go with the Imperial expeditionary force to Belgium or not, they are likely to be held in Britain for a fortnight's training.

The order to enlist men for the contingent was telegraphed at once to the commanding officer of each divisional area. He in turn will notify the commander of each military unit. This legalizes the recruiting whether it had already begun or not. The commanders of the units will send their lists of recruits direct to headquarters at Ottawa, where the selections will be made of officers, non-commissioned officers and men who will form the army division that is to be formed. The recruiting will take only a couple of days. The rolls are expected to be all received at headquarters by the middle of next week. An army division ordinarily includes three brigades of artillery of three batteries each, but it is not known yet whether the artillery of the army division will be of this strength.

JAPAN TO ATTACK TSING TAU

SHANGHAI, Aug. 7.—An official at the Japanese consulate here said yesterday that upon receipt of the first official news of the beginning of the clash of arms between England and Germany, Japan would send a fleet with 10,000 men to attack Tsing-Tau and 10,000 more to relieve the British garrison at Tien-Tsin and Pekin. Preparations for such action were now under way, he said.

Captured Wireless Outfit.

PARIS, Aug. 7. — The Versailles police made a descent on a house near the Aerodrome and arrested the occupants, three Germans, with completed wireless outfit, a large quantity of cipher despatches and documents in German, together with plans of the Aerodromes in the vicinity of Versailles and Easter depots. The men will probably be shot.

S.S. LUSITANIA—LIGHTS BLANKETED, SAILS OUT FROM NEW YORK—Cunard steamer off for England with 200 passengers, including J. J. Cawthra, well-known Canadian financier. French liner expects to follow. The Lusitania is depending upon her speed and upon the British and French cruisers to cross safely.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Aug. 6.—On a sudden flurry, but unaccompanied by any heavy trading, the wheat market today in the December and May options ran up to the highest prices of the year. Before any extensive profit-taking could be accomplished, however, quotations had dropped back, and the market closed weak at 1¾c to 1 9-4c advance over last night. The only basis for the brief stampede appeared to be a report that some wheat had been sold here today to go to Montreal. Corn wound up 1 1-4c to 1 7-8c higher, oats with a gain of ⅜c to ½c and provisions at 27½c to $1.70 advance.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 6.—The wheat market opened 1c to ⅞c lower, oats ⅛c higher, and flax 2c to 6c higher. Trading quiet and in the absence of selling pressure prices advanced over the opening 2⅛c to 2¾c for wheat, and at noon was $1.07, and December $1.05⅛. Liverpool market closed indefinitely. The cash demand continues good for Nos. 1, 2 and 3 northern wheat, but offerings are few, buyers being principally houses with eastern connections.

The weather map shows much cooler temperatures all over the west, averaging around 75, maximum and 45 minimum, but not one single point records rain. Oats and flax made good advances.

Winnipeg wheat opened 1c to 1⅛c lower, and closed 1⅛c to 2¼c higher.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 6.—A very excited feeling has developed in the local market and prices under an active demand from local and country buyers are fairly booming, the advance in oats being 2c to 2 1-2c per bushel, with sales of car lots of No. 2 Canadian western at 50c to 51c and of 100,000 bushels of No. 1, sold c.i.f. bay ports at from 46c to 47 1-2c per bushel. Manitoba barley was also strong and C. P. R. with sales of car lots of No. 4 at 62c and of repected at 60c per bushel ex-store. Beans are very strong, with sales of 20 to 50 bag lots of three-lb pickers at $2.75 per bushel. There is no further change in prices for flour, but the condition of the market is strong under an active demand from local and country buyers and the continued upward tendency of prices for wheat, and in consequence some of the leading millers have withdrawn travelers from the road and are refusing sale of round lots of spring wheat grades, while dealers in winter wheat flour say it is impossible to get any offers from Ontario millers and stocks on spot are about exhausted, with prices for 90 per cent. patents quoted as high as $2.75 per bag.

In rolled oats the feeling is very strong and prices have scored another advance of 15 cents per bag, with a good demand. Mill feed is very firm under an active demand. The demand for butter is good and the undertone to the market is strong, with prices working toward a higher level. There is considerable demand for cheese between houses and a fair trade is doing at strong price. Eggs active and firm.

Officers of Contingent.

OTTAWA, Aug. 7.—Gen. Lessard, head of the Toronto division of the Canadian militia, is spoken of prominently in connection with one of the commands of the Canadian contingent, but there is no official decision yet.

It is certain that Col. Morrison, D.S.O., director of artillery, and Col. Williams, adjutant general, will go, while Col. Fiset, deputy minister, and Col. Gwatkin, chief of staff, will attend to the arrangements in Canada.

Children To Harvest Crops.

PARIS, Aug. 7. — Food remains plentiful in Paris and prices have only very slightly increased since the outbreak of war. Meat and vegetables are the principal commodities affected, as retailers find difficulty in bringing them from the central depots owing to all delivery wagons having been requisitioned for military purposes.

The problem of getting in the harvest has given much cause for thought to the French Ministry of Agriculture, which is considering a scheme for replacing the men who have joined the army by training all children from 10 to 14 years of age in field work, under the guidance of old people.

German Spies To Be Shot.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 7.—Two disguised German officers arrested yesterday at Ostend had in their possession extensive military notes and plans of great value. They are to be shot.

The anti-German feeling throughout Belgium has become intense and many German residents were arrested yesterday and charged with espionage.

Germans Kill Two Youths

Had Warned Gendarmes of Scouts' Approach—Paid Penalty

PARIS, Aug. 6.—Two fifteen-year-old boys were executed by a German swimmishing party near Longwy, according to official advices given out at the War Office.

The two youths had warned a force of gendarmes of the presence of the German scouting party.

The frontier guard drove the Germans back, but they later returned and captured the boys. They were immediately stood up against a wall and shot by a firing squad.

CABLED HIS SYMPATHY

LONDON, Aug. 7.—King George has cabled President Wilson expressing sympathy in the death of Mrs. Wilson.

WAR WITH MODERN WEAPONS.

A warning to the world as to the destructiveness of modern weapons of warfare is furnished by the report of the international commission to investigate the Balkan atrocities. There were about 1,500,000 men in the armies of all the nations engaged in the two Balkan wars, and of these one-third, or about 500,000 men, were killed or wounded, although both wars were included in the space of a single year. This was more than twice the number killed and wounded in the war between Russia and Japan, which also lasted only about a year. And the testimony of the commission is that the wounds of those who survived were largely of a ghastly and horrifying character, entailing upon the sufferers lives of anguish and helplessness, and upon the nations to which they belonged an age-long burden of sympathy and support.

HOUSEHOLD RECIPES

Cold Blueberry Pudding.

This makes an excellent dessert, one that is very easy to make as well as economical, since left over bread can be used for it. To a quart of blueberries and three-quarters of a cupful of sugar and half a cupful of water. Boil them five minutes. Toast four or five slices of bread, then butter them generously. Put them into the bottom of a bowl or baking dish to line the dish. Alternate the bread and berries until all the bread is soaked with berry juice. Then put a plate and weight on top so that the pudding will mould. Serve cold without any sauce, or make a simple sugar syrup thickened with a little cornstarch and flavoured with lemon.

Mint Jelly.

Boil mint to extract, the juice and add to a lemon gelatine. Conreal in a shallow pan and cut into cubes to serve as a mint jelly with a roast of lamb and new peas, or browned potatoes. Mint can be added to rhubarb jelly, making a delicious mint jelly.

MAURETANIA PUT INTO HALIFAX ON ACCOUNT OF DANGER

HALIFAX, Aug. 6.—Capt. Charles of the Cunard liner Mauretania says he did not turn north for Halifax until he believed there was real danger of being captured. For two days the liner kept her wireless silent so that the position might not be discovered by hostile ships.

On Tuesday night the lookout saw two searchlights sweeping the sea. The vessels were not far off, and Captain Charles ordered the wireless operator to call for a British French cruiser. The Essex responded and darkening his ship Captain Charles turned sharply and headed for this port under full steam, with the Essex acting as convoy.

The calls from the Lusitania were heard later, and the British cruiser hastened to warn her.

The Mauretania has 1,400 passengers on board. Passengers said they believed one of the British cruisers off the coast might put into the Halifax harbour to-night.

BIG LINERS ARRIVE.

Cruiser Essex Escorts Mauretania and Cedric Into Halifax.

HALIFAX, N.S., Aug. 7. — The British ship Mauretania arrived in Halifax under escort at 10.30 yesterday morning followed last evening at 7.15 by the Cedric, escorted by the British cruiser Essex.

The Mauretania, while on her way to New York, was warned by the British cruiser Essex last Wednesday night to change her course and steam full speed for Halifax. At that time the Cunarder was 310 miles from New York and 140 miles from Halifax. Somewhere, lurking in the darkness and fog, ready to pounce upon her victims, was a German cruiser.

Twenty-three of the passengers will be held in Halifax, prisoners of war, and were handed over to the proper authorities. These prisoners are of all classes.

The Mauretania's passengers and mails will be landed here.

ITALY STRENGTHENED.

German Reverse at Liege Has Marked Moral Effect.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—The moral effect of the German check at Liege has been immense, particularly so as regards Italy. In view of the report, which is not yet confirmed, that Germany has sent an ultimatum to that power, the Ambassador of Italy here has issued a statement as follows:

"First: The neutrality of Italy in the present war is not merely a matter of self-interest, but is in strict accord with both the letter and the spirit of her obligations under the terms of the Triple Alliance.

"However unpopular a war in which she fought side by side with Germany and Austria might have been in Italy, the Italian Government would have undertaken such a war rather than go back on its plighted word."

McLeod Denies It.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Aug. 7. — Hon. H. F. McLeod, M.P., yesterday morning branded as "absolutely false" and "perjury" evidence of John S. Scott and E. L. Kelley, Fredericton members of the contracting firm of Scott and Kelley, who had sworn that he demanded and they had paid him $1,500 "graft" to get a contract.

"We Had Pledged Our Honour" —ASQUITH

Tremendous Applause Greeted the Premier's Defence of Britain's War Policy

NEUTRALITY WOULD HAVE BEEN INFAMOUS

LONDON, Aug. 6.—In the House of Commons this afternoon Premier Asquith defended Britain's course in joining in the war. In strong language he defended intervention, denouncing German's attempt to bargain with Britain at the expense of France.

"It would have been infamous for Britain to violate her treaty obligations," he declared, amidst a storm of cheers. "We had pledged our honour, and to have refrained from action would be to say we were no longer capable of keeping our word."

The House of Commons was war crazy this afternoon, and the members frantically cheered every Cabinet Minister who defended Britain's action in accepting the German challenge.

Moratorium for Month.

Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd-George announced that the Government had decided to proclaim a general moratorium for a month. Wages, salaries, rates, and taxes, Government payments, and national insurance are not to come within the scope of the moratorium.

Premier Asquith told the House that the White Paper issued by the Government showed how strenuous and unremitting had been the efforts of Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary, to secure for Europe an honourable and lasting peace.

After reading Sir Edward Goschen's despatch saying that Germany had made "a strong bid for British neutrality," the Premier remarked that Germany's suggestion amounted to "the infamous proposal that we should give her a free hand to annex the whole of the extra-European possessions of France."

This Infamous Proposal.

"If Great Britain had accepted, what reply could she have made to the Belgians' appeal? She could only have replied that we had bartered away to the power threatening her our obligations to keep our plighted word. What would have been Great Britain's position if she had assented to this infamous proposal, and what was she to get in return? Nothing but a promise given by a power which at that moment was announcing its intention of violating its own treaty."

Holding up a box of cigars, he shouted: "You can't get better, gentlemen, I don't care where you go, you can't get better!"

"No," came a cynical voice from heb ack of the crowd, "you can't. I smoked one last week, and I'm not better yet."

Havoc Created By European War On The Prices Of Foods

Feverish Situation This Week Broke Into Many Advances and a Few Declines

THE OUTLOOK

PRICE CHANGE SUMMARY.

As a direct result of the European war, the following advances have occurred on the Canadian wholesale market:

Sugar—10 cents per cwt.

Flour—30 cents per bbl.

Rolled oats—20 cents per cwt.

Oatmeal—About 25 cents per cwt.

Rice—50 cents per cwt.

Beans—40 cents per bushel.

Advances have also occurred in canned meats, future prunes, nuts, cream of tartar, and others are possible in Mediterranean food stuffs. English goods generally are up some 20 per cent., and French goods practically doubled.

If safe transportation is guaranteed vessels bound for Canada, products of countries not actually engaged in the war may recede. At time of writing cessation of transportation is having tendency to hold prices on this continent down and to cause prices in the East to be withdrawn or to advance.

Breaking of war clouds over the Continent of Europe has upset entirely calculations in so far as foodstuff prices are concerned. Two weeks ago one could look ahead with some degree of assurance that certain things would happen under certain eventualities; but the general outbreak of war and the roaring of the cannon has completely changed the aspect of things. With Great Britain, Germany, France, Russia, Austria, Servia, Belgium and Holland in the melee, we can see nothing ahead but a general advance in foodstuffs should the conflagration continue any length of time. If the war does not actually interfere with the production of certain foods, the advance in others will cause such a sympathetic feeling that at least a great many of them will also be affected similarly.

Foodstuffs may be divided into two parts for the purpose of analysis here—imports and exports. While it is undoubtedly true that all foodstuffs coming from the Mediterranean will advance to a certain extent, the advance will be measured by the possibilities of getting the stuff to this country and the length of the war. Apart from that altogether, the increase in rate of exchange, the rise in war risks and freight rates will have a tendency to advance prices all along the line. This advance alone equals 8 or 10 per cent. Should, however, the ocean routes be kept continually open, prices of products from countries not actually engaged in the struggle may not go very high, and especially those foods not actually required for the maintenance of life.

Where Advances Are Certain.

But all foods that come to us from within the war zone will go up, the prices being contingent upon the duration of the mammoth disturbances. Among these will be found sugar, beans, nuts, cream of tartar, Bosnia prunes, and French peas. Already sugar has taken the plunge. An advance of 10 cents a hundred went into effect on Monday. The cause of this is the fact that labourers have been withdrawn from the fields in the European sugar beet districts to fight for their respective countries, thus becoming a burden to the nations instead of producers, coupled with the fact that the United Kingdom, which purchases the bulk of her supplies from the Continent, is now competing with us for West India raws, the supply of which, so far as this year's crop is concerned, is gradually drawing to a close. At the same time, inquiry is being made in New York for American refined from Great Britain. In face of all these conditions, it would be difficult to see sugar pursue any other course.

During recent years Canada has been a heavy purchaser of Austrian beans. One does not have to look far afield to see the tendency in the bean market, as we are now placed upon our own resources. As a direct result of this situation beans advanced 40 cents a bushel on Tuesday.

Advances in Canadian Products.

The war has touched some vital spots in the market for home products. The flour market, which has been quite placid up to two weeks ago, went up on Monday 30 cents a barrel, and advancing wheat portends still further ascensions. Oatmeal and rolled oats and other cereals have also been "drawn into the vortex" and gone upwards. Fish has shown signs of advance, and if our routes to the Old Country are made thoroughly safe, we may expect still further rises not only in the above lines, but in provisions. The effect that curtailment of shipping has had on provision markets was rejected in sensational declines in lard and pork on the Chicago market on Monday. But just as soon as the shipping avenues are clear there is every possibility of advances in butter, bacon, eggs and meats.

COMING FROM PITTSBURG

A Party of Thirty Americans to Enjoy a Two Weeks' Vacation at Stoney Lake

Captain Frank Young, of the Stoney Lake Navigation Co., has received word from Mr. R. M. Irwin, secretary of the Sun and Post Publishing Company of Pittsburg, that a party consisting of thirty members of their staff are coming to enjoy a two weeks' vacation at Stoney Lake, and would arrive in Peterborough on the 20th of August.

Our American guests are to be billeted at Viamede, after being chaperoned on the trip over the lakes by the chef of the steamer Stoney Lake, who has orders to put the primest cuts of Western beef and English plum pudding on the bill of fare.

The party are to enjoy this splendid trip to gratify their lure of the Kawartha Lakes at the expense of their company in recognition of their services during the past year.

The lakes are yours, boys, for those two weks.

In Bohemia there has been invented a process to mature beer and make it ready for use in from eight to twelve days, instead of the usual three months.

CONSULS MUST GO

Those of German Birth Cannot Remain in Canada

OTTAWA, Aug. 6.—German consuls, hat is to say, the real German-born class of diplomats, have got to leave Canada.

"If they do not apply for their passports it will be intimated to them that they should leave," stated a high authority to-day. "The declaration of war suspends all official relations."

There are, of course, a large number of consular agents for Germany who are Canadians, and these will not be affected.

The position of Austrian consuls is being inquired into by the Government. Britain's declaration of war being against Germany, the Austrians may not be in exactly the same position as the German consuls, but they are practically so, and probably will be called upon to leave.

At a time when Canada is mobilizing and steps being taken to assist the Empire, the presence of German consuls who could act as spies, is not desired.

RUSSIANS ANGERED BY BERLINERS

Furious at News of What Germans Did They Sacked Embassy in St. Petersburg

LONDON CROWD QUIET

LONDON, Aug. 6.—The German ambassador leaves London to-day.

Among those who called at the embassy to say farewell were Mrs. Asquith. The public, unversed in diplomatic matters, wonder why the Austrian ambassador is still in London.

There is no word of truth in the statement that the windows of the German embassy have been broken. No untoward incident of any kind has occurred. The Germans here, so far as reported, have been treated with the fullest courtesy and astonishing restraint. The Hamburg-American shipping office, next door to the Montreal Star office, remained alfl yesterday with huge plate glass windows unharmed.

A Grand Trunk official said, smilingly, to-day to the Hambourg-American caretaker: "You had better tell your people to take down the gold lettering above the offices telling the world who you are, or we may have to blacken them out for you."

Plate Glass Safe.

A few doors further down Trafalgar Square are large offices of the North German Lloyd. There also the huge plate glass windows were unharmed, though a a precaution all lettering indicating the German character of the office had been removed. The following scene outside foreign shipping offices is typical: A well-groomed, grey-eyed woman with dark hair went up the steps and was refused admittance. Something made the little crowd murmur together that she was French. Turning at the word she paused a moment on the upper step, her young face, well cut, almost haggard. She said quietly, "No, I am an Austrian." There was silence and the policeman saluted as she came down the steps. A path out or respect and sympathy was made for her. She bowed and said, "but this does not happen except in England, thank you."

The Times correspondent of St. Petersburg says the news of the abominable outrage inflicted upon Russian diplomats in Berlin and their wives reached the Russian capital yesterday, and the anti-German feeling of the population broke loose. A huge crowd attacked the German embassy. The mounted police were completely overpowered.

Interior Was Gutted.

The iron gates of the embassy were forced and the interior guted. were forced and the interior gutted. German eagle, was hauled down. Particular antipathy was shown to the German eagle, and one figure was triumphantly carried to the adjacent Moike Canal and thrown into the water. A huge bonfire was made of furniture, hangings, books, paper, linens, etc., which had been thrown out of the windows. A similar fate overtook a huge portrait of the Kaiser. A portrait of the Russian Emperor was carefully removed by the crowd and carried in triumphal procession. The fire brigade extinguished the bonfire and all demonstrations were forbidden as a result of the incident. The windows of the embassy were boarded up.

Paddles invented by a Wisconsin man to aid a swimmer are strapped to the hands and fold inward when the arm is pushed forward to lessen the resistance.

QUALIFICATIONS OF VOLUNTEERS

Must Pass Medical Tests and Have Knowledge of Shooting

MOBILIZE ANYWAY

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 6.—In the extensive recruiting of Canadian volunters which will commence immediately at all points in the Dominion, every man who can pass the medical test and qualifies in shooting will be enlisted. The lists will then be sent to headquarters and selection made for the Canadian army division of 21,000 men, which will be mobilized at Quebec, the selection being made with a view to having every point in Canada represented in the forces. There will be no monopolization of the honour of fighting for the motherland as there was in the case of the Canadian contingents which mobilized for South Africa in 1899, when large bodies of men from certain centres were chosen to the exclusion of willing men from smaller centres.

More Men Go Later.

It is estimated that a far larger number than is required to make up the army division of 21,000 men will be enlisted, but the excess may have an opportunity later on if a second contingent is mobilized.

It is believed 100,000 men can be raised, and in the event of that number being needed, it is believed here that by the time arrangements for transportation, etc., were made Canada would be in a position to equip them.

It is expected that infantry, artillery, and engineering corps, etc., only will be sent on the first contingent, and that no cavalry will go from Canada, this will, of cours, depend upon the decree of the War Office.

Must Protect Troops.

Even should no request for Canadian troops come from Britain, mobilization will go on just the same, and the men will be disposed wherever necessary for home defensive purposes.

It is realised here, of course, that the sending of Canadian troops to the scene of war will entirely depend upon the condition of high seas and the supremacy thereon of the British fleet.

War Will Halt Public Works

Government Must Retrench Though No Orders Given Yet

OTTAWA, Aug. 6. — Capital expenditures all over Canada are to be cut down as the result of the outbreak of the war. Big works to be adversely affected are the harbour improvements at Montreal, Toronto, Quebec, St. John and elsewhere, and possibly the Hudson Bay Railway.

No orders have yet been issued for the cessation of the works, but the staffs have to be cut down.

On the great bulk of ordinary public works throughout the country, such as public buildings, operations are likely to be stopped. Where they have not been started yet, operations will not begin at all.

The exact policy of the Government is not determined, but retrenchment is the word. The financial situation, the money market, and the expense of our contingents all suggest rigid economy.

To give baseball players batting practice a New Jersey man has invented a machine which pitches balls wherever they are wanted and with varying speeds.

Peterborough's Sentiments

The Montreal Star has issued telegramme from the Mayor of the towns throughout the Dominion, who have set forth their sentiments as to the present juncture. The following appeared from Peterborough's Mayor:

Peterborough, Ont., Aug. 4, 1914.

To the Editor of The Montreal Star:

If Great Britain is involved in an European war, Canada's attitude should be one of practical support in every possible way.

WM. BULLER, Mayor.

BELGIANS NOW CONFIDENT OF HOLDING OUT

Recent Successes Have Inspired Them With Their Own Fighting Strength

FRENCH ARE READY

BRUSSELS, Aug. 6.—Telegraphing to King Albert, the Belgian Commander-in-Chief at Liege expressed the belief that he can hold out indefinitely. The German commissary department is already taxed to the limit, and the troops are subsisting on emergency rations.

While the Germans are being held in check, the Belgian engineers are constructing a second line of defence at Namur, whre the fortifications are even stronger than those at Liege.

Machine guns are being mounted outside of the forts where they will command all approaches. Mines are being laid and barbed wire entanglements constructed at strategic points.

It is already considered certain that the German advance will prove far more costly than had ever been dreamed of by the German genral staff.

Th French troops, picked cavalry, infantry, and engineers, are awaiting at agreed points to reinforce the Belgian columns, but up to the present King Albert has not sent them orders to advance. He believes that at present Belgium is master of the situation.

Night Raiders Decimated.

News of a bold night raid by crack Uhlans came through to-day. Several squadrons had circled the Belgian line and attempted a charge at a point which would have enabled them to raid military headquarters.

The Belgian scouts reported the movement, and machine guns were hastily trained on the point from which the Germans must charge. As the mounted troopers came within range they were greeted with a fusilade which decimated the leading battalion. The others fell back, reformed, and charged again.

The Uhlans charging in open order swept down on the Belgian line, but the fire of the defenders was so deadly that men and horses fell dead long before the first outpost could be reached.

At last the German commander signalled a retreat, and the remaining survivors retreated in confusion, leaving many dead and wounded on the field.

News of the victory spread through the Belgian ranks, and aroused the defenders to a state of frenzied enthusiasm.

Germans to Renew Attack.

LIEGE, Aug. 6.—The Uhlans had actuay penetrated the city as far as the Rue Sainte-Foi, where the Belgian headquarters had been establishd when the Belgian soldiers came on the scene.

A renewal of the German attack on the city was expected to-day. The roar of artillery was incessant since before midnight all round Liege.

German shells wrecked and set fire to many houses in the suburb of Bressoux.

Another German Defeat.

The Germans sustained another crushing defeat this afternoon. For the second time in twelve hours a reziment of Uhlans tried to penetrate the Belgian defence. This time the movement was successful. The Uhlans, charging at top speed against the weakest point of the Belgian line, managed to penetrate beyond the forts, which were unable to utilise their guns because of the danger of killing their own men.

Belgian infantry and cavalry cooperated against the Uhlan invaders, and the entire regiment was annihilated. More than half the total strength was killed or wounded, and the remainder taken prisoners.

The Germans are believd to b pre-

The Germans are believed to be preparing for a night assault in force as the cannonading is now continuous and deadly.

German Fleet is Being Driven Towards Dutch Coast

CANNONADING OFF ORKNEYS

LONDON, Aug. 7.—"The British fleet has engaged the German fleet on the high seas. The British warships are reported to be driving the Germans towards the Dutch coast."

This was the information published here early this morning and the fragmentary bulletin is believed to have the sanction of the Admiralty although no details are at hand. The detailed story of the battle may be expected some time to-day unless the pursuit carries the British ships into northern waters. If the British fleet can manoeuvre to a position northward of the enemy and cut him off from the estuary of the Ems the action may prove decisive.

The many persistent circumstantial reports of the naval fight suggest that the rumor has a basis of truth. Incoming fishing boats brought the first cohesive stories of fighting to Lowestoft. The fishermen said they had seen a lively scrap between two destroyers. After that there was a succession of reports from east coast towns that orders had been issued for the preparation of hospitals.

A ship owner at Whitby has announced that he has been informed that a great battle has been fought and 19 German warships have been sunk. The people of Hull, Grimsby and Harwich are convinced of the truth of this reported battle and have been straining their eyes seaward, but have seen nothing. There is great excitement all along the east coast.

A despatch from Kirkwall in the Orkney Islands says:—

"It is persistently reported here today that British torpedo destroyers have sunk two German warships near the Shetland Islands. No details have been received. Heavy continuous firing was proceeding all through the afternoon."

The hospital authorities in Hull yesterday received orders to prepare to receive 250 persons wounded in the North Sea engagement.

Shipping firms throughout the British Isles have been informed that the east coast is now clear from Hull to London. Coastwise services have been resumed and fishing vessels are free to proceed to Iceland.

Behind this bald statement there is much to be inferred. A cordon of British commerce protectors must be stretched across the North Sea from the coast of Holland to the English coast. The Straits of Dover must be held so strongly that no German ships can pass either inward or outward.

The royal family shares with the homes of its many subjects the suspense of waiting for news of the fate of the different units of the fleet. Prince Albert, the second son of the King, aboard the battleship Collingwood, is one of the many boy midshipmen afloat sharing the perils of their elders.

MADRID, Aug. 7. — A despatch from the Canary Islands says a British squadron has sunk one German cruiser, the name of which is not given, and has captured another, which is being convoyed to Gibraltar.

Further advices here are to the effect that up to date more than fifty German steamers have been captured by the British squadron.

MR. CULVERWELL DESERVES CREDIT

The whistling nuisance to which Mr. Culverwell directed the attention of the Council will soon be at an end, a by-law having been passed by the Council to prohibit the same.

Mr. Culverwell should receive credit for pushing this no-whistling by-law through.

He will stay with the fight for the same with the Railway Board of Canada.—Port Hope Guide.

A DANGEROUS PRACTICE

Steamboat Men Complain About Canoeists Tying on to Their Vessels at Night

Frequent complaints have come from the captains of steamers plying on the Otonabee river regarding the dangerous practice prevalent among Canoeists in catching on to the sides of the steamers to be pulled along the stream. This practice is particularly dangerous at night, especially on occasions when a moonlight excursion is in progress. Wednesday night during the military moonlight trip on the river, several young men in a canoe tied on to the stern of the steamer and caused the passengers considerable alarm on account of the dangerous predicament they had placed themselves in. Had the steamer put on full steam, the canoe would have ben capsized and perhaps a drowning resulted. This practice should be discouraged at once, and campers along the river and canoeists generally warned against its continuance.

Washington Confirms German Defeat.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—American diplomatic despatches from Belgium confirm Brussels reports of a heavy German defeat at Liege.

The Germans were caught between two forts. The annihilation of some Belgian troops in a furious charge on overwhelming German forces also was reported.

Proof Right There.

In a certain local store a lusty-lunged auctioneer was holding forth in glowing terms on the virtue of a particular brand of cigars he was endeavouring to induce his audience to purchase.

Holding up a box of cigars, he shouted: "You can't get better, gentlemen. I don't care where you go, you can't get better!"

"No," came a cynical voice from theb ack of the crowd, "you can't. I smoked one last week, and I'm not better yet."

No Sewage Disposal Plant This Season

City and Township Councils Will Be Heard in Toronto Next Tuesday Morning

MEETING TO-NIGHT

On Tuesday morning next, in Toronto, the Provincial Board of Health will hear the arguments of the City Council and the North Monaghan Township Council with reference to the city sewer that is to be constructed through part of that township to the new sewage disposal plant. The question of constructing that portion of the sewer had been a matter of conflict between the two councils for some time passed, and as a result new legislation was passed making it impossible for any township, (under the circumstances which now exist between North Monaghan and the Council), to prevent the building of such a sewer. Since that time, however, the two councils could not agree upon the terms upon which the said sewer was to be built, and they are to-day as far from a mutual understanding as ever. But it is a relief to the City Fathers to know that at last the Provincial Board of Health is to settle the question.

Now that the hearing of both sides of the case is to take place in Toronto on Tuesday, the meeting of the City Councillors with the Township Councillors to-night in the Council Chambers loses some of its importance. For whether or not they reach a mutual understanding, their final appeal to the Board of Health is scheduled for Tuesday next, and even if they reach an agreement the hearing will be held anyway.

The Township submitted a suggested agreement to the Council last Monday night, the first clause of which provided that the City should pay for the construction of the sewers and indemnify the Township and ratepayers for any loss occasioned through the use of their streets. To this provision the City Council unanimously agreed, but the other three providing that the County Judge should rule on the sewer being moved, that Township residents could connect with the sewer, and that the City should pay the whole cost of the application, were rejected for several reasons.

The Examiner was informed this morning that the work which was planned to have been done this spring in connection with the sewage disposal plant will not now be commenced till next spring.

OLD DOCS AND NEW.

Oh, what has become of the old-fashioned doc,
Who carried a satchel containing a stock
Of pills and squills
To cure all our ills—
The old-fashioned party without any frills?
He doctored our pains and our aches and our chills,
And never was quick at collecting his bills.
The old-fashioned doc wore a shiny high hat,
And a Prince Albert coat and white tie, and all that;
And his old one-horse shay
He wore flowing whiskers, or mutton-chops grey
Which offered a place for the microbes to stay;
But the old-fashioned doc worried not about germs—
He and the bacilli were on splendid terms,
The new-fashioned doc, he's a dinger all right:
He's on the job always from morning to night.
His face is shaved clean,
He is suave and serene,
And he dashes about a high-powered machine,
The new-fashioned doc is a business man, too,
He carries no bundle of bills long past due—
He's up to the minute,
There's good money in it,
When a new germ appears, he is promptly agin' it—
He will swat it and stab it and smash it and skin it,
The old-fashioned doc is no more in the land;
The new-fashioned doc gets the calls, understand?

They chose the former course and are to-day steaming out into the Mediterranean with decks cleared for action, to certain capture or defeat, as the British and French fleets are waiting for them.

OUT-SHERLOCKED HOLMES

Two Reporters of Contemporary Sheets Fell For a Fake German Spy—Even Police Authorities

Two scribes of contemporary papers were gazing intently upon an hotel register this morning when a stranger descended from the staircase, and walked timorously to the counter.

Vats der latest in der Cherman vay, isht, he asked.

— vhere's der morning paper. — vat

Here, said the Clerk.

The visitor became engrossed in the "extra" for a few moments, then sidling to the far corner of the counter pulled some plans from his pocket, and made a few notes thereon, while the excited scribes peered over now and again in vain endeavours to catch a glimpse of the document.

I vill return d' presently.—I vill see you again. Yes!

Saying this the visitor rushed from the hotel, sprang into an automobile and was whisked down Hunter street to East City.

In the meantime the scribes separated, one reporting to a local military officer and the other to the Chief of Police.

The latter returned with two detectives in time to see the fugitive cross George street in the automobile.

Look! There he is! See him—see him? ejaculated the scribe. The officers waited upon the street corner.

A few moments afterwards a placard adorned the front of a local newspaper. It read:

Suspected German Spy in the City. Refused admittance at Local Hotels. Police on Guard.

About two hours elapsed and the German Spy re-entered the hotel, reporting that he had done fairly good business with the retail dress goods merchants of the city. He pulled out the "plan"; it was a sketch of the Toronto Exhibition Park.

TRIED TO WRECK TRAIN.

Miscreants Put Explosive on C. N. R. Track—Lines Will Be Patrolled.

TORONTO, Aug. 7.—Grave significance is attached to the news which has just reached Toronto that an attempt was made within the last forty-eight hours to wreck a Canadian Northern Railway train by dynamite.

The attempt occurred at Fielding station, near Parry Sound, on the road to Winnipeg. Dynamite in a sufficient quantity to blow up a train was placed on the track. Fortunately it was removed in time and the danger averted.

Partly as a result of this attempt, and partly by arrangements already made, the C. N. R. lines are to be guarded by armed men in the company's employ. Application has been made to the military authorities here for arms and ammunition, which is to be supplied immediately.

Bridges and all the company's more important buildings will be placed under strong guards as soon as equipment is issued.

It is understood that similar precautions are being taken on all the other lines in Canada. An oath similar to the oath of allegiance is being administered to the guards and only the most trusted employes of each company are being placed on duty.

Reckless.

I understand poor Jack is married at last.

Yes, and it serves him right for proposing to every girl he met.

CLOVES KEEP AWAY ANTS

A Kansas farm wife endeavoured unsuccessfully for many months to rid her pantry of ants—red ants, big ants, black ants, little ants, and ants without any cognomen. She used all the known and unknown remedies, the products of the drug stores, and a host of sure-to-cure concoctions—and the ants seemed to thrive and grow bigger.

Borax and alum, kerosene and cucumber peelings, ginger, red pepper, salt and sulphur followed one after another. She tried hiding the sugar and the other wares of the pantry. Everything was a failure.

One day she dropped some whole cloves on the pantry shelf and forgot to clean them up. Such is the slender thread upon which our greatest inventions hang. Not an ant about her house now. The one cure is cloves, powdered or whole, it seems to make no difference.—Ex.

G.T.R. IMPROVEMENTS

Very fine improvements are being made in the part of the G.T.R. line between Belleville and Lindsay. Several hundred cars of new ballast have been unloaded this season and thousands of new ties are being placed in the track.

The company has placed a new roundmaster, Mr. Yarrow, from Brockville, on this part of the line. Yarrow is said to have been one of the most prominent men that the company could produce for this part of the line.

WHO IS TO BLAME TO AFFECT THE MANUFACTURERS

Retailers Reported To Be Buying Carefully and in Very Small Consignments Owing to Unsettled Financial Conditions

EXPORTING HAS STOPPED

The war, according to the information the Examiner has from to-day, is beginning to hit the manufacturers of the country hard. In the first place, those manufacturers who depend on foreign markets are unable to ship the first instalment of goods, and are therefore suffering severely.

Several concerns that export largely have given out unofficially that if there are many more weeks of closed ports, they will have to suspend operations. Others who depend on domestic markets find that the retailers are buying with the utmost caution, and though the average sales ere fohlat f'in5684 hants starh h of the retail dooines may be maintained, their buying is done very scrupulously and in very small small amounts. This, of course, is also a strain upon the manufacturer.

Local retail business in groceries and dry goods at any rate has not been noticeably affected. But as the citizens are living carefully and buying only small quantities of what they actually need, the sellers of what is sometimes called "staple unnecessaries" find that business is very dull.

A TRUE SAYING.

We have got into the habit of sneering at any book that brands vice with its right name as "goody-goody" or "namby-pamby" or a Sunday school book, and every book that extenuates or justifies licentiousness and killing as artistic and true to life. Yet thousands of years of human experience are concentrated in the epigram, "The way of the transgressor is hard," and society can exist only where vice is condemned, and restrained and driven to dark corners. Which is true to life—vice or virtue? Virtue, a thousand times over, for life becomes impossible where vice is not the very rare exception, rigorously hunted down by the organized agencies of society.

Scouts certain that the fortifications could not stop the German army and the only question was whether it advance could be delayed. The fortifications already had held it for 36 hours, and the fierce struggle the Germans had had and would still have to wage would, it was believed, compel them to pause and revictual.

If the German army succeeded in carrying Liege they would find themselves confronted by an entrenched camp near Namur, at which the Belgians are preparing to make a stand as fierce as that at Liege.

The Belgian army was brilliantly fulfilling its task of delaying the German advance and it appeared certain that the German staff's plan in Belgium would be hindered by the obstinate stand of the Belgians.

MRS. WILSON PASSES.

Wife of United States President Succumbs To Bright's Disease.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7. — With President Wilson and her three daughters at her bedside, Mrs. Ellen Axson Wilson, wife of the President, and "first lady of the land," died at the White House yesterday afternoon at five o'clock.

Death came after a brave struggle of months against Bright's disease with complications.

The President was completely unnerved by the shock, and his grief was heartrending. He bore up well under the strain, however, and devoted himself to his daughters.

The end came while Mrs. Wilson was unconscious. Her illness took a turn for the worse shortly before one o'clock in the afternoon, and from then on she grew gradually weaker.

Everything Lacking.

Personally we have met some men who if weighed in the balance would be found wanting everything, including the balance.—Galveston News.

"Red" Faber The Pitching Find of The Present Year

(By I. E. Sanborn.)

Once more this year Charles A. Comiskey, master of the White Sox, has kept up his record for uncovering a great pitching find and for maintaining a team of "hitless wonders." Ever since they came into Chicago, the White Sox have been famous for their pitchers, and for their light hitting, and in the more than fourteen years since the south side team was established it probably has played more airtight games than any other in the country.

The foregoing remarks are prompted by the recent performances on the slab of Urban Faber, more commonly known as "Red," who has given sufficient promise to justify hailing him as the pitching find of 1914. Unlike most young phenoms, Faber did not burst on the major league horizon in a sudden blaze of glory or in the early springtime. He did not begin to make people sit up and take notice until the season was well along, and the opposing batsmen had trimmed their lamps so that nothing spurious was likely to get by them.

Faber came to the White Sox from the Des Moines club of the Western League by purchased and with a splendid record behind him. Lots of young pitchers have come up with swell records in the bushes only to go back after a trial. Besides his record in the smaller leagues Faber's chief claim to fame was the fact that he made the tour of the world as a member of the New York National League team and pitched before the King of England. At the last moment Manager McGraw found himself so short of pitchers that he had to borrow Faber from Comiskey's array of tourists. On that trip Faber made a decidedly favourable impression on Manager Callahan and he returned with confident but not glowing accounts of what the youngster had done.

During the spring trip Faber did not appear to have as much "stuff" as Hy Jasper, another of the 1914 rokies, but he was not asked to do a great deal of work, because he was in good physical condition from the winter's work he already had done. On account of the great array of pitchers of known quality at Callahan's command Faber did not get much of a chance when the championship season opened. Scott, Cicotee, and Benz were in good trim and Russell was in fair shape so that the newer men were called upon only to finish lost games.

Not until June 1 did Faber pitch his first complete game, and that was a tough luck defeat at the hands of Detroit in thirteen innings. He shut the Tigers out without a run and with only four hits in nine innings, but the Sox could not score one tally for him. In the eleventh the Sox counted only to have Sam Crawford tie the score with a home run and the thirteenth brought Faber's defeat.

In spite of that raw deal from Dame Fortune Faber made no complaint but bided his time and kept his heart. His opportunity came soon and in every game since then he has improved the impression created by his earlier work. Faber has speed and knows how to use it as well as how to conserve it. His speed has the deceptive quality of Walter Johnson's—it is faster than it looks, because of the ease with which he delivers it. His fast ball is turned loose without apparent exertion and is on top of the batsman before he realized it. But with that speed Faber can mix up an excellent curve and an occasional spitball. Moreover, he sat on the Sox bench and listened for so many weeks before getting into the thick of the fight that he learned a lot about the batsmen of the other teams before he faced many of them.

Faber's success already has made many of the fans forget that of Tex Russell, who shot into fame from almost nowhere last spring. Russell's rise was more pyrotechnic because he he came from a much smaller league than Faber's and blossomed out earlier in the spring. The Sox pitching staff of 1913 was not as well equipped as it was this last spring; consequently Russell got his chance before the race had gone far, and he made good from the start.

Chicago owes Russell to Kid Gleason, for the Sox coach was responsible for his retention. When Russell came from Fort Worth he was a very raw recruit without knowledge of how to use his great strength. He had a lot of speed, but scarcely any curve ball, and had succeeded in Texas by sheer strength. He created so little of an impression at first that he was sidetracked to the second team, already marked for the discard. Gleason, however, found out that Russell's greatest failing was the lack of a curve, and as Gleason once was a great pitcher himself, he could tell Russell just how to acquire that curve, and he did. Russell proved an apt pupil and Gleason wrote Callahan not to dispose of Russell under any circumstances until he had been given a trial. And Callahan didn't.

Year before last Joe Benz was added to the Sox pitching staff. He was another green hurler who had all the earmarks and strength, but lacked experience. He could not field his position well and he could not hold the runners on their bases. But those things can be taught by any intelligent human being, and Benz had so large a stock of pitching goods that it was worth while trying to teach him what he did not know. For a time he had tough luck, and his failing seemed to be that when he got in trouble the memory of previous bad breaks in luck worried him so that he forgot much that he really knew about pitching.

The change came this year. Benz started off in hard luck again, but stuck to it until he won a couple of games in which things broke badly for him. Then he wrote his name in the list of no hit pitchers and came back a few days later with a one hit game which ought to have been another no hit affair if Blackburne had been a bit faster.

Before Benz there was a break in the annual production of Sox hurlers. Scot dated back a couple or three years previous to the advent of the Indiana butcher boy, but in those years Ed. Walsh, probably the greatest pitching find of all time, was in his prime, and the White Sox needed only enough hurling talent to help the Big Moose.

Walsh was another product of slow development, slower even than Benz. He came to the Sox in the spring of 1904 with a world of speed and little else. But that was the year the spitball was beginning to be used, and Felder Jones, then manger, saw great possibilities in Walsh's tremendous strength if he could master the spitter. For two years Jones and Sullivan worked with Walsh and kept him practicing that spitter; then they turned him loose in 1906 and you know all the rest.

Cicotte, although he was secured for the Sox from Boston after he had gained major league experience, is really a White Sox product, for he never was a success with the Hub team, yet in 1913 he ranked second to Johnson in effectiveness.

Trials of the Present Day Batting Eye

By Grantland Rice in Collier's.

Those who attempt to compare old-time batsmen with present-day Sons of Swat are working from widely varying angles. The wonder in the present day and time is not that more .300 hitters don't exist, but that any man can attain this average after facing the test of modern pitching.

The Batting Eye of to-day is up against the hardest test ever known to the game. It is no longer a question of meeting speed and two or three varieties of curves. To-day they get all the speed they are looking for from such people as Johnson, Marquard, Wood, etc. Against such pitchers as Nap Rucker, and Eddie Cicotte they get a knuckle ball that breaks at weird angles and is widely different from the old-fashioned curve. Against Russ Ford they get a ball that sails and ducks with a sudden break—so sudden, in fact, that Chief Meyers once told us it was all he could do to catch Ford with a big mitt when he first handled his repertoire.

Then comes Mathewson with the fadeaway, and Tesreau and others with the spitter, both wet and dry, that take peculiar evolutions and break with puzzling dips and drops and urns. There are to-day fifteen or twenty varieties of curves. Many of these are hard to control, the knuckle ball in particular, as the ball when thrown is pressed against the knuckles where the grip is not nearly so firm. The art of pitching has advanced to a wonderful degree through varying methods of holding and throwing the ball where there is no room for any batting advance beyond a true swing and a steady eye.

THE WEATHER

The thermometer yesterday reached 89 degrees in the shade, the second warmest day of the season. The air was dry, however, and the heat was not so oppressive as on some other days when the temperature did not reach 90 degrees.

In an official report just issued by the government regarding weather conditions in Canada, it has this to say about the rainfall:

The rainfall of the month was very short of the average over the larger part of the Dominion, the only regions with an excess being the extreme northern portions of British Columbia and Alberta and southern of Central Manitoba and Eastern Saskatchewan. The most serious deficiency occurred in the so-called dry belt of the Western Provinces where there were scarcely any showers. Other districts which have suffered severely from the drought are the lower portions of British Columbia and Central Ontario. In Ontario the rainfall was everywhere light, and especially so in eastern and northern districts where it was only from one-third to one-half of the average amount. The almost entire absence of the ordinary summer thunderstorms was most noticeable. Crops generally have without doubt suffered from the drought, but farmers generally report that the yield will be fairly satisfactory and in some instances distinctly good.

Change of Diet in Summer

By "Aunt Fanny," Peterboro Co.

Just imagine wearing a dress of some heavy woollen material having long sleeves and high neck some of these hot days when we are busy washing, ironing or baking! It would be anything but comfortable.

It is just as necessary for us to practice a change of diet in summer so that our systems may not be overloaded with heating foods as it is for us to wear lighter clothing. Some farmers' wives tell me that this change of diet is all very well for those living in the city, but men who work hard on the Farm must have plenty of nourishing foods in order to keep up their strength. Quite true, but nourishing foods do not necessarily mean heating foods.

Meat is a heat-furnishing food, yet how often we find it forming the staple dish the year round. While it would not be wise to banish meat entirely from the summer menu, we should plan, however, to have it take the place of an occasional dish rather than the main one.

Beans, cheese, and eggs are all very nourishing foods, and will take the place of meat to a large extent. Though beans for two or three meals may be boiled or baked on wash morning. There are many different ways of preparing cheese dishes for variety. I noticed some good cheese recipes in Farm and Dairy not long ago. Eggs in many homes are not relished as much at this season of the year as earlier. For variety, though, we can make an egg omelette or have deviled eggs. When preparing deviled eggs I cook them quite hard, cut in two, and remove the yolk, mix it with salad dressing, and place in the whites again.

Vegetables, of course, should have a large place in our summer menu, both cooked and raw. Salads, too, are easily made and very palatable and cooling. Some of my favorites are cabbage, beet, lettuce and nut, potato or fruit salad. I sometimes make a fish salad of some kind, usually salmon or sardines. I take two hard-boiled eggs, chop them fine, a few small cucumber pickles, add to the fish, and mix thoroughly with mayonnaise. Fresh fish make a very delicious salad, if when cold they are shredded, mixed with lettuce, tomatoes or cucumbers and mayonnaise dressing.

Cooked desserts are not as digestible in summer as in winter, and we can usually fill this part of the menu with fruit. In the early part of the season bananas and oranges are available, and later on the small fruits, which we often have in our own gardens.

This change of diet question is an important one and worthy of much consideration, as it means the preservation of the health of the family.

IN NATURE'S WILDERNESS.

The attractiveness of spending one's summer holidays in the open is appealing to the large army of summer pleasure seekers more and more every year, and instead of looking for the fashionable resorts where one has to dress for dinner and where gayety reigns supreme, the younger generations are taking to the woods, the lakes and the streams in which they find, in a two or three-weeks' outing that rest and bodily upbuilding that fortifies them for the arduous duties that a strenuous twentieth century business life demands — Algonquin Park is just the out-of-way sort of place for you—log cabin camps in the heart of the wilderness surrounded with unrivalled scenery and in the midst of the best fishing and with the comforts of city homes await you. Hotels with reasonable rates offer good accommodation. Two thousand feet above sea level assures you of cool evenings and the purest of air. Only 200 miles west of Montreal, 170 miles west of Ottawa, and 200 miles north of Toronto. Ask Grand Trunk agents for all information, rates, etc. or A. A. GENERAL EUROPEAN WAR WILL COST 54 MILLION DOLLARS EVERY DAY

COST OF CONFLICT.

What it would cost if seven powers go to war.....$54,000,000 a day
Another estimate by famous French statistician for four European powers.....$8,000,000 a day
Herr Schaffle, former member of the Austrian cabinet, estimates cost to France, Russia, Austria and Germany would be:

France	5,100,000 a day
Russia	5,400,000 a day
Germany	3,000,000 a day
Austria	2,400,000 a day

A daily expenditure of $54,000,000!

That is the estimated cost of armed conflict between France, Russia, Germany and Austria. Were England and the Balkan nations included it would bring the total to a much higher sum.

At the time of the Russo-Japanese conflict there was much discussion of a possible European war, although no one accepted it seriously at that time. M. Jules Roche, the famous French statistician, however, studied the problem carefully and estimated that a war involving the four nations named would cost $40,000,000 the first two months, or $6,000,000 a day each.

Most of the conclusions arrived at by M. Roche were based on figures of expenditures for previous wars. He allowed for the difference in cost, for modern warfare is much more costly even than warfare at the time of the Franco-Prussian war. His calculations may be thus summarized:

In January, 1871, the actual cost per day to the French treasury, according to the Boreau-Lajanadie official report, was 16,000,000 francs (or $3,200,000); this for 600,000 men under arms. The actual cost per day of every man under arms during the entire period of the war was exactly 13 francs, 33 centimes. Into the costs of forage and of keep of horse, which is usually figured at the rate of say one dollar a day for each horse, M. Roche did not go. But even with the figures for the war of 1870-71 before him, and he admitted it was no easy matter to estimate the financial expenditure of a great war that might happen in our time. He continued:

"Conditions generally have considerably changed within the last 30 years, and warfare is now far more expensive. To begin with, the number of men under arms in France, on a declaration of war, would be far greater than in 1870. France then began by putting 600,000 men into the field, but in the next great war in which she may be engaged, her military organization is such that within 48 hours she can mobilise, in round figures, 2,000,000 men and 600,000 horses and mules. The first troops to be called up would be the thirteen 'classes' of active and active reserve troops. Each 'class' numbers 160,000 men, so that the actual number of men to be mobilised at once would be 2,080,000. Against this the Germans can pit 2,580,000 men, the Austrians 1,300,000 men, and Italy 1,200,000."

Considering that if France, Russia, Germany, Austria, and Great Britain went to war there would be somewhere near 10,000,000 men in the armies alone, not to mention the navies of the powers nor the armies of Servia, Roumania, Montenegro, Greece and other small nations either now involved or likely to become involved, it can be seen that M. Roche's estimate in reality is a conservative one as applied to the present situation, since M. Roche did not figure on Great Britain or the Balkan nations.

The estimates of M. Roche are based on an outlay of $3.13 per day for each man in each army. It may be that M. Roche has far underestimated the cost. Dr. Charles Richet, a statistician of the University of Paris, published a very exhaustive calculation at the time of the Balkan War in which $54,000,000 was the estimated daily expenditure. Dr. Richet estimates the expenditures as follow, if Germany, Great Britain, France, Russia, Italy, Austria, and Roumania were all engaged.

Provisioning of troops	$12,500,000
Feeding of horses	1,000,000
Pay	4,250,000
Wages, arsenals and harbours	1,000,000
Mobilisation	2,000,000
Transport of foodstuffs, weapons, etc.	4,000,000
Infantry	4,000,000
Artillery	1,250,000
Ship artillery	300,000
Fitting out of army	4,000,000
Ambulance service	500,000
Movement of ships	500,000
Deficit in taxes	10,000,000
Support for population, without means	6,750,000
Requisitions, damage to towns, bridges, etc.	2,000,000
Total	$54,125,000

On this basis, if a general European war lasted only as long as the brief Franco-Prussian War in 1870, the outlay would exceed five thousand million dollars.

FRENCH RUSH THEIR FORCES

Three Army Corps From Lille Hurry to Aid Belgians at Liege

PARIS, Aug. 7.—With the French advance holding Moyenvic in Lorraine and French troops being pushed into Belgium to reinforce Belgium's fighting army, France to-day assumed the aggressive in the war against Germany. The general staff probably intends to force the fighting, but for obvious reasons, all information is withheld.

All France Inspired.

The news of the German defeat at Liege has inspired all France. Officials believe that Germany will have to settle down to a lengthy siege of the fortifications there and must of necessity wait in its operations through Luxemburg in order that its flank shall not be endangered.

Because of this the French Army despatched from Lille to the aid of the Belgians, has been reinforced.

It is now believed that at least three army corps are rushing to the aid of the Belgians, and will be in the fray at Liege not later than to-morrow.

The Franco-German border is reported quiet to-day.

KAISER MAY BE FORCED ON DEFENSIVE

LONDON, Aug. 7.—Germany is already "paying the price that staggers humanity." British militar experts admit that they are astounded over the terrible slaughter of the Germans attacking Liege. They declare it indicates that the Kaiser's "men of iron" will be unable to penetrate the French frontier, and that he will be on the defensive almost from the outset of the war.

A British naval victory at this time, the high officials here say, would mark the beginning of the end of the war, and one is looked for soon.

Although Lord of the Admiralty Churchill denies that the Government has any official news of any real fighting at sea up to the present time, there is little doubt that the fleet scouts are keeping up their running fighting begun yesterday.

The German warships are now on the eastern side of the North Sea, and Admiral Callaghan is harassing them.

That the Kaiser fears that his forces will be crushed was the construction placed here upon his proclamation to the German people. In it the Emperor attributed the war to jealousy of the powers over Germany's commercial strength, and announced that Germany was ready to "fight the world."

Trades And Labour Notes

By The Official Scribe

President J. J. Hartley called a good showing of delegates to order at the usual fortnightly meeting held this week in the Labour Hall.

Globe Tailoring Co. Fair Concern

In response to a letter raising the question, James Watt, secretary of Local No. 138 of the Tailors' Industrial Union of America, Toronto, made it clear that the Globe Tailoring Co., who are operating a branch in this city, were paying the union scale of wages.

Labour Day Arrangements.

The secretary of the Sports Committee read out the proposed list of sports, which appeared lengthy to the delegates, who thereupon decided that the parade would start from the Central Park at 12.30, instead of 1 p.m. as heretofore. The committee also promised a silver cup, to be won any three times. Prominent men have shown liberally in the line of prize-giving, and he will be a very mild type of athlete who does not succeed in winning a prize on the big day, so numerous are the gifts for the purpose. Mr. R. J. Soden has placed one of his windows at the disposal of the committee, where the prizes will be shown in due course.

A Topic of Interest.

Attention was drawn by Representative Duggan to a paragraph in a Toronto paper announcing the fact that buyers from Armour's had cleaned up the Toronto market with a view to canning the product and selling it probably to Britain at war prices. The warm discussion that followed showed that the labour men want Canada's beef kept for Britain in her hour of need, and demand that an embargo be placed at once on the necessities of life. Representatives Duggan, Robertson, and Palmer were chosen to wait on Mr. Burnham the next day regarding the matter.

One Man—One Job.

The question was raised whether it would be possible to suggest to the many retired farmers working round the city that, in view of the prevailing shortage of jobs and a possible very hard winter ahead, that they be content with what they have and leave a job open for some needy brother who spurns charity and wants work. To dictate to anyone is not the idea advanced, simply a suggestion that may be acted on for a neighbour's good. It is generally felt in the labour world that a retired farmer, not being entirely dependent on a weekly wage, can and does work for less than the ordinary working man is able. In the present crisis is a chance to display a little interest in the cause of humanity.

All Invited to Visit.

The General Labourers' and Hod Carriers' Union are holding an open meeting on Friday, the 14th inst., to which all will be welcomed.

Next meeting of the Council—18th August.

WHY ACTRESSES NEVER GROW OLD

(Montreal's World.)

Nothing encourages the production every more powerfully to the heart of public than the perpetual youth of our feminine members. How often we hear remarks like, 'Why, I never her as Juliet forty years ago and she doesn't look a year older now!' Of course allowance is made for make-up, but when they step up off the stage at close range, they need another explanation.

How actress women generally haven't learned the secret of keeping the skin young! How simple a matter to get an ounce of mercolized wax at the drug store, apply it like cold cream, and in the morning wash it off. In a few days this gradually, imperceptibly, absorbs old cuticle, keeping the complexion new and fresh, free from the blotch, sallowness or over-redness. We know, too, that this mercolized wax in this manner eradicates de's worst spots, freckles, liver spots, pimples and the like. Why don't our actors on the other side of the footlights learn the secret, and profit by it?

THE WEATHER

The thermometer yesterday reached 92 degrees in the shade, the second warmest day of the season. The air was dry, however, and the heat was not so oppressive as on some other days when the temperature did not reach 90 degrees.

In an official report just issued by the government regarding weather conditions in Canada, it has this to say about the rainfall:

The rainfall of the month was very short of the average over the larger part of the Dominion, the only regions with an excess being the extreme northern portions of British Columbia and Alberta and southern of Central Manitoba and Eastern Saskatchewan. The most serious deficiency occurred in the so-called dry belt of the Western Provinces where there were scarcely any showers. Other districts which have suffered severely from the drought are the lower portions of British Columbia and Central Ontario. In Ontario the rainfall was everywhere light, and especially so in eastern and northern districts where it was only from one-third to one-half of the average amount. The almost entire absence of the ordinary summer thunderstorms was most noticeable. Crops generally have without doubt suffered from the drought, but farmers generally report that the yield will be fairly satisfactory and in some instances distinctly good.

VOLUNTEERS RESPOND TO KITCHENER

LONDON, Aug. 7.—The new War Minister's appeal to the young manhood o fthe nation, issued within a few hours of his receiving the seals of office, was not less stirring for its brvity. He says:

"An addition to the Army of 100,000 men is immediately necessary in the present grave national emergency. Lord Kitchener is confident this appeal will be at once responded to by all those who have the safety of the Empire at heart."

All through the day the receiving stations in London have been besieged by volunteers, who have to wait hours before being admitted for inspection.

The period of service is "for three years or until war is over." The ordinary period is seven years with the Colours and five in the Reserve.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Gen. Miss England

Out, ever out into the thickening gloom, across the void and vacancy of the dead world, he flung his lightnings in a wild appeal. His face grew hard and eager.

"Anything? Any answer?" asked Beatrice, laying a hand upon his shoulder—a hand that trembled.

He shook his head in negation. Again he switched the roaring current on; again he hurled out into ether his cry of warning and distress, of hope, of invitation—the last lone call of man to man—of the last New Yorker to any other human being who, by the merest chance, might possibly hear him in the wreck of other cities, other lands. "S.O.S!" crackled the green flame. "S.O.S. S.O.S.!—"

Thus came night, fully, as they waited, as they called and listened; as, together, there in that tiny structure on the roof of the tremendous ruin, they swept the heavens and the earth with their wild call—in vain.

Half an hour passed and still the engineer, grim as death, whirled the chained lightnings out and away.

"Nothing yet?" cried Beatrice at last, unable to keep silence any longer. "Are you quite sure you can't—"

The question was not finished.

For suddenly, far down below them, as though buried in the entrails of the earth, shuddered a stifled, booming roar.

Through every rotten beam and fibre the vast wreck of the building vibrated. Some wall or other, somewhere, crumbled and went crashing down with a long, deep droning thunder that ended in a sliding diminuendo of noise.

"The boiler!" shouted Stern.

Off he flung the head-piece. He leaped up; he seized the girl.

Out of the place he dragged her. She screamed as a huge weight from high aloft on the tower smashed bellowing through the roof, and with a shower of stones ripped its way throfgh the rubbish of the floors below, as easily as a bullet would pierce a newspaper.

The crash sent them recoiling. The whole roof shook and trembled like honey-combed ice in a spring thaw.

Down below, something rumbled, jarred, and came to rest.

Both of them expected nothing but that the entire structure would collapse like a card-house and shatter down its ruins that would be their death.

But though it swayed and quivered, as in the grasp of an earthquake, it held.

Stern circled Beatrice with his arm.

"Courage, now! Steady, now steady!" cried he.

The grinding, the booming of the down-hurled stones and walls died away; the echoes ceased. A wind-wrapped cloud of steam and smoke burst up, fanlike, beyond the edge of the roof. It bellied away, dim in the night, upon the stiff northerly breeze.

"Fire?" ventured the girl.

"No! Nothin to burn. But come, come; let's get out o' this anyhow. There's nothing doing, any more. All through! Too much risk staying up here, now."

Silent and dejected, they made their cautious way over the shaken roof. They walked with the greatest circumspection, to avoid falling through some new hole or freshly opened crevasse.

To Stern, especially, this accident was bitter. After nearly a fortnight's exhausting toil, the miserable chase was maddening.

"Look!" suddenly exclaimed the engineer, pointing. A vast, gaping canyon of blackness opened at their very feet—a yawning gash forty feet long and ten or twelve broad, with roughly jagged edges, leading down into unfathomed depths below.

Stern gazed at it, puzzled a moment, then peered up into the darkness above.

"H-m!" said he. "One of the half-ton hands of the big clock up there has just taken a drop, that's all. One drop too much, I call it. Now if we—in our rooms—had just happened to be underneath? Some excitement, eh?"

They circled the opening and approached the tower wall. Stern picked up the rough ladder, which had been shaken down from its place, and once more set it to the window through which they were to enter.

But even as Beatrice put her foot on the first rung, she started with a cry. Stern felt the grip of her trembling hand on his arm.

"What is it?" exclaimed he.

"Look! Look!"

Immobile with astonishment and fear, she stood pointing out and away, to westward, toward the Hudson.

Stern's eyes followed her hand.

He tried to cry out, but only stammered some broken, unintelligible thing.

There, far away and very small, yet clearly visible in swarms upon the inky-black expanse of waters, a hundred, a thousand little points of light were moving.

CHAPTER XV.
PORTENTS OF WAR.

Stern and Beatrice stood there a few seconds at the foot of the ladder, speechless, utterly at a loss for any words to voice the turmoil of confused thoughts awakened by this inexplicable apparition.

But all at once the girl, with a wordless cry, sank on her knees beside the vast looming bulk of the tower. She covered her face with both hands, and through her fingers the tears of joy began to flow.

"Saved—oh, we're saved!" cried she. "There are people—and they're coming for us!"

Stern glanced down at her, an inscrutable expression on his face, which had grown hard and set and ugly. His lips moved, as though he were saying something to himself; but no sound escaped them.

Then, quite suddenly, he laughed a mirthless laugh. To him vividly flashed back the memory of the flint spear-head and the gnawed leg-bone, cracked open so the marrow could be sucked out, all gashed with savage toothmarks.

A certain creepy sensation began to develop along his spine. He felt a prickling on the nape of his neck, as the hair stirred there. Instinctively he reached for his revolver.

"So then," he sneered at himself, "we're up against it, after all? And all my calculations about the world being swept clean, were so much punk? Well, well, this is interesting! Oh, I see it coming, all right—good and plenty—and soon!"

But the girl interrupted his ugly thoughts as he stood there straining his eyes out into the dark.

"How splendid! How glorious!" cried she. "Only to think that we're going to see people again! Can you imagine it?"

"Hardly."

"Why, what's the matter? You—speak as though you weren't—saved!"

"I didn't mean to. It's—just surprise, I guess."

"Come! Let's signal them with a fire from the tower top. I'll carry wood. Let's hurry down and run and meet them!"

Highly excited, the girl had got to her feet again, and now clutched the engineer's arm in burning eagerness.

"Let's go! Go—at once! This minute!"

But he restrained her.

"You don't really think that would be quite prudent, do you?" asked he. "Not just yet?"

"Why not?"

"Why, can't you see? We—that is, there is no way to tell—"

"But they're coming to save us, can't you see? Somehow, somewhere, they must have caught that signal! And shall we wait, and perhaps let them lose us, after all?"

"Certainly not. But first we—why, we ought to make quite sure, you understand. Sure that they—they're really civilised, you know."

"But they must be, to have read the wireless!"

"Oh, you're counting on that, are you? Well, that's a big assumption. It won't do. No, we've got to go slow in this game. Got to wait. Wait, and see. Easy does it!"

He tried to speak boldly and with nonchalance, but the girl's keen ear detected at least a little of the emotion that was troubling him. She kept a moment's silence, while the quivering lights drew on and on, steadily, slowly, like a host of fireflies on the bosom of the night.

"Why don't you get the telescope, and see?" she asked, at length.

"No use. It isn't a night-glass. Couldn't see a thing."

"But anyhow, those lights mean men, don't they?"

"Naturally. But until we know what kind, we're better off right where we are. I'm willing to welcome the coming guests all right, if he's peaceful. Otherwise, it's powder and ball, hot water, stones and things for him!"

The stared a moment at the engineer, while this new idea took root within her brain.

"You——you don't mean," she faltered at last, "that these may be—savages?"

He started at the word. "What makes you think that?" he parried, striving to spare her all needless alarm.

She pondered a moment, while the fire-dots, like a shoal of swimming stars, drew slowly nearer, nearer the Manhattan shore.

"Tell me, are they savages?"

"How do I know?"

"It's easy enough to see you've got an opinion about it. You think they're savages, don't you?"

"I think it's very possible."

"And if so—what then?"

"What then? Why, in case they aren't mighty nice and kind, there'll be a hot time in the old town, that's all. And somebody'll get hurt. It won't be us!"

Beatrice asked no more questions, for a minute or two, but the engineer felt her fingers tighten on his arm.

"I'm with you, till the end!" she whispered.

Another pregnant silence, while the nightwind stirred her hair and wafted the warm feminine perfume of her to his nostrils. Stern took a long, deep breath. A sort of dizziness crept over him, as from a glass of wine on an empty stomach. The Call of Woman strove to master him, but he repelled it. And, watching the creeping lights, he spoke; spoke to himself as much as to the girl; spoke, lest he think too much.

DIARRHOEA and VOMITING

ATTACKED HER LITTLE BOY,
He was Cured by Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry

Mrs. Wesley Pringle, Robbin, Ont., writes: "It is with great pleasure I can recommend Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. When our little boy was 3 years old he had the worst attack of diarrhoea and vomiting I ever saw. We called in our doctor, and he came eleven times from Tuesday morning until Saturday night, but still no change. We expected each moment to be the last of his suffering, as the doctor said he could do nothing more. Mr. Pringle was going up town Saturday night and was advised to try your great and wonderful medicine. He got a bottle, and about 9 o'clock the first dose was given, and was kept up as directed, and when the doctor came on Saturday he said, 'what a wonderful change. Why, your little boy is going to get better!' Then we told him what we had given him. He said, 'keep right on, he is doing well.' I often think, as I look at my boy, growing to be a man, what great thanks I owe to Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry."

It has been on the market for 67 years, so you do not experiment when you buy it.

Elkhart, Ind.:—"I suffered for fourteen years from organic inflammation, female weakness, pain and irregularities. The pains in my sides were increased by walking or standing on my feet and I had such awful bearing down feelings, was depressed in spirits and became thin and pale with dull, heavy eyes. I had six doctors from whom I received only temporary relief. I decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial and also the Sanative Wash. I have now used the medicine for four months and cannot express my thanks for what they have done for me.

A Fashion Garrick Killed.

Women of England in the eighteenth century wore large hats. Samuel Rogers once traveled to Ranelagh in the same coach with a woman who was compelled to sit on a stool on the floor of the coach on account of the inconvenient height of her headdress. Hannah More, who was all for simplicity in costume, writes in her diary that she has seen women wearing on their heads "an acre and a half of shrubbery, besides slopes, grass plats, tulip beds, clumps of peonies, kitchen gardens and greenhouses." The credit of killing this fashion is given to Garrick. He appeared one night on the stage with a mass of vegetables on his head and a carrot suspended from each side, to the shame and confusion of many fair members of his audience.

NEW ELECTRICITY.

And the Terms Energy, Pressure, Intensity and Quantity.

What is electricity?

The question was put directly to Dr. Charles Proteus Steinmetz, the famous expert, in the hope that he—than whom no one knows more about it—might be able if not to tell what it is at least to give a definite idea of what it may be. Dr. Steinmetz replied:

"Electricity is a loose term, used miscellaneously in referring to all matters electrical.

"To give it definite meaning one must know whether reference is made to electrical energy, electrical pressure, electrical intensity or electrical quantity.

"Electrical quantity (represented in the electrical current) is generally assumed by scientists to be a substance with atomical structure, the unit of which is the electron.

"Electrical pressure is meant in referring to the voltage. Electrical intensity is the voltage per unit length.

"Magnetism is a similar term, which does not mean anything to the scientist. Two pieces of steel may have exactly the same structure as far as science can determine, and yet one may contain magnetic quantity and the other be without it, or the two may contain the same amount of magnetic quantity and have different magnetic intensity. Quantity times intensity equals energy.

"There may be the same quantity of water in two pipes and different pressure, or there may be the same pressure and different quantity. If water, the liquid, water pressure and water power were all loosely called water we should have the same confusion that the words electricity and magnetism suggest to the scientist."

"Is there such a thing as electricity?" he was asked.

"I cannot state positively that electrical quantity is a substance," Dr. Steinmetz replied, "or that there is such an atom as the electron. I say simply that this is the most commonly accepted theory."

"Fruit-a-tives" Keeps Young And Old in Splendid Health

J. W. HAMMOND Esq.

SCOTLAND, ONT., Aug. 25th, 1913

"Fruit-a-tives" are the only pill manufactured, to my way of thinking. They work completely, no griping whatever, and one is plenty for any ordinary person at a dose. My wife was a martyr to Constipation. We tried everything on the calendar without satisfaction, and spent large sums of money until we happened on "Fruit-a-tives". I cannot say too much in their favor.

We have used them in the family for about two years and we would not use anything else as long as we can get "Fruit-a-tives".

Their action is mild, and no distress at all. I have recommended them to many other people, and our whole family uses them".

POE AND "THE RAVEN."

His Comment on the Tinkling Footfalls and the Bird's Shadow.

In a letter written on Dec. 15, 1846, to G. W. Eveleth of Phillips, Me., Edgar Allan Poe, in commenting on his famous poem, "The Raven," said:

"For the purpose of poetry it is quite sufficient that a thing is possible, or at least that the improbability be not offensively glaring. It is true that in several ways, as you say, the lamp might have thrown the bird's shadow on the floor. My conception was that of the bracket candelabrum affixed against the walls, high up above the door and bust, as is often seen in the English palaces and even in some of the better houses in New York.

"Your objection to the tinkling of the footfalls is far more pointed and in the course of composition occurred so forcibly to myself that I hesitated to use the term. I finally used it, because I saw that it had, in its first conception, been suggested to my mind by the sense of the supernatural with which it was at the moment filled. No human or physical foot could tinkle on a soft carpet—therefore the tinkling of feet would vividly convey the supernatural impression.

"Your appreciation of 'The Sleeper' delights me. In higher qualities of poetry it is better than 'The Raven,' but there is not one man in a million who could be brought to agree with me in this opinion. 'The Raven,' of course, is far the better as a work of art—but in the true basis of all art 'The Sleeper' is the superior. I wrote the latter when quite a boy."

The Book of the Dead.

The ancient Egyptian "The Book of the Dead" is probably unique among books, inasmuch that it was intended for use not in this world, but in the next. It consists of a collection of prayers and exorcisms composed of various periods for recitation by the soul during its passage through hades and was indeed regarded as a safe conduct through that region. For this reason the Egyptians, who themselves entitled it Per-em-hru, "to go forth from day," buried a copy of the work, or portions of it, with their dead.—Westminster Gazette.

Test For Silk.

If silk splits or cracks it is a sign that its fabric has been weighted. There is a simple and a sure test by which the quality of the material may be determined. A bit of the silk and a match are all you need. Light the match and apply it to the fabric. If it holds its shape the silk is adulterated with some of the various minerals so used. If it runs together in a puffy mass the silk is pure.

A GOLD STAMPEDE.

Exciting Life In the Still Adventurous Klondike.

One of the few places where it is still possible to have adventures is the Klondike. It is not the riotous Klondike of '98, but there is still much gold there, and wherever you find gold there are adventures to be had. Every now and then a prospector wandering about the country discovers gold in a fresh place. After staking out his claim, he goes into Dawson to report it to the authorities. Quickly the news leaks out that gold has been discovered in new country, and at once there is a stampede to the place.

Hurriedly men get together a few dogs, harness them to a sledge, and rush over the snow-covered mountains. Each man tries to get to the new gold country first, and each man thinks that at least he is going to make his fortune.

Percy Dent, author of Klondike Yarns, gives an interesting account of one of these rushes. "For the past seven years," he said, "I have been knocking around Alaska and the Klondike gold fields, and many a gold stampede I have taken part in. My last was to a new strike at the head of the Sixty Mile river. With two dogs and a sled load of blankets and provisions, I hit the trail.

"Dawn saw a struggling line of men laboring up the Sixty-Mile. There were representatives from all the civilized nations of the world—the scum of Europe, as the dapper, fireside civilization would term them. Grim and determined, they struggled through the desolate wastes of snow, straining at gee-pole, cursing the pull-rope, which cut into both neck and armpits, and prodding their dogs unmercifully. The men's eyes were glassy; their beards and moustaches one mass of congealed breath.

"When a dog, unable to stand longer the awful strain of the race, gave in from sheer exhaustion, the poor brute was cut loose and thrust brutally aside, to find its way back or starve. All higher instincts are subservient to self-interest in a gold rush.

"I saw the figure of a miserable wretch standing knee-deep in an overflow of slush, in which his sleigh and whining dogs were anchored. Another grizzly giant sat astride the quivering carcass of a dog just brained for insubordination. No one interposed; the mob of breathless, gasping curs and men crunched by unheeding.

"Ah no dogs are wonderful. They live almost entirely on rice and they will go on pulling to the last gasp.

"When you come to the new country there is a feverish search for gold. Men rush about looking for traces of it and when they have decided on a claim they stake it out and hurry back to Dawson to report. It's an exciting life. At any moment you may hit on a fortune—or so, at least, we persuade ourselves.

"And even if you're not digging for gold on your own account you can do pretty well. You are paid $5 a day and everything is found except clothes. There is no reason why you shouldn't save $25 a week, but somehow no one does."

No Place For Ladies.

A famous foreign newspaper correspondent, a German, was stopping at a seaside hotel where the dining room helpers, following the New England custom, were nearly all college girls, working during vacation in order to keep themselves at school the rest of the year.

The spectacled young person who presided over the table where the German newspaper man ate was undoubtedly of excellent breeding, but she never seemed to remember whether the eggs were to be fried on one side or scrambled on both.

Finally, one evening after he had been served with a meal entirely different from the one he had ordered, the foreigner lost his temper and spoke rather sharply to the young woman.

"Easy there!" admonished his table mate, an American writer. "She's a lady, you know, old man."

"But I do not vant a lady," said the German plaintively. "I vant a waiter!"—Saturday Evening Post.

Neuralgia of the heart

This Letter Tells of Wonderful Change Effected by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Mr. James G. Clark, Fosterville, York County, N.B., writes:—"I have been a great sufferer from what the doctors said was neuralgia of the heart. The pain started in the back of the neck and worked down into the region of the heart. Though I had taken a lot of medicine of one kind and another, I could not get anything to help me until I used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

"When I began this treatment I could not rest in bed, except by sitting upright, on account of the dreadful pains about the heart and the quick, loud beating. The change which Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has made in my condition is wonderful. It has entirely overcome these symptoms, and is making me strong and well. If this statement will help to relieve the suffering of others, you are at liberty to use it."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a true tonic and the greatest of nerve restoratives, 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50; all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited Toronto.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Bread will cut thinner and in more even slices if you turn the loaf upside down.

Eucalyptus oil will remove grease, including machine oil, from any fabric without injury.

Every kitchen should have among its supplies a saw for trimming meat and some larding needles.

To remove old varnish from furniture take three tablespoonfuls of baking soda and put it in a quart of water and apply it with a rough cloth.

For cleaning a copper kettle the following is excelent: First rub the surface with lemon skin and salt; when this is finished wipe the surface quickly, and rub dry with a chamois skin.

If a spoonful of lime is kept in the pantry where the jellies and preserves are stored, it will prevent them from moulding.

WORTH REMEMBERING

One gallon of ice cream, if served on plates, will serve 24; if in sherbet glasses, 30 at least.

Two quarts of soup will serve from six to eight persons.

One medium-sized loaf of bread will make 20 three-cornered sandwiches or 10 large squares.

A nail, if it has first been stuck in a cake of soap, may be easily driven into hard wood. The same treatment applies also to a screw.

When breast meat is tender, chicken is sufficiently cooked.

A simple dessert is boiled rice and stewed figs or prunes served together, with cream.

When the Liver Gets Torpid

There is Nothing Like Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to Set it Right.

Mrs. C. L. Cook, 248 Tenth street, Brandon, Man., writes:—"I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for the last four years for liver trouble, and can say that I have had great satisfaction and help from them. I find that I do not need any doctor if I use them when the liver gets torpid, and believe that they are exactly suited for my case. My husband has used them for kidney trouble with good results, and my daughter in Winnipeg has been helped a great deal by the use of these pills. We say we can't keep house without them, and have cheated the doctors here out of a good many visits. I think Dr. Chase's medicines are just the thing, and have recommended them to many people who have used them with good results."

By keeping the liver active and the bowels regular Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills prevent and cure such disorders as biliousness, constipation, chronic indigestion and headache. One pill a dose, 25c a box, 5 for $1.00; all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

London's Beauty Writers

Weekly Selections from Noted Beauty Experts Writing for the English Press. Simple and Effective Methods.

By OLGA ARMELL, Special Correspondent, London, Eng.

Each week in this department I will endeavor, by careful clipping from the London papers, to keep my Colonial readers informed on the latest and best advice of the London beauty experts. Owing to the persistent demand most London newspapers and periodicals are now devoting much space to the serious consideration of beauty culture. Many of them now employ high salaried experts to advise and instruct in methods most efficient for enhancing or restoring beauty of face and figure. I append herewith a few clippings from leading English publications. Any of the ingredients mentioned could be obtained from Canadian chemists or druggists, so I am told. Look out for more hints next week. I shall endeavor to keep right up to date.

A STRANGE SHAMPOO.

A young woman envied for her beautiful glossy hair declared she never washed it with soap or artificial shampoo powders. Instead she washes her own shampoo by dissolving a teaspoonful of stallax granules in a cup of hot water. "I make my chemist get the stallax for me," said she. "It comes only in sealed packages, enough to make up twenty or thirty individual shampoos, and it smells so good I could almost eat it." Certainly this little lady's hair did look wonderful even if she has strange ideas of a shampoo.

Wonderful Growth of Hair.

Long ago I made a resolution to try and conceal a real hair grower. My own formula, now perfected after endless experimenting, has had the effect of giving me a wealth of hair that is surprising. Obtain from your druggist an original package of borianum, and mix with this 1-4 pint of bay rum. Rub this into the scalp night and morning with the finger tips. It acts the hair-roots tingling with new life.

SECRET OF BEAUTY DOCTORS.

It now transpires that the mysterious white paste used so successfully by many beauty specialists for ridding the skin of objectionable hairy growths is nothing more than powdered phenlinol, which can be found in any drug store. With phenlinol and water make enough paste to cover hairy surface; apply, and in two or three minutes rub off, wash the skin, and it will be free from hair or blemish.

To Lengthen Eyelashes.

Eyelashes will be greatly beautified if mercolline be applied at bedtime with thumb and forefinger. A few such treatments make them grow long, silky and curly. Thin, straggly eyebrows will grow thick and lustrous by merely rubbing mercoline on, but be careful, and don't get any where no hair is wanted.

No Powder Necessary.

Yes, powder has ruined more complexions than it has aided, and while you use it you can hope for nothing better than an imitation of a real complexion. Take my advice, get from your druggist some ordinary clemiate and dissolve in a little water; then you will have an ideal yet inexpensive lotion, which seems a part of the skin. The result lasts all day long, even under the most trying conditions. To prepare the face and neck for an evening in a hot ballroom there is nothing to equal this simple and harmless lotion.

Goodbye to Curling Irons!

Don't burn the life out of your hair with that instrument of torture, the curling iron. You can keep your hair beautifully wavy and curly by using a perfectly harmless liquid known to the drug trade as "ellmercine." You need only apply a little with a clean tooth brush before retiring and in the morning you will be most agreeably surprised with the effect. And this effect lasts for a week or two, depending upon the weather, so a small bottle lasts a long time and is quite economical to use. Pure ellmercine is really beneficial to the hair and it leaves no greasiness, stickiness or streaks.

1000 PILRETA COMPLEXION SOAP THE GREAT ENGLISH COMPLEXION CLEANSER. ALL DRUGGISTS—Adv.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. REEDER

HAY FEVER—A condition that travels under many names, such as Rose Cold, Hay Asthma, Summer Cold, Coryz, etc. It is one of the most aggravating and really distressing of all the ailments that seldom confines one to the house or bed. The attacks are peculiar and unlike any other ailment. I knew one sufferer whose attacks began always at 2 p.m. August 20 and lasted three weeks to an hour. Another, a banker, whose attacks began July 27 and lasted until he could get into the woods a few hundred miles north of his home. Another case was liable to attack at any time, but it always occurred in his own house and by simply going across the street he found relief.

Nearly all of the doctors as well as laymen, who have never been afflicted will laugh at "such foolishness," but when they once have an attack they find it is more of a crying matter. Profuse salty tears run from the eyes, nose and mouth. In some cases this saline flow is so strong and acrid that severe and annoying sores are formed on the nose and lips, while the eyes become red and swollen. There are cases also where the flow is so great that it extends to other openings and both the rectum and urinary openings show irritating blisters. In other cases an asthmatic condition developes that is indeed distressing.

While the dust of summer and the pollen from flowers may aggravate and irritate the deheate mucous lining of the nostrils and increase the sneezing, these things do not cause Hay Fever. The cause is in the patient and can be found and removed. In some cases, not many, a mechanical obstruction in the nose may be the predisposing cause. I have known of cases that were apparently cured by a simple operation but in 75 per cent. of all cases that have come under my personal observation I have found the sufferer to be an excessive user of salt with his food and most, if not all of them, suffered to some extent with constipation. The bowels moved daily it is true and they thought they were entirely free from constipation, while as a matter of fact each movement was from one to three days overdue.

Many years ago Schuessler advanced the claim that highly attenuated doses of salt would immediately relieve the acute attacks of Hay Fever. He claimed that the salt of commerce was too coarse and was not taken up or assimilated, but passed through the body rapidly and so there was a constant craving for salt on the part of such persons.

By the administratton of highly attenuated doses of salt in a suitable medicum the necessary element was supplied and the disorder cured. I have proved this theory to be correct, and in many cases the frequent giving of small doses of what we call Natrum Muriaticum, six X, which is in the sixth triturution of chloride of sodium or common salt, put up in sugar or milk tablets, the distressing flow of salty water from the eyes, nose, mouth, etc., will nearly always cease in a few hours.

The cold or fever sores disappear and the Hay Fever is cured. In some cases it is necessary to repeat a few doses each morning and follow it up with Kali. Mur. in order to heal the mucous surface of the respiratory organs. It's a wonderful relief that is thus obtained from so simple and natural a remedy.

I will be glad to make further suggestions to any sufferer from Hay Fever with other complications. Don't be afraid to write the Home Health Club about your ailments, that's what this department is for—to help the readers of this paper.

A JAPANESE GARDEN

Many of us have looked longingly at the tiny Japanese gardens temptingly spread forth in the florists' windows. But their price seems prohibitory for such a plaything — to some of us. And we stifle our longing for one of the gardens with firmness and a cheerful assurance that they are but baubles, after all.

But one of these little gardens can be assembled at very little cost—if you buy its component parts at a Japanese shop and put them together yourself.

The foundation must be a suitable dish. One of the real Japanese dishes is daintiest— a square dish, perhaps ten inches square, with upturning sides, tinted green or grey or oyster. But a dish that you happen to have on hand may do instead of the new one —if it is attractive. A small white platter, with flat bottom, will do.

Then buy the component parts of the garden.

First there must be a little mound of moss. This can be procured in the woods—if there is a woods; or you can buy it at the Japanese shop. Then there must be some pebbles, from the seashore, or from the Japanese shop. And then there must be a piece of a vegetable that sprouts quickly and attractively, sending up little shoots that are suggestive of graceful trees. This is cut in pieces, which are sold for ten cents each. Ordinary garden grass seed or a spoonful of canary bird seed of the mixed variety can be sowed in the little mossy mound, or if you happen to have it, in a piece of coral.

Lay out a little landscape, with a mossy hill in the distance, an island or two of the Japanese root, a pebbly beach—better still, a beach of tiny shells, if you have them, and two or three little islands of pebbles and stones. Perhaps one big stone can serve as a rocky cliff. After these parts of the landscape are arranged, pour into the dish about a quarter of an inch of water. It is better not to attempt any sandy beaches, as the sand is almost sure to run into the ocean and produce a mud puddle.

Now buy the furnishings of your landscape. There are bits of fences made of twigs, with birdhouses perched aloft one of the fence spikes. There are little Japanese cottages made of clay, with doors and windows and little lanterns—all made of clay—and brilliantly in a row under the eaves. There are tiny iron bridges and various little stone garden ornaments for the same price—miniatures of the regular stone ornaments we see in Japanese gardens. There are small stone gateways and equally attractive iron gateways and there are little pagodas, too.

Connect the islands with bridges, and place the big cottage where there is the most room. Put an archway in a good position, and put the little stone pillars and other ornaments where they show to the best advantage. Then either use tiny sprigs from evergreen trees for trees or else buy the little artificial trees, of characteristic Japanese shape. In the best little gardens the dwarf evergreens and cacti are used, but these are expensive and not necessary for a good effect.

Buy a transparent red glass fish and a green one for the water, and a long-legged crane for the bank. And a couple of tiny deer for your woods or copse will add to the attractiveness of the place.

Now come the people, and they are fascinating. A little Japanese woman, hardly more than an inch high, with a bundle of faggots on her back—a little man standing in a wide-brimmed hat with a fishing-rod held straight before him—a squatting fisherman—a man with faggot-laden back—all these tiny figures moulded in clay and charmingly coloured are only a few cents apiece. And they have real little smiles or frowns on their faces, and real expression in their little clay bodies.

At the flower show in New York city last winter one of the exhibits that attracted much attention was a Japanese garden that measured ten or twelve feet square. It was made up of many little farms and hills, valleys, streams and rivers, all fitted up with tiny Japanese furnishings, like those described. Any one who saw it must have been charmed by it. But even that wonderful garden, in miniature, representing Japan, could not give more pleasure than a little garden which you can make yourself at a cost of two or three dollars.

CAMERA BRINGS WOMAN MONEY.

The artistic woman who wants to earn pocket money during the summer without interfering with her summer vacation may combine both business and pleasure while doing so, says a contemporary. A camera of fair size is all that she needs. If she has the eye of the artist, taking beautiful natural pictures, which are to be tinted by her afterward, is a simple matter. It is a faculty that grows with use. Great success has been achieved by a clever woman in a fashionable hotel. She not only takes special poses of the guests and tints them afterward, but she will photograph their pet dogs and cats, and the little haunts they love, showing both good sense and adaptability in pleasing them. Needless to say, she returns to the city with a well-filled pocket to resume the art course she has mapped out for herself.

The Royal Visit.

During the recent visit of the King and Queen of Denmark to the Court of St. James, the outstanding feature was the Royal Banquet at Buckingham Palace, and at this most interesting function the two features that impressed the visitors and those privileged to be present were the wonderful gold plate comprising not only the domestic service of Buckingham Palace, but also the magnificent and historic plate of Windsor Castle.

Next to this was the magnificent lace worn by persons of high rank, and it is interesting to note that in point of value the Gold Service sinks into insignificance. It is commonly said "Worth its weight in gold," but let us not forget that Queen Mary is possessed of lace that is worth forty-seven times its weight in solid gold sovereigns, and to note that at the time of Queen Elizabeth this priceless lace was sold for but a few shillings a yard.

During recent years the manufacture of lace has taken a new lease of life and foremost among the British lace makers are those of Buckinghamshire, which for seven centuries has been noted for this product.

Opportunity to secure the genuine Buckinghamshire hand-made lace is afforded by the Buckingham Cottage Workers Association and any lady interested may obtain an interesting history of the Buckingham Lace together with descriptions and prices of the articles made by these cottage workers, by applying to Mrs. Bute Armstrong, Olney, Bucks, England.

HOW TO PREPARE BLACKBERRIES

First in the list of ways to use blackberries should come the rule for canning blackberries that is to be found in the bulletin issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, entitled "Canned Fruits, Preserves and Jellies." This rule calls for twelve quarts of blackberries and two quarts of granulated sugar. To quote the bulletin:

"Put two quarts of fruit in the preserving kettle; heat slowly on the stove; crush with a wooden vegetable masher; spread a square of cheesecloth over a bowl and turn the crushed berries and juice into it. Press out the juice, and then turn into the preserving kettle. Add the sugar and put on the stove; stir until the sugar is dissolved. When the syrup begins to boil, and the remaining ten quarts of berries. Let them heat slowly. Boil ten minutes, counting from the time they begin to bubble. Skim well while boiling. Can in the usual manner."

Seedless Blackberry Jam.

To make blackberry jam without seeds crush the blackberries and press them through a moderately coarse sieve. Measure the pulp and juice and measure out as many cupfuls of sugar as you have blackberry mixture. Put the sugar and the blackberry juice and pulp in a kettle and cook till it reaches the consistency of jam. Then can in the usual way.

A Blackberry Dessert.

Heat a quart of blackberries without water till they are well cooked. This should be done in a double boiler to begin with and slowly. Take from the fire and add one heaping teaspoonful of flour and two tablespoonfuls of sugar sifte together. Let the mixture stew until it thickens, pour into moulds, and chill. Serve with cream and sugar.

Dried Blackberries.

Our grandmothers knew the trick of drying blackberries, and there is no reason why the present-day housewife should not revive this method of storing away some of the summer's goodness for the dark days of winter. The berries should be carefully looked over and dried in the sun. That is all. They should be kept in a cool, dry place until needed, and are excellent to use at any time as the foundation for blackberry pie.

CHOICE RECIPES

Sirloin Steak with Bananas.

Trim and wipe the steak, arrange in the broiler and broil over a clear fire, seasoning with salt and pepper when half done. Transfer to a hot platter, spread ith a tablespoonful of butter, and sprinkle with one tablespoonful of freshly grated horseradish. Lay over all the bananas prepared as follows:

Take three large bananas, remove the skins and split lenuthwise. Drop a large spoonful of butter in a hot frying pan and when smoking lay in the pieces of banana. Brown quickly on both sides and drain for a moment on paper.

Cold Boiled Brisket.

Buy a piece of fresh brisket and put in a marinade of one-half cup of vinegar, one-eighth cup of olive oil, one sliced onion, two sprigs of parsley, a bit of bay leaf, six or eight peppercorns (whole pepper), and one pint of water. Let stand over night, and in the morning put on to cook in this same liquid, to which is added more water. Boil until tender, remove meat, place under a weight, and allow to become cold. Slice. Serve with a vinaigrette sauce: To one-half cup of olive oil add two tablespoons vinegar, one-half teaspoon salt, one-quarter teaspoon paprika, one-eighth teaspoon of pepper, and two tablespoons each of chopped onion, parsley, capers, pickles, and red pepper.

Butterscotch Pie.

One cup sour cream, one tablespoon butter, one tablespoon flour, yolks of two eggs, one cup of brown sugar, one teaspoon vanilla, a few grains of salt.

Add flour to sugar. Add sugar and flour to slightly beaten egg yolks. Add vanilla, melted butter, salt and cream. Beat together ;pour into crust and bake. Make a meringue of the two whites of eggs.

Use a silver knife for testing the pie. This is very similar to custard pie and should be baked in the same way.

Eggless Cake.

One cup sugar, one-half cup butter. Cream together. Add one cup sour milk, one cup dry cocoa, one teaspoon soda, a few grains of salt, and one teaspoon of vanilla. Mix enough sifted flour to make stiff batter.

To make a good spiced cake use brown sugar instead of white, leave out the cocoa, add to the flour one half cup or more of seeded raisins or currants and flavour with a teaspoon each of ground cinnamon and allspice. Beat very thoroughly.

WASH AT NIGHT.

Washing white gloves at night is recommended as a means of keeping them from turning yellow. White silk stockings also should be treated in the same way. Wash both in warm —not hot—suds, using a good soap. Rinse well and hang on a rack to dry. By morning they will be ready

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Reverie of Old Jamestown

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

Coming from Fort Monroe northward by the James river, the boat stopped at Jamestown. There are two most important spots historically in the United States, Jamestown and Plymouth rock, the former being the more important from its age. I was curious to see it and, leaving the boat, remained there long enough to lose myself in a reverie concerning it.

There is nothing there today to dream about unless it be the tower of the church built by the inhabitants of the settlement who went there a little over 300 years ago. No more uninteresting spot in itself exists in America. It is an open flat space on the northeast bank of the river, whose yellow waters have eaten away a considerable part of the site of the town.

Add now for my dream.

The report of a gun fired out on the bosom of the yellow waters. I looked and saw a miniature ship very high in the stern and forward, much ornamented and the sail on the main mast bearing the arms of England. From the shore a boat was about to put out bearing a huge cask. I got aboard and was pulled to the ship.

"What's going on?" I asked of one of the oarsmen, who, by the bye, all wore doublets with broad collar, knee breeches and hose.

"Sale of redemptioners," was the reply.

When we boarded the vessel, the Royal James, rum was served from the cask, and the sale commenced. There were twenty men and four women to be sold to whomsoever would pay their passage money from England, with a handsome bonus to the person who had advanced the funds. They were to be bound to their purchaser till they had worked out the amount he had paid and until then were held as redemptioners, which meant a limited period of slavery.

Several men were sold for sums ranging from £50 to £100, though the amount was paid in tobacco. All the women were sold for wives with their consent. There was one damsel not twenty years old who was so comely that I approached and asked her what had induced her to come out to so melancholy a place as Jamestown.

"Please sir," she replied, "I come from bonnie Scotland. My mother dinna like it because I wouldna marry auld Roderick MacTavish and abut me up. But I got out, and a man with gold a-plenty sent me out as a redemptioner. He must be paid £60 for my passage and a' the profit there is in me."

"And if I pay the £60 will you marry me?"

"That I will," replied the girl, "because you're so much better than old Roderick MacTavish, and I'll na have to work out the money owing for sending me here."

And so I paid the £60 in tobacco, which went back to England in the ship, and the girl was carried ashore with me. On landing we went up a beaten path leading to the church. I found the parson, and we were married.

This was when Captain John Smith was indefatigable in keeping the colony together and supplying our wants, but after a time he left us to make explorations of the coast and then to go to England. Our men became discouraged and would not work. Food must be got by hunting or tilling the earth, and the people would do neither. So hunger and sickness came upon us, and we diminished rapidly. Some went back to England, and some, leaving Jamestown, went back from the river into the country.

When I saw that Jamestown was doomed, taking my Scotch wife with me, I went back from the river into the interior and, settling myself on a piece of land, built a house and raised tobacco. I prospered, and, other families settling near me, in time we became a community. Though my wife and I grew old, our children grew up after us to be men and women and the country about us lost its primitive loneliness. But the river was always the same. At times I was obliged to go to it for the purpose of shipping my tobacco, and it always gave me the blues.

But we on the peninsula between the river and the bay were a merry lot, meeting oftentimes at each other's plantation, where our children danced and feasted, for we were not the motley lot we were when we settled at Jamestown. Some proud families in England who had met with reverses, or younger sons, also the Cavaliers who had been beaten by Oliver Cromwell, came over and settled among us. We gave them welcome and a helping hand, and in time they became, like ourselves, successful planters.

This was my reverie as I sat on the bank of the James river looking at the melancholy scene about me. Yet it was no creation, but what I had read in the annals of my family. My first ancestor in America was a citizen of Jamestown, and he married a redemptioner of Scotch nativity. They became planters in the neighborhood of Williamsburg, and their grandson was a professor in William and Mary college. The branch of their descendants from which I sprang gravitated after the Revolution northward, and in the war between the states we fought against our brethren in the peninsula where our first American progenitors raised tobacco.

Artillery.

Until the time of Charles XII. of Sweden the artillery was not considered a part of the army. The men serving in it were not soldiers, but regarded as mechanics. The officers had no army rank. Charles XII. gave artillery officers a rank and regularly organized the artillery into companies. The battle of Pavia demonstrated the superiority of the gun in the hands of the Spanish infantry. The musket carried a two ounce ball and sometimes brought down at one fire two or three mailed knights. The French sent a flag of truce to remonstrate against the use of such barbarous weapons.

Not the First.

Pat was servant of a farmer, and in his charge was a donkey, which was kept to amuse his employer's children. The donkey was following the farmer's wife round the yard one day, and the farmer, turning to Pat, said:

"I think that donkey is taking a liking to my wife."

"Och," said Pat, "shure, and it's not the first donkey that's took a liking to her, sir."—Exchange.

Steam and Gas.

True dry superheated steam has every property of a true gas save one—it is not permanent. When heat disappears what appeared to be gas soon becomes water. Heat oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen as hot as possible in any expansion container and they will become rare, occupy more space, but allow the heat to vanish and the gases will resume their original temperature volumes. Freeze these gases down to liquid or solid, when the cold is so intense that it cannot be imagined. Restore the heat and the solids or liquids will be gases again—that is, they are permanent gases at terrestrial temperatures. But steam is not permanent at these temperatures and is therefore a vapor of water.—New York American.

Built From the Coliseum.

Many of the important palaces of Rome are made from stone taken from the ruins of the Coliseum, which, in spite of the ravages of two earthquakes, remained intact until the eighth century. The Barberini, Farnese, and Cancellaria were all built from the walls of this edifice, but the spoliation is not so unworthy when we realize the stone had fallen from repeated earthquakes, thus suggesting its transportation.

A Forehanded Man.

Tramp—Would you give a poor, starvin' man something to eat, mum? Lady of the House—I might, but you are not starving. Tramp—I know dat, lady; but an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, you know.—Boston Transcript.

The Boy and the Professor.

"I was mimicking Professor Bore yesterday, and he caught me."

"What did he say?"

"Told me to stop making a fool of myself."

WAR AND PEACE.

The peace advocates are being sneered at just now, and taunts are made of the inefficiency of peace conferences and of The Hague tribunal. One answer given to this taunt by an eastern contemporary is quite to the point. The claim of the militarists has been right along that it was the big armies and navies, the tremendous armaments, that have been the greatest sureties of peace. Well, how does this fit in with the European situation? There they have been armed to the teeth, the miltary burden has been practically unbearable and yet it has not been sufficient to stop war. If the peace argument is fallacious, the militaristic one is demonstrably sophistical.—Brantford Expositor.

WHOLE BODY A SOLID RASH

Thick, Fine and Red, Agony of Itching and Burning Frightful. One Cake of Cuticura Soap and Box of Cuticura Ointment Cured.

Lewry, Onslow, N. S.—"At first we thought my child's trouble was his teeth. The whole body was a solid rash and at the age of 2 months it broke out with pimples and blotches and changed and thickened until the skin looked like leather. It was a very thick fine rash, red in color and intensely itchy and burning. The skin just wiped off leaving a raw sore with little specks of yellow matter in them. The skin on every finger split down on each side and looked like a ruffle. His toes broke out in little yellow pimples and the bottom of his feet did the same and he would say he could not walk, that there were pins sticking in his feet.

"The agony of itching and burning was something frightful. If he got a chance he would scratch the skin right off and make a sore, but to prevent that I made mittens for him out of cotton. Every night from twelve o'clock until three in the morning he would have to be taken up out of bed and rocked, his sufferings were so bad.

"With no permanent cure in sight I got the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. The first night the child slept the whole night through, the first night for four months. I am thankful to say the cure was complete and I just got one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment." (Signed) Mrs. Samuel Higgins, May 17, 1913.

Scout for R.N.W.M.P.

Wherever a Northwest Mounted Police has patrol work on an Indian Reserve, he must have an Indian scout to assist him. This officer is employed by the Mounted Police, lives at the barracks, and wears a uniform provided for him by the department. He must be able to understand and speak English, for he is the medium between the Red Man and the officer of the law in the Indian territory.

Usually the scout becomes a very important personage among the Indians and is not much loved by them. While they are not usually averse to police control, yet they cannot overcome the old idea that the Medicine Man and chief of the tribe should be the only Indian authority under which they must bend.

One of the most enlightened scouts in the employ of the force is Eddie Spring-in-the-crowd, who for short is called plain "Eddie." What his father saw at the time of his birth to suggest such an uncommon name for his child is not known. Eddie is one of the few Indians of the Blood Reserve who gets mail at the local postoffice. For some years Eddie has been a subscriber to a Canadian periodical, and while the police affirm that he does not read the literature, yet they believe the pleasure of having a magazine come addressed to himself more than offsets the small subscription he pays for it.

A Winning Choir.

A year or two ago Weyburn, Sask., proved itself bigger than its town limits by establishing a bank which grew out of a money safe. A short while before that Weyburn was not even mentioned in a railway timetable. Now this progressive town in Saskatchewan has established the beginning of a musical reputation by winning awards in the recent Saskatchewan sangerfast in which there were 1,500 entries from all over the province. It was the children that did most of it, the little choir of twenty-five voices that, under the direction of Miss Amberton, and aided by the enthusiasm of Inspector of Schools Mr. A. Kennedy, won the shield for Class B. in childrens' choir work.

His Role.

Magistrate—I understand that you overheard the quarrel between the defendant and his wife? Witness—Yes sir. Magistrate—Tell me if you can what he seemed to be doing. Witness—He seemed to be doing the listening—Exchange.

Not to Be Denied.

Crawford—What does a bachelor know about women, anyhow? Crabshaw—Well, he evidently knew enough about them never to marry one of them.—New York Times.

Friendliness of London.

There is no friendliness like the friendliness of London. "Ten or eleven years ago I went rather frequently to a certain tea shop, which has every afternoon a crowd of men taking their tea and playing dominoes and chess. We used to talk occasionally, but none of us ever knew the name of any of the others. Then for five years I did not go near the place until one day when I dropped in almost by accident. At once there was a greeting and a welcome from at least half a dozen. The other day I went in again after another absence of six months, and the greeting was the same. That will do to tell those people who insist that London is an unfriendly place.—London Citizen.

A cinema film picture dealer was trying to explain what he described as a gramatic fallacy.

"The characters must not look like statues," remarked the prospective customer after using his magnifying glass. "It would spoil their facial."

"Ah!" said the dealer, "I will tell you the history of that. What Napoleon noticed that proved he was heavily in debt, so he put it in the wife's name for safety."—Argonaut.

Its Obvious Warmth.

Miss Snowdrop—Don't it embarrassed to ask the youngest child how much it gives horses? She must be at least fifteen years older than I am. Miss Cayenne—Fully. And you wouldn't tear under the wing, you know, either.—Chicago Herald-Examiner.

HUMAN INSTINCT.

More Potent at Times Than Reason in Directing Our Actions.

That even in man instinct is sometimes stronger than reason is illustrated by these two cases:

There had been dropped on a Mississippi river steamboat a box with a glass cover, containing a very active rattlesnake. Whenever any one approached the box the serpent would strike the cover. The owner of the reptile challenged any one to hold his finger on the glass and let the rattler strike at it. There was no danger, and it seemed an easy thing to do. First one and then another tried it, and when the snake gave its victim a spring the finger was invariably drawn back with a jerk. Instinct was stronger than reason and will controlled.

A young thief in Paris had just taken one of the shoplifting risks. Not only was he without counsel, but he had not a large sum of money to bid counsel. He started for the fields with the intention of drowning himself. On the way there was a great confusion, caused by the escape of a lion from a strolling menagerie. The animal came galloping down the street, and people fled in every direction.

Instantly the man who was thinking lightly climbed a lamp post and clung to the top of it, trembling in every limb. When the animal was captured and the danger was over he proceeded to the river and plunged in.—Washington Star.

Spanish Nicknames.

One of the peculiar ways in which Spanish differs from English is in the regular the language gives to all people with a certain infirmity or peculiarity. A blind man is referred to as el ciego, a man with but one eye is a tuerto, a boy named Juan is Chinki, one who is born deaf is a mudo; a tojo is a lame man, and a manco has but one arm. As to blindness, he is a jorobado, if hunchbacked or naive, and if the hair is very short he is a pelon. The countries often for the same characteristics are the same, with the exception that they end in "o" where the masculine terminates with "a." These short names are used most commonly. In fact, they are applied so indiscriminately in many cases, and especially among the lower classes persons are addressed or referred to only by these names.

European Diamond Industry.

Years ago Amsterdam was at the head of the diamond industry in Europe. Of late Antwerp has forged ahead and taken first place. Amsterdam very largely specializes in small stones, and its superiority over Antwerp in cutting these diamonds is undoubtedly. Antwerp, on the other hand, cuts large diamonds and small ones, according to what happens to be most in demand. It works on the larger Transvaal stones furnished by the London syndicate, and at the same time it monopolizes the small southwest African business.

The Word "Lurid."

The word "lurid" is misused by many people as a synonym for "glaring" or "fiery." One speaks in this sense of "lurid" language, "lurid" flames, "lurid" dramas. It is probable that not one person in three knows the real meaning of "lurid." The dictionary defines it as "ghastly, pale, wan, gloomy," which in no way carries out the general and mistaken idea of the word.—New York World.

The Ax in the Glacier.

Shipboard, one of the celebrated mountain climbers of the world, in scaling a peak of Los Angeles, near Chamonix, accidentally let an ice ax fall from near the summit of the peak. It fell some thousands of feet. By the merest chance of things it was buried in snow and avalanche up in the glacier, being covered deeper and deeper each year, and in the same time carried slowly downward on the ice toward the sea. Seven or eight years afterward Hon. C. G. Gould and Hartbin, a noted chief of communists, a party in the Alps found the ax, lifting and a great distance from the spot, being added to that the latter stood in, but a mile down in the interior, which there he dropped out in the open air. Chamonix records, by the way, that Hartbin's body was never found. There could be no mistake as to the identity of the ax, an Egyptian and men it and used it before.—Christian Herald.

A Royal Game.

There was a game played in the palace of the caliph Haroun al Raschid. The caliph sat in the audience chamber twenty pure years, and it was written in the book of judgment that he who should have the misfortune to break one of them would pay the penalty with his life. That slave one day broke a vase. He was immediately seized, tried and condemned by despots. But the caliph had no sooner pronounced sentence on him than the slave turned, and, striking calmly to the other nineteen vases, with one sweep of the arm destroyed them all.

"Wretch," the caliph thundered, "why have you done that unheard deed?"

"To save the lives of nineteen of my fellow countrymen," the disarmed slave replied.

This he paid for 20 years, when the accumulated profits reduced the premium permanently to $10.25, subject to further yearly reduction. Thus he paid only $10.25 the twenty-first year. Montenegro Declares War on Austria and Will Aid Servia---International Alliances Are Becoming Tangled---Kaiser's Threat to Fight the World May Soon Become a Reality---Belgium Saw Guile in Germany's Request For An Armistice---German Regiments Are Reported Captured By Belgians

BATTLE AT LIEGE HAS BEEN FIERCELY RESUMED

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Aug. 8. — Enraged when his demand for a twenty-four hours' armistice to "collect the wounded and bury the dead" was refused, General Von Emmich, the German commander, ordered his entire army against Liege to-day. The seventh, ninth and tenth corps are engaged, the battle line embracing the entire chain of Liege fortifications.

The slaughter is terrible, as the Belgian fire is deadly. The Germans are advancing over open spaces that have been accurately mapped and the range determined by the Belgians. The German field artillery, mortars and siege guns are in action, pouring thousands of exploding shells into the Belgian fortresses.

General Goudneur of the Belgians declared that the request for an armistice was intended only to permit the Germans to hurry up two additional army corps that were pressing forward from Cologne. The Germans have been outwitted at every point to date.

AUSTRIA REFUSED TO AID GERMANS

ROME, Italy, Aug. 8.—The sensational declaration was made by Italian officials here to-day that Austria has declined to aid Germany against England. The officials state that the German battle cruiser Goeben and cruiser Breslau, expelled from Messina harbour yesterday, while steaming towards the Adriatic with their decks cleared for action and their men at their stations, wireless for the Austrian fleet to come to their assistance. The Austrian naval authorities in reply sent a flat refusal, declaring that war had not yet been declared between Austria and England.. As a result of the refusal of the Austrians to come to their aid the two German cruisers are in a desperate position. A combined French and English fleet is between them and the Austrian naval base near Trieste, and they are in imminent danger of capture or destruction.

PARIS GOWNS GO BEGGING FOR BUYERS

War Has Transformed the French Capital and Marvellous Scenes Are Enacted

WOMEN ARE WORKERS

By William Philip Simms.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—The women of Paris rose to-day to the emergency created by drafting the men of the city for the army. Society women took the place of men clerks in the stores to sell necessities. Young girls sold tickets in the underground stations. Others acted a waiter in cafes. Grocery stores and other shops were run by women. Small boys were put on as guards on the underground trains. The motormen are aged, gray-haired men, ineligible for service in the army. Paris enjoys the novelty of women doing men's work, and the women apparently do, too.

The fashionable stores on the Rue de la Paix are nearly all closed. Parisian "creations" can be bought almost for nothing, but the Americans here are not purchasing, first because of the difficulty in obtaining cash and second because railroads are refusing to take anything but hand baggage.

A score or more of the big Paris hotels were forced to close to-day, owing to lack of help in engine-rooms and other places where heavy manual labour is required.

The war has levelled all classes. French society women have taken into their homes the destitute wives and children of private soldiers ordered to the front. The American adventurer gets the same treatment from the American Embassy, as the millionaire, James Gordon Bennett, millionaire owner of the New York Herald, is acting as a reporter for his newspapers, going daily to the American Embassy to collect "stories."

Up to to-day, 8,500 Americans had registered at the Embassy.

Nearly all Paris newspapers have suspended owing to lack of printing paper and answering of the call to the colours of their staffs of reporters, editors, and printers.

Le Matin, however, appeared to-day, in single sheet form. Prominent on the front page was an offer from Paul Chatelier, a flag maker to give $1,000 to the first soldier, private or officer, who captures a German standard.

LABOUR MEN'S SUGGESTION A GOOD ONE

Prime Minister Replies to Mr. J. H. Burnham Regarding the Retaining of Food in Canada

HONOUR TO THE COUNCIL

Mr. Burnham informs the Examiner that he has received an immediate answer from the Prime Minister thanking him for forwarding the Resolution of the Peterborough Trades and Labour Council with regard to the supply of food by Canada to those on the fighting line. The Prime Minister states that the Government is giving its earnest attention to the suggestion, and he expressed his gratification for its submission. This patriotic suggestion coming from Peterborough Trades and Labour Council, received as it has been evidently eagerly and gratefully by the Prime Minister, shows that people may well have valuable ideas and present them. Sometimes ideas may have already been provided for. Sometimes they may not be possible. Sometimes, as in this case, they may be among the gems of the occasion. It is a great honour to the Peterborough Trades and Labour Council both to have made the suggestion and to have had it received in the prompt and grateful manner indicated.

Examiner's Splendid Map Of War Zone

The splendid map of the theatre of war in Europe printed in The Examiner yesterday is the best extant. The demand for yesterday's Examiner was so great that not a copy of the unusually large edition was left. We have not space to-day to reproduce the map which occupies half a page, but it will be reprinted on Tuesday, and those who have not received a copy can get it with our regular edition on Tuesday. Our readers are advised to cut out and preserve this map for future reference. It will be useful for some time to come. We don't know how long the war will last. Apparently it has hardly yet fairly begun.

CANOEISTS ARRIVED IN NEW YORK

Dr. Cameron Recieved Wire From His Son Donald Stating That They Had Reached Their Destination Yesterday

FORTY DAYS GOING

Dr. Cameron has received a wire from his son, Donald, who with Jack Davidson, son of Rev. Canon Davidson, and Gordon Graham, of Lakefield, left here on June 27th, for a canoe trip to New York, to the effect that the party had arrived safely in New York City yesterday, August 7th. The canoeists left here on the 28th of June, but owing to bad weather and the loss of their equipment at Campbellford, they were held up for three days. Leaving out the three days lost at the start, they were exactly forty days making the trip. On an average they paddled 25 miles a day, a remarkable achievement, when it is considered that Jack Davidson and Donald Cameron are both under 15 years of age. The party expects to spend a few days in New York City before starting for home. They will return by rail.

TO-DAY'S MARKETS

Dry Weather Still Affects Produce —Apples and Plums Arrive

The farmers still complain of the dry weather, for vegetable products are stunted. Nor are prices diminishing as is usual at this time of the year. Butter is now realizing 30 and 32c a pound, but eggs remain at 25c a dozen. Spring chickens are 40 to 45c each, and ordinary chicken 70c each.

Early apples and plums are now coming in. Yellow Transparents sold on the market this morning for 25c a peck, and plums, both red and green, for 25 a basket or 15c a quart. Onions, radishes, vegetable marrow, carrots, cabbage, beats, etc., are 5c. Potatoes are down to 30c a peck.

150 VOLUNTEERED FROM 57th REGIMENT

Large Number For the First Call and There Are Many Others in the City Ready To Go.

MEDICAL EXAMINATIONS

The enrollment of volunteers was begun last night at the Armouries, when there was a fairly good turnout of the 57th Regiment. In the neighbourhood of one hundred and fifty men gave their names as willing to serve on foreign battlefields if they were called, and the medical examination was begun. This examination of volunteers will be in progress for the next few days during stated hours.

The enrollment of volunteers, it should be understood merely commenced last night, as there are hundreds of local men who are willing to answer the call to the colours who were not on hand last night. In the first place the notice was very short, it only being announced yesterday afternoon that there would be any call for volunteers at all. The medical examination is also to be a stiff one, as only the pick of the volunteers at the present moment are needed. The way the young men are rallying to the call is a matter for congratulation, and should be a source of satisfaction to all who have believed that the present generation would do its utmost in the defence of Canada and the Empire, if they were ever needed.

TOOK THE HAMMOCKS AND CUSHIONS

East City Residents Stripped of Articles That Were on Their Verandahs Last Night

POLICE WERE BUSY

Last night the residences of two East City people were stripped of their hammocks and cushions, that had been left on the verandahs.

Mrs. C. Moore and Mr. John Craig —both residing on Hunter Street E. —were the sufferers, and their losses have been reported to the police, who are investigating.

It is thought that as the hammocks and cushions would be invaluable to a camping party perhaps they were taken by some campers.

Who did take them, however, is merely a matter of conjecture, as the police have not made any arrests yet.

THOSE WHO HAVE MATRICULATED

Pupils of Local Collegiate Institute Who Have Been Successful

The following list contains the names of the candidates who were successful in whole or in part on the Pass Junior Matriculation Examination. Normal Entrance candidates who were also candidates for Matriculation have been considered in the results:

In Group I. are given the names of all candidates who have obtained complete Matriculation by passing on the twelve required examination papers, which are as follow: English Literature, English Composition, British and Canadian History, Ancient History, Algebra, Geometry, Latin authors, Latin Composition, together with the four papers in any two of the following subjects: Experimental Science (Physics and Chemistry), French (Authors and Composition), German (Authors and Composition), Greek (Authors and Composition).

In Group II. are given the names of those who have passed on at least nine of the papers required for complete Matriculation and have obtained the minimum required on the whole examination. They have, therefore, failed in not more than three papers.

In order to complete their Matriculation they must pass in all the remaining papers at one examination, the standard for pass being forty per cent. of the marks assigned to each paper.

In Group III. are given the names of all those candidates who have failed to obtain the minimum required on the whole examination, but who have obtained forty per cent. on each of at least eight papers with an average of sixty per cent. on the same. Such candidates have been awarded Partial Matriculation and in order to complete their Matriculation must obtain at one examination forty per cent. on each of the remaining papers with an average of sixty per cent. on the same.

Group I.—M. H. Baird, B. Bevis, A. Bolin, E. M. Curtis, C. H. R. Devey, R. Drennan, M. I. Eastwood, G. Elston, F. E. Frost, I. V. Giles, H. Gillespie, R. M. McNaughton, I. McFadden, I. Meikle, R. Pakenham, F. L. Scott, F. H. Soward.

Group II.—H. P. Cumberland, A. Horsfield, O. Jinks.

Group III.—J. L. Armstrong, A. T. Burgess, G. S. Collinson, J. C. Cressman, G. C. Garratt, B. Howson, A. A. Halpin, F. Hooper, M. G. Hunter, F. A. Hayske, L. B. Kennedy, H. C. Lewis, I. Morphet, L. M. Nelson, G. Primrose, M. Stevenson.

Recruiting Of Battery Men

The enlistment for service with the 36th Field Battery was commenced last night and the results were decidedly satisfactory to the officers. Although the call for volunteers was only announced last night, and a large number of the rural members of the battery do not yet know that their services are desired, there were a goodly number who took the plunge and gave in their names to Major Hall.

Recruiting will be continued at the Armouries this afternoon at two o'clock, when more of the rural members will be on hand.

AN EARLY MORNING WAR SCARE

This morning early, while most of our citizens were lazily rolling over in their beds to take an extra forty winks before rising, they were startled to hear the deep boom like the roar of a twelve pound gun. Instantly thoughts of an invading host besieging our fair city arose with visions of being carried off in chains to Berlin to be imprisoned in the Kaiser's cellar. Some thought our now notorious "German spy" had blown up his landlady or done something equally desperate.

Whatever mystery there was, was solved by the fact that some workmen on Maria Street, East City, took the time before people were abroad to "touch off" a blast to break up some boulders in a cellar excavation. So our first war scare has disappeared with our first German spy.

Offered A Six Gun Battery

Lt.-Col. T. W. H. Yeiter, with the others of the 10th Brigade, C.F.A., have offered a six-gun battery for active service.

Let Men Beware Who Force Up Unduly The Price Of Supplies

OTTAWA, August 7.—If there is any attempt to unduly enhance the price of food in Canada as a consequence of the war the Government will take prompt and effective methods to suppress it. At yesterday's cabinet council officials of the labour and customs department were appointed to investigate reports of enhanced prices in order that the Government may take steps to prevent any abuse of the situation. The advices received here indicate no cause for alarm in respect to either food or fuel supplies in Canada.

The export from Canada of arms, munitions of war equipment and various other articles required for defensive purposes or of use to the enemy has been prevented by a special order-in-council which was passed on Wednesday.

WAR MAKES FOR PEACE.

In the United States we find an instance of where war makes for peace. The threatened strike of about sixty thousand railway engineers and firemen west of the Mississippi has happily been averted. President Wilson appealed to the patriotism of the railway managers, under the present extraordinary circumstances, and probably they saw for themselves how much it would be to their interest to keep their roads running without interruption during the next few weeks or months. Both sides have agreed to refer their differences to arbitration with all probability of a settlement that will keep the roads in operation. This seems to again show how widespread is the area influenced by the wonderful war now getting under way in Europe.

GERMANY'S CONSIDERABLE JOB.

We don't seem to foresee how many nations the insane ambition and arrogance of the Emperor of Germany will draw into the vortex of war. It is Germany and Austria the joint aggressors against Russia, France, Great Britain and Japan; and Italy, if she has not already done so, may join the mad Kaiser's enemies. Belgium has been forced into a war of self-defence by the invasion of her territory by Germany to make it an entrance way to France and evade the more serious matter of forcing the strongly fortified French frontier. Holland may be drawn in through the same disregard of international rights. Italy is out of the ring at present, but she still insists on remaining neutral; and if in the face of this decision, Germany acts upon the ultimatum said to have been delivered to Italy, then Italy will be added to the nations at war with Germany and Austria. This would be a popular war, for the Italians hate Austria as much as the French hate Germany, and with similar cause, stolen territory. And Italy with an army including active reserves of 1,250,000, and a formidable navy, would add tremendously to the forces arrayed against Austria and Germany. If Germany were thrice armed with a just cause, the array against her would be formidable enough. But when she is the aggressor, in a most offensive form, against the highest developments of modern civilization and freedom, she has the moral hostility of the whole civilized world against her, besides the combined material force of four of the greatest powers, with the possible addition of Italy and some of the minor states, such as Holland, Sweden and Denmark, whilst patience is exhausted with the strain of living in the vicinity of an incarnate imperial bully who hasn't the Von Moltke of 1870 to guide his army movements, as evidenced by his check the Germans have received and are receiving by plucky little Belgium, with its little army of 50,000 all told.

THE DRY WEATHER.

With wars and rumours of wars almost monopolizing public attention, we seem to lose sight of other things. We have had a prolonged period of dry weather in this district unprecedented in many many years. In nearly three and a half months—not since the first of May—have we had effective rain; and everything is reduced to mild's original element, dust. We have almost become so accustomed to doing without rain that we don't look for it, and we have so long done without it that our dread of calamity of doing without is dulled.

In the city it is bad enough, where we have city water to compensate and then it requires industry and skill to keep lawns living. What it must be in the country where dependence is to be placed on wells, that in many cases are giving out, it is difficult to conceive. How cattle, especially milch cows, and pet sustenance from browns, and sometimes yields is a mystery. In the city our lawns and pride—our street trees are sadly suffering. On some streets where the subsoil of gravel is close to the surface, they are dying. Large maples with trunks twelve or fifteen inches in diameter, are to be seen with the whole large spread of leaves burned brown as by the heat of a furnace, and they are doomed to die. It is not practicable to apply any artificial water to save them, and, as for rain, it would seem to require almost weeks of steady rain to penetrate the dry-as-dust earth to a depth to benefit the roots. Small trees can be saved by prompt action as described in these columns a few days ago.

Beyond these conditions, the prolonged absence of rain has dwindled the rivers and streams to such an extent that the water in the Kawartha Lakes hardly supplies enough for navigation, and it is possible that if things continue as they are for any considerable time longer, there will be scarcity of water for power purposes. While the scarcity of rain and water means the injury of trees and vegetation, and vexatious inconvenience, low water supply is liable to promote deterioration of quality that may be injurious to health. On top of this we have the curse of war that affects us as directly in many ways, as if we were in the theatre of actual conflict three thousand miles away. Our cup doesn't lack much of being full, yet we are supremely blest compared with the countries where the red carnage of war ravens, and the rain is a rain of death.

WAR AND WORK AND WAGES.

We in Peterborough are spared the inconvenience and suffering that attend an active state of war, but we feel the impact of the reflex blows. Apart from the disturbances of industrial conditions and the impediments of the shipping of the products of factory and field, we are hampered by the scarcity of money, or at least, available supply of money to carry on industrial and other enterprises. Our banks have, under normal conditions, come to be depended upon to supply the financial means of conducting industrial and commercial operations and labour-employing enterprises. If this help is withheld, which it seems is decided as the best, if not the inevitable policy under present circumstances, there will be cessation of many operations and labour will be deprived of of employment through inability to pay wages. The cessation of nearly all civic work such as sewerage and pavement works will be a serious matter for many, and will add to the army of unemployed, who will have, something almost as grim as a German foe to fight. To the lack of employment and the consequent lack of means of purchasing, will be added still higher prices than now prevail—piling Pelion on Ossa. We have already had sharp advance in the direction of war prices. Those who are old enough remember that, at the time of the Crimean war, wheat went to $3.00 per bushel. If it will not reach that figure in the present conjunction of circumstances everything else may advance to figures to collectively equivalate two-dollar wheat. When we add to unemployment, the high cost of the essentials of bare living, we can to a certain extent imagine the intensity of the pinch that will come to hundreds in our city.

The conditions may be somewhat ameliorated in regard to employment of labour, by the withdrawal of many men who join the Canadian enrollment for actual service. The Government should, if it will not do so, look after the families of those who by entering the service of the Empire, leave wives and children to be maintained at home. But with present conditions and prospects there is certain to be a good deal of suffering from food and fuel privation the coming winter, and even before that, many of our fellow-citizens will need assistance. We must get together to see that something in the way of what is needed shall be done. And even the power of many of us to help those who need help may be reduced, and we ourselves may be compelled to practice the strictest economy to enable us to weather the storm.

RULE OF BLOOD AND IRON.

The news that the Crown Prince of Germany will himself head a large force making for the French frontier recalls the fact that he possesses more than his share of the Hohenzollern obsession that men are but food for cannon, and principalities and powers but the divine instruments of a rule of blood and iron. Almost very public utterance that the Crown Prince has made has been a glorification of human slaughter. His book "Germany in Arms," published in May of 1913, was a violent championship of Chauvinism calculated to make the dove of peace faint in the skies over The Hague.

This German eaglet revealed himself as of for war. With him international arbitration is but a stuffed dummy of preposterousness; diplomacy a weak sister. The purpose of his book seemed to be to urge the nation to regard all modern luxuries as but accidentals, without justification on their own account, and to cast these aside when the Emperor called upon them to handle the sword. "Germany," he wrote, "can only attain the place under the sun grudged her by other nations, by a steadfast reliance on good steel. . . . The only thing finer than a cavalry charge of the Guards Corps as the manoeuvres will be the same charge with a real enemy dashing to meet us!"

And thus he goes on, dreaming and preaching the doctrines of a Nero, thinking of nothing but wars and conquests and of human oppression "with good steel."—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

NOT A RACIAL WAR.

This war is not a racial conflict between Teutons and Slavs, as is fancifully alleged. The Anglo-Saxon race is Teutonic in its origin, but England stands to-day with Celts in the British Empire, with France and with Russia. In this country there are many Germans who are good citizens of the country of their adoption and choice; intelligent and industrious. When we are seeking to find the causes of this war and fix the responsibility, we must not think of race or religion, but of social and governmental systems.

The blame for this war rests with the European system. It is no exaggeration to say that upon the subject o fwar Europe is insane. It is the European system that has resulted in piling up these huge armies that are now being hurled against each other. Great Britain has been trying to discourage the development of the system. The British commonwealths are opposed to it. In the United States, with its solid business sense, European feudalism and militarism, are regarded as a nuisance. Italy has declared her neutrality in the present war. We firmly believe also that France desired to keep out of it, and would have done so but for her obligations to Russia.

Great Britain is of the new world rather than the old. Her people are sick and tired of the European insanity, and if they plunge into war to-day it will be in the hope of putting the madmen in the madhouse, and establishing a system under which peaceable, industrious people will be allowed to do their business without hindrance.

It is quite possible that the Emperor of Germany, as an individual, is not as deeply responsible for the war as many people suppose. He is the creature and representative of a criminally insane system. But it is certain that the public opinion of the world is rising against him, as it rose against Napoleon a hundred years ago. Not only his faults, but his capacities and those of his people are thrown into the scale of world-wide public sentiment against him. Napoleon was a man of gigantic capacity and the French people whom he led were men of courage, enthusiasm, and many other admirable qualities. But somehow Napoleon made himself the enemy of civilization, anad arrayed against himself the powers of civilization. Europe came to regard him as a danger and a nuisance, and made common cause against him. The Emperor William of Germany is placing himself in the same position. The common talk of the street is that he is the enemy of civilization. It may not be wholly just; but it is a sentiment that rulers must reckon with. —Toronto Star.

BUILDING LOTS.

Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald is offering for sale some beautiful building lots on Benson and Geraldine Avenues. This property lies within two minutes' walk of the Street Railway and ten minutes walk of the heart of the City. The City water, gas, light, and sewer service are installed, the property being already completely surrounded by beautiful homes. The site is an ideal one, with a gentle south-easterly slope, and being considerably elevated above the City and not in the immediate vicinity of any manufacturing industries, the air is always pure, healthy and invigorating. Nearly all the lots are already beautifully wooded with foreign and domestic shade trees, and for anyone contemplating the erection of a home there are certainly no lots in the City that offer equal advantages.

Copies of Registered Plan No. 149, which covers the property, may be seen, and all other information may be had at the offices of Mr. R. J. Kidd, J. T. O'Connell and Co., C. J. Carroll and Co., also at the office of the owner, Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald, Ontario Land Surveyor, 435 George street. 'Phone 886.

A SPLENDID WAR MAP.

There is on display in Trebilcock Bros.' window the best map of Europe printed. This is gotten out by Stanford, the Geographer to King George, and is the most reliable map obtainable. All the movements of the French and German troops, and the British and German navies can easily be followed and the different countries engaged are distinctly marked in bright colours. A map of this kind should be in every home during this awful conflict.

THE WAR NEWS CENSORSHIP

LET THE PEOPLE WAITING FOR NEWS BE PATIENT

Naturally the people are anxious for the latest and fullest news relating to the war; but it is not probable that for a few days there will be any news of capital importance. So far except the fierce fighting about Liege, where the plucky and resourceful Belgians are successfully staying the march of the German armies France-ward, everything that has taken place has been as the war correspondents say, "affairs of outposts, scouting at sea and reconnoitering on land."

The rigid censorship established makes it difficult for reliable news to get through to the outside world, which has been in this regard reduced by half and means only the western hemisphere, for nearly the whole of Europe is in arms or standing ready for the call.

Monday being Civic Holiday, there will be no issue of The Examiner except the arrival of important news makes the issue of an extra warrantable; in which case an extra edition will be prepared.

However, whatever despaaches or bulletins relating to the war are received, will be posted at The Examiner Office, and the public can in part be thus far informed of the march of war-like events.

Let the people be patient. No news may not altogether be good news; but we can depend upon authentic news received hereafter from British sources.

To overcome the spread of disconcerting and sensational war rumours, which are due to the strict censorship, the British Government has established a Press Bureau, with Mr. Frederick E. Smith, M.P., in charge.

From this bureau will be issued a steady supply of trustworthy information, both from the Admiralty and War Office, subject, of course, in matter and form and fullness, to the naval and military interests of the country.

The British Press has shown great restraint during the preparatory and precautionary period, when hte Government was without any legal means of restraining it. This has enabled the Government to expeditiously and discreetly complete its preparations for successfully waging war.

The precautionary spirit no doubt account a for the entire lack of information respecting the movements of the French armies—one of which must be on the French frontier in the vicinity of Belgium, ready to support the Belgians or to take advantage of its splendid success in checking and retarding the German approach to French territory.

CITIZENS OF FRANKFORD RECOGNIZE BRAVERY

Handsome Gold Medal Presented Mr. Geo. Rogers at a Big Gathering This Week—Rogers Family Holds Enviable Reputation For Life Saving.

THE PRESENTATION

On Tuesday evening last the citizens of Frankford gathered in Albert Park to present Mr. George N. Rogers with a gold medal in recognition of his brave attempt to save the life of Mr. Everet Ketcheson, who was drowned in the river on 11th July.

It will be remembered that Mr. Ketcheson went in bathing and waded into a deep hole, and being unable to swim, was drowned.

Mr. Rogers from a distance saw the commotion among the onlookers and ran to see what was the cause, and at once stripped and swam out and dived three times, and at last brought up the body inside of ten minutes after Mr. Ketcheson went down. Owing to heart failure at was found impossible to revive him.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. B. B. Ostrom, postmaster, who, after a few eulogistic remarks about the late Mr. Ketcheson and Mr. Rogers, called on Dr. Malone to make the presentation.

Dr. Malone complimented Mr. Rogers on the brave attempt which he had made to save the life of Mr. Ketcheson. He said that there was little doubt that Mr. Ketcheson would have been alive to-day were it not that he had had an affection of the heart, which had prevented him from being resuscitated. He spoke of the high opinion in which Mr. Rogers was held by all who knew him. He was a man who was kind and gentle, but when occasion called was firm and resolute. Such a man was an inspiration to the whole community. Dr. Malone also spoke in a kindly manner of the foreigners who worked on the canal under Mr. Rogers' superintendence, and who had shown their high sense of appreciation of a noble act in subscribing so liberally to the purchase of the medal. "people thought that because they were not of our own nation that they had no appreciation of noble deeds; but the speaker knew from personal contact with them that they had many fine traits in their characters.

After the presentation was made, three cheers were given for Mr. Rogers, and the whole assembly sang "For he's a jolly good fellow."

Dr. Simmons was also called upon and made a few remarks, complimenting Mr. Rogers, and also complimenting the foreign element among them, and called upon the assembly to give three cheers for the Italians, Roumanians, and Polish workmen who had been so generous in their subscriptions to the medal.

In connection with the above presentation, it would not be amiss to mention here that the Rogers family hold an enviable reputation for bravery in lifesaving.

Mr. R. B. Rogers has o more than one occasion rescued persons from perilous positions.

The writer recalls an occasion about ten years ago this month, when two young men and two girls were upset out of a canoe in Clear Lake, and all would undoubtedly have been drowned had it not ben for the timely efforts of Mr. R. B. Rogers and his son Harry. Three were brought to safety and although the fourth had only been in the water a few minutes, resuscitation, as in the case of Mr. Ketcheson raferred to above, was impossible owing to the victim having a weak heart.

Then many of the older residents will recall how Mr. Geo. Rogers, brother of Mr. R. B. Rogers, lost his own life by drowning after rescuing an employee who was perilously situated.

Mr. Heber Rogers, youngest son of Mr. R. B. Rogers, also holds a Royal Humane Society medal for rescuing from drowning—when he was only twelve years old—two young lads who got into dangerous water while in bathing.

DUTCH ARMY MOBILIZES

THE HAGUE, Netherland, Aug. 7.—The Dutch army is mobilizing rapidly for war with Germany. Queen Wilhelmina left here early to-day by auto to inspect the troops concentrated near Rotterdam.

SEVEN GERMAN REGIMENTS SURRENDER

LONDON, Aug. 8.—A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Brussels says that a division of German cavalry, which had succeeded in fording the Meuse to the north of Liege, was surprised and practically annihilated by Belgian cavalry and infantry, supported by a battery of light artillery. The German rout was complete. Seven regiments surrendered.

JEAN BART SAILS

LONDON, Aug. 7.—A Toulon, France, despatch announces that the French battleship Jean Bart was ordered to-day to proceed to the Mediterranean at full speed. It had been held here for a week in readiness to join the British fleet if that armada suffered a defeat in the North Sea and required assistance, and the order sending her to the Mediterranean is believed to follow receipt of information from London that there was no further danger from the German warships.

GERMAN PACIFIC FLEET BOTTLED

TOKIO, Japan, Aug. 6.—An enthusiastic report received here states that the German squadron has been bottled up at Tsing-Yau by the British.

FRENCH AND GERMANS CLASH

BRUSSELS, via London, Aug. 8.—The Minister of War has received word that fighting has occurred between the French and Germans in Belgium and Luxemburg.

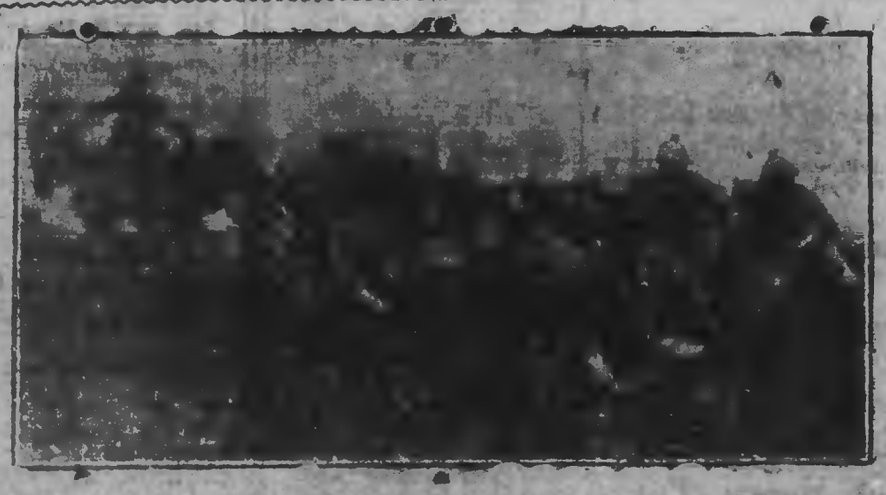
RUSSIANS LURING GERMANS

Apparently Waiting Till Invaders Are Well Into Their Country Before Striking

LONDON, Aug. 7.—At last news has come through from St. Petersburg which bears out the belief that the Russian general staff is following a carefully laid plan to entice the German armies well within Russian territory before striking back. Russian mobilization has ben proceeding much faster than was anticipated, and the fact that the Germans have been allowed to penetrate into Poland as far as Warsaw, and to occupy that ancient city, scene of many a hard-fought fight in thep ast, is believed to prove that Russia is holding her hand and that when she strikes back she will do so in overwhelming numbers and begin her march on to Berlin.

The attack on Liege has been fierce. The invading forces have placed their artillery where they can direct a destructive fire upon the forts of Barchon, Evegnee and Flaroz. If these forts are reduced, the city will be compelled to surrender.

Reinforcements for the Belgian garrison are being sent to Liege as rapidly as possible. When the Germans began their attack there were only 22,000 men to resist them, but there are now about 50,000 in and immediately west of the city.



GERMAN ARTILLERY IN THE FI ELD DURING MANOEUVRES.—A s quad of German artillerymen aiding in moving a gun-carriage into p osition. The Germans have now re sorted to the use of their artillery in an effort to destroy the fortifica tions of Liege before making anothe r attack upon the town.

UNITED STATES SYMPATHIZES WITH BRITAIN

Our Southern Neighbours Naturally Favour the Forces of Civilization and the Battle of Democracy Against Autocracy

British people have a right to expect the sympathy of the people of the United States in the war they are now waging. The people of the United States understand the British people as no other nation does. Both respond to the same impulses. Both are guardians of the same traditions. Each may claim to be a champion of democracy. So far as it is possible to judge from editorial comments in the American press, there is no doubt in the United States that in this great war Great Britain is the representative of civilization and democracy, and that America will wear the khaki uniform with probably the maple leaf on the helmet or arm.

The Government yesterday began the purchase of supplies for the British War Office. Seven hundred thousand bushels of oats were taken over at a uniform price of 47 1-2 cents. Most of it is stored in elevators along the head of the great lakes. The Government is also purchasing 10,000 tons of hay for the same purpose.

GURKHAS OFFERED.

Maharajah of Nepal and Other Indian Princes Are Loyal.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—The War Office announces that the Maharajah of Nepal has offered the entire military resources of his independent kingdom to the British Government. Other Indian independent kingdoms are making similar offers.

The Maharajah of Nepal is a major-general in the British army by virtue of an honorary commission. His regular army numbers 30,000 men, with an artillery force of 250 modern guns. The majority of his troops are of the Gurkha tribe, the most famous soldiers in India.

All Well With Lusitania.

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—A wireless was received from the Lusitania that the British liner which is running the gauntlet of German cruisers is on her way to Britain.

The message was dated 3 p.m. ship's time and bore only the two words, "All well." It came by Marconi wireless.

French In Alsace.

PARIS, Aug. 8.—The Minister of War announces that French troops have occupied Vic and Moyenvic, small German towns in Alsace-Lorraine, just over the border and about seventeen miles east of Nancy.

LIEGE HOLDS OUT

German Commander Wants Armistice of 24 Hours.

THE INVADERS LOSE 25,000

Terrific Carnage Among German Troops Is Wrought by Defenders of Belgium Stronghold and Desperate Fighting Is Now In Progress — Six Men Try to Capture City's Governor.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 8.—Germany has lost 25,000 men in killed and wounded at Liege. The Belgian defence is unweakened and the forts untaken. It is officially announced that Germany has asked for a 24-hour armistice to bury her dead. This is the startling news sent to King Albert by the Belgian commander.

It is presumed that the German commanding officers are unwilling to take chances on the demoralization of those of their forces who are advancing on Liege by allowing them to see the terrible carnage which accompanied the earlier attacks.

Lieut.-Gen. Leman, Governor of Liege, has not yet replied to the request. The feeling here after the developments of the past week is that the German officers are not to be trusted. They may take advantage of the armistice to bring up reinforcements.

Some 120,000 German troops were hurled upon Liege late yesterday afternoon, in a third desperate attempt to capture that city. Reinforced by fresh troops that arrived shortly after the Kaiser's forces retired Thursday night and camped on the left bank of the Meuse. Gen. Von Emmich's regiments moved forward en masse.

Before the infantry got into position the German batteries along the Meuse shelled Fort Fleron and put three of its mortars out of commission.

Under cover of their artillery, the German infantry dashed forward, and within a short time had captured Bressoux, a suburb of Liege, only a short distance from Fort Fleron.

At the time this despatch is sent desperate hand-to-hand fighting is going on in the street.

The forts about Bressoux are unable to fire upon the combatants for fear of killing Belgians as well as Germans. If the Germans retain Bressoux they probably will be able to take Liege, the main city, in a few hours, as 120,000 Germans are now attacking. They have penetrated a suburb and fighting is now going on in the streets.

When the siege guns had demolished many of the buildings at Liege, another assault in force was attempted. Like the others, it failed, and the German soldiers were again driven back completely crushed.

Yesterday's assault was one of the most sanguinary episodes in the history of European warfare. The Germans themselves admit that they have lost 25,000 men.

The defenders of the town made a show of evacuating the outer fortifications. The Germans accepted the retirement as genuine and a large force pressed forward. Immediately they entered the circle of the fortifications, however, the Belgians, whose manoeuvre had been an artifice, poured a deadly artillery fire on the Germans. Caught in a trap the invaders fought fiercely, but almost the entire force was annihilated. The Belgians captured 27 field pieces in the rout of the Germans. The invading forces lost the temporary advantage of position they had gained in two days' fighting.

An all night artillery bombardment from the mortar batteries was kept up inflicting much damage to the forts. The entire front is covered with German dead and wounded, but accurate estimates of the German losses are as yet impossible.

Not a single fort has fallen into the hands of the Germans.

Six Germans, pretending to be English, made their way to the governor's palace. They were killed.

Several German howitzers have been placed in position near Huy, and large German forces are lying in wait on the other side of the frontier.

An attack on the village of Carbesse was repulsed by the Belgians.

The excitement in Brussels, since the arrival of the wounded, has increased, if such is possible. There is much optimism, however, concerning the military situation. The events before Liege are regarded as merely the raising of the curtain, and that Belgium may once more be the country where the destinies of Europe will be decided.

The Daily Mail's Paris correspondent names three Belgian fortresses, Liege, Namur and Herve, as seeming likely to hold a proud place in the history of the present war, for they held back the head of the advancing German hosts, and have given the French army time to make up for the thirty hours' disadvantage in mobilization which they suffered through Germany's earlier preparations.

It was never expected that Liege would offer any serious resistance, says the correspondent, yet already it has stemmed the German onset for two precious days, and only today have two of the ring forts fallen before the concentrated attack of the German army.

FALLING HAIR AND ITCHING SCALP

Entirely Needless — Use Parisian Sage. It Quickly Removes Dandruff—Your Head Feels Fine.

Now that Parisian Sage—a scientific preparation that supplies hair and scalp needs—can be had at any drug or toilet counter, it is certainly needless to have thin, brittle, matted, stringy or faded hair. No matter how unsightly the hair, how badly it is falling, or how much dandruff, just spend a few minutes each day for a week and rub a little Parisian Sage into the scalp and through the hair. All dandruff is removed with one application, the hair roots are nourished and stimulated to grow new hair, itching scalp and falling hair cease—your head feels fine. Best of all, the hair becomes soft, fluffy, abundant and radiant with life and beauty.

Parisian Sage is one of the most pleasant, invigorating and refreshing hair toncis. No cheap perfumery odour—no disagreeable concoctions—but a daintily perfumed tea-coloured liquid that proves its goodness the first time it is used.

You will be surprised and delighted with Parisian Sage. Try at least one fifty cent bottle. The Warne Drug Co. will refund the purchase price if you are not satisfied.

Look for the trade-mark—"The Girl with the Auburn Hair"—it's on every package—accept no other.

AUSTRIA'S POSITION

Not Eager To Oppose England---Italy Should be a Friend To Britain

LONDON, Aug. 7—The Times says pathetic protestations are reaching Britain from Vienna that Austria-Hungary has no quarrel with Great Britain, and hopes "we are not drawn into conflict with her.

The Times replies that they are curiously feeble declarations from a country who actually unsheathed its sword, after a wanton ultimatum to Servia, and is now co-operating with Germany on land. The Times adds:

"Those who are not with us are against us. It is inconceivable that Britain can refrain from hostilities in the Adriatic with the Austrian fleet stripped for action. Vienna should have counted the cost before becoming, for the hundredth time, the catspaw of Germany."

Addressing Italy, the Times says: "Interests in Italy have never lain in the direction of Vienna. Her people know it; her Government knew it. If Italy means to turn her back upon the nations who treated her with so much contempt and bullying scorn, she has the opportunity now. Britain, her first and most faithful friend in Europe, knows how welcome her appearance in the conflict would be."

FRENCH PREMIER CALLS UPON WOMEN TO FINISH THE HARVEST

PARIS, Aug. 7.—Premier Viviani to-night addressed an appeal to the women of France, asking them to "complete the work of gathering the crops left unfinished by the men who have been called to arms.

"The wheat," said the Premier, "stands unreaped, and the time of vintage approaches. I appeal to your hardihood and to that of your children whose ages alone, not their courage, withholds them from the fighting line. I ask you to maintain the life of our fields, to finish this year's harvest, and prepare for that of the next year. You cannot render a greater service to your country."

The Minister of Agriculture, in co-operation with the principal millers, grain merchants, and manufacturers of agricultural machinery, has organised an elaborate system to assure supplies for both the army and the civil population. The mayors in the country districts are drawing lists of men and machines which will be concentrated where most needed for agricultural operations.

The Minister of Marine has placed 20,000 naval reservists, too old to fight, at the disposal of the farmers. Measures are also being taken to send men from the cities who have been thrown out of work by the war into the farming districts and to import foreign farm labourers. The manufacturers of agricultural machinery have placed all their stocks at the disposal of the Ministry.

A special advisory committee to carry out the plan has been appointed.

C.G.E. ELECTRICIANS TO AID DOMINION

Mr. Frederick Nicholls Makes Offer To Premier Borden

To raise, equip, and pay a company of twenty-five skilled electrical and mechanical operatives for service in any part of the Dominion, under the Minister of Militia, is the generous offer made yesterday morning by Mr. Frederic Nicholls, president of the Canadian General Electric Company of Toronto.

Following is the offer telegraphed to Sir Robert L. Borden:

Toronto, August 7th, 1914.

The Right Honourable
Sir Robert L. Borden,
Prime Minister, Ottawa, Ontario.

The Board of Directors of the Canadian General Electric Company, after full consideration, and having regard to the present serious war situation, have resolved to submit to your Government an offer to raise, equip, and pay the salaries of a company of twenty-five skilled electrical and mechanical operatives who would be available for service in any part of the Dominion, and be under the control of the Minister of Militia as part of the Canadian forces.

Probably their services could best be utilised in the erection, repair, and maintenance of wireless telegraph stations, cable stations, bridges, transport vehicles, artillery, etc.

Frederic Nicholls,
President.

Ottawa, Ont., Aug. 7th, 1914.

Frederic Nicholls,
President Canadian General Electric Company, Toronto, Ontario.

The Government of Canada warmly appreciate the patriotic offer of Canadian General Electric Company embodied in your telegram just received, and send their sincere thanks. Your telegram has been submitted to the Minister of Militia, who will communicate with you thereon.

R. L. Borden.

NO CONTENTIOUS MATTER.

Hon. G. P. Graham Says Liberals Will Back Up Government.

SOME THINGS AND A FEW OTHERS

Fair Bingen on the Rhine.

The Kaiser may be mad, but he's no piker.

You don't hear much about the tango, lately.

With Philolmene one might ask:—
"Tell us all about the war
And what they fought each other for."

Less than a week ago, the Belgians were not regarded even as bush leaguers.

Next to the moral courage of Britain, one must admire the physical courage of the Belgians.

The sleuthing propensities of the writers on a certain evening sheet deserve a greater measure of commendation than the inquisition conducted in its editorial columns.

When one recognizes the flights to which a people can soar in times of trial, one wonders all the more at the depths to which they stoop when the skies are unclouded.

There is something different about war according to Mary Johnston and the genuine article when it is laid bare before you.

Who will harvest the sugar beets in the German country side, who the barley in Bohemia and Bavaria, and who the wheat in Russia?

The man on the street says it will all be over in another week. Some optimist.

Other days provided glory for war correspondents. To-day they would be lucky to escape the burden of a firing party.

There is a lot of poetry about war—one hundred years after.

If some of the present crop of war correspondents could be brought before a jury of anxious patriots they would get scant mercy.

Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori. The old spirit holds sway as strongly as ever.

There's Hans Wagner, too. They say he too has hit the rollers.

The Germans take the palm for staging dramatic productions. There is Max Reinhardt and Kaiser Wilhelm, etc.

One's eye actually feels dimmed at the sight of a red coat, these days.

Are we mere pawns in the hands of evolution? The statement that the world is moving onward and ever upward is often confronted with horrible examples.

The Kaiser says—"Thou canst not say I did it."

Consider the timeliness of a self-established tribunal to measure patriotism at such a crisis.

Thre are others searching the Bible to find passages of holy writ to link the present trouble with the Day of Judgment.

However, many people deserve more pity than censure.

Quick Watson, I'll need you on this spy case.

And right in the Oriental to plot against the Empire.

The pair of reporters had already picked out their medals.

The Kaiser possibly recalls Schiller's line "Ich fuble eine Armee in Meiner Faust"—I feel an army in my fist.

The Kaiser may be staking his position on war; others believe it's a case of exaggerated ego and another would say he was shooting the bull.

A diaphragm and horn resembling those of a phonograph have been invented to make telegraph relay instruments audible and save the use of additional batteries.

THE TRIP TO LINDSAY

The Second Water and Rail Trip Well Patronized

Nearly two hundred excursionists took advantage of the second water and rail trip to Lindsay and return yesterday. The weather and other conditions were very favourable, and the commodious steamer Stoney Lake made a splendid record through the Kawartha Lakes, and never saw a cruiser.

The only hitch in connection with the excursion "as advertised," was that there was no special train; but that was not the fault of the Stoney Lake Navigation Co., but of the train despatcher at Lindsay, who claims that he misunderstood the instructions. The party arrived home, however, in good time and in comfortable coaches.

Cresswell Started But Was Forced to Retire After Being Hit on the Hand While at Bat

HITS NO USE TO BLOUNTMEN

OTTAWA, Aug 7.—Ottawa took the second game of the series from Peterborough here to-day by the score of 6 to 3. The visitors outhit the locals but were unable to overcome the lead Ottawa secured in the fourth inning. Cresswell started in to box for the visitors, but was hit on the finger with a pitched ball and had to retire. In the three innings he pitched he allowed the Senators but one hit. Tracey, who succeeded him, also twirled good ball, but two bad errors behind him helped in his defeat. The visitors scored in the first and third innings, but the home team got a two-run lead in the fourth, which was enough to give them the game. The score:

THE FEDS AFTER IRWIN TROUT

According to rumour, Trout, the clever outfielder of the Beavers, who leads the league in batting, has received an offer from the Federals. Trout is on the injured list at present and will not be able to play for a few days. It is said that an agent of the outlaw league has been camping on his trail lately, and that he can get a big bonus for signing. Trout, however, is well satisfied to stay where he is, and President McCaffrey has assured him that he will meet any offer made by the Federals.—Toronto News.

ITALY WILL NOT MOVE

All Germany's Efforts Cannot Upset Her Neutrality.

ROME, Aug. 8.—(Via Paris.)—The German Government is using its utmost efforts to bring a change in Italy's attitude in the present European situation. Direct appeals have even been made to King Victor Emanuel, but all in vain. It is asserted that Italy, having declared her neutrality, intends to maintain it.

Italy's position as a member of the Triple Alliance and therefore an ally of Germany under certain conditions, has been discussed in every phase, and the general consensus of opinion seems to be that the Italian people would never permit an act of hostility against France and Great Britain.

Because Italy is neutral, all manifestations for or against the belligerents are being rigorously repressed. Yet everywhere spontaneous outbursts of enthusiasm for France has occurred. In Rome there have been frequent cries of "Long Live France, Long Live our Latin Brothers," and the Marseillaise is being sung in the streets.

The French embassy here and the French consulate in other cities of Italy are daily receiving offers from men who wish to join the French forces.

"NEVER AGAIN" SAYS WILHELM.

The Kaiser Resigns His British Commissions—King Reciprocates.

LONDON, Aug. 8. — "Never again will I disgrace myself by wearing a British uniform," was Kaiser Wilhelm's last message to England. Just before the British Ambassador left Berlin after receiving his passports he was handed a letter from the Kaiser resigning all of his British military commissions. The letter ended with the above quotation. A copy of it has been wired by the British Ambassador, who is now on neutral soil.

Russia Calls Out 6,000,000.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times says that ukases published yesterday show that Russia is determined to fight to the bitter end. Practically the whole of her population capable of bearing arms has now been called to the colors. When the present mobilization is completed Russia will have considerably more than 6,000,000 under arms.

DENY THE RUMOURS

Only the Amphion Has Been Lost Says Churchill—Battership Laying Before Unheard of

THRONGS TO ENLIST

LONDON, Aug. 8.—Winston Spencer Churchill, First Lord of the British Admiralty, announced yesterday in the House of Commons that there had been no fighting and no losses of any kind other than had already been officially made public. The First Lord said:—

"Apart from the loss of the small British cruiser Amphion and the German mine-layer Koenigin Luise, there has been no other fighting and no other loss as far as we are aware.

"On Wednesday a flotilla of torpedo-boat destroyers while patrolling the upper reaches of the Channel found the Koenigin Luise laying mines. The destroyers pursued and sank her. About 50 of her crew, which probably numbered 120 or 130 men, were humanely saved by the crews of the British destroyers.

"The Amphion continued to scout with the flotilla and while on the return journey was blown up by a mine.

"The indiscriminate use of mines not in connection with military harbors or strategic positions, and the indiscriminate scattering of contact mines about the seas, might, of course, destroy not only warships, but peaceful merchant vessels under a neutral flag, and, possibly carrying supplies to a neutral country.

"This use of mines is new in warfare and deserves the attentive consideration of those who are engaged in war and of the nations of the civilized world.

"The Admiralty is not at all alarmed or disconcerted by this incident."

Mr. Churchill added that arrangements had been made such as would reduce the possibility of accidents caused by mines to a minimum.

Referring to the disconcerting war rumors spread by the newspapers, Mr. Churchill said they were probably due to the very strict censorship prevailing, and this caused the papers to fill their columns with reports from irresponsible and nervous people on the coast.

Mr. Churchill announced that the British Government had decided to establish a press bureau, presided over by Fred. E. Smith, a member of Parliament, and from this bureau is to be issued a steady supply of trustworthy information from both the Admiralty and War Office without, however, placing in danger the naval and military interests of the country. In this way, he said, the country would be kept properly and truthfully informed of the state of affairs from day to day.

Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd George informed the House of Commons that the Government was considering the question of taking over the entire harvest throughout the British Isles.

The Chancellor declared that the banking business was normal everywhere and that the people were paying in money quite freely.

The German banks in London have been obliged to close until the British Government grants their applications for licenses.

The response to Field Marshal Earl Kitchener's appeal for recruits for the British army surpasses anything in the memory of British military men. Huge crowds of all ages and all stations of life, silk-hatted men and poorly-clothed laborers stood in long lines all day in front of the recruiting stations awaiting their turn to go before the medical officer.

Plans to prevent unemployment through the war and for the systematic relief of the distressed are being arranged on a large scale. Instead of economizing on public works in the interest of military expenditures, the British Government has adopted the policy of greatly increasing Government employment for the purpose of providing for those who will lose their work through the shutting down of factories. Road building will be one of the principal employments, and the board for the development of roads has a fund of several million pounds which it will spend.

MESSAGE TO BELGIANS.

King Albert Issues Proclamation on Eve of Going To Front.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 8. — Before departing for the front King Albert addressed a proclamation to the Belgian army saying:—

"Without the least provocation on our part our neighbor, proud of its force, has torn up treaties bearing its signature and has broken in upon the territory of our fathers because we refused to forfeit our honor.

"An attack has been made upon us, and the world marvels at our loyal attitude.

"Be comforted by our independence.

"Our menaced nation shudders, and its children have bounded to the frontier.

"Brave soldiers, I salute you in the name of Belgium. You will triumph because your strength has been put to the services of the right.

"Glory to you soldiers and defenders of the liberty of our menaced fatherland."

Want Shipping Kept Quiet.

MONTREAL, Aug. 8.—The Montreal Board of Trade, at a meeting yesterday afternoon, passed a resolution asking the press not to mention the movements of vessels.

GOVERNMENT NEEDS RAILWAY FOR TROOPS

Is Considering The Taking Over of The N. T. R. From Lewis to Moncton For Militia.

C. P. R. THROUGH U. S.

OTTAWA, Aug. 8.—The Government has under consideration, it is understood, a proposal that it should take over from the contractors the eastern section of the National Transcontinental from Levis to Moncton and equip and operate it. The reason given for this proposal is that the C.P.R. could not handle any troops or war supplies sent down to the Maritime Provinces since its line runs through the State of Maine, and the United States as a neutral country could not allow it. This would put the whole traffic on the Intercolonial in addition to its regular business and it is represented that the I. C. R. might not be able to stand the strain. The taking over the eastern section of the N. T. R. it is urged would solve the whole difficulty. The contractors of the eastern section, it is said, would be glad to see the suggestion adopted.

When Parliament meets in special session on Aug. 18 one of the questions to be seriously considered will be the provision for the men who go to the front, and who may be incapacitated in any way, as well as for the families of the men who are incapacitated or killed. This is a matter that many men are compelled to take into account when they think of enlisting, and there is every reason to believe that Parliament will make full provision so that those who go forth to fight for their country will not need to worry about what will happen to those dependent on them if they do not return.

Recruiting is in full swing to-day all over Canada. In addition to the Canadians who are volunteering, applications have been received from many British army officers who cannot get passages home and would join the Canadian contingent.

The arrangements for transportation of troops to Quebec are not completed, but officials of the railways are here now and no difficulty is feared in this. The railways had a splendid practice in June in mobilizing the 13,000 men who came to the Petawawa camp.

The Militia Department in order to keep in touch with all the war news received through the press has subscribed to the Associated Press and gets its full news service.

The wireless station has been moved from Petawawa and placed on top of the Militia Department building. The Department is now in direct communication with the stations down the gulf and in the Maritime Provinces.

The announcement that it is the intention of the British War Office to send the Canadian contingent to the front has tended not one whit to dampen the ardor of the members of the Ottawa corps. Enlistment of the various corps began last night and there was a steady stream of young men registering their names with the attesting officers of the various local regiments.

The German consuls in Canada have been given 48 hours to leave the country. The reason is that they were used to get their reservists to return to Germany and they could also send out important information. The Austrian consuls are in the same position. Canadian citizens acting as agents for these countries are not forced to leave.

Steps will be taken to see no trouble results from the assembling or passage of bodies of reservists in the west. While no cause has yet appeared to fear any disturbances all necessary precautions are being taken.

The men of the Canadian contingent will wear the khaki uniform with probably the maple leaf on the helmet or arm.

The Government yesterday began the purchase of supplies for the British War Office. Seven hundred thousand bushels of oats were taken over at a uniform price of 47 1-2 cents. Most of it is stored in elevators at the head of the great lakes. The Government is also purchasing 10,000 tons of hay for the same purpose.

GURKHAS OFFERED.

Maharajah of Nepal and Other Indian Princes Are Loyal.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—The War Office announces that the Maharajah of Nepal has offered the entire military resources of his independent kingdom to the British Government. Other Indian independent kingdoms are making similar offers.

The Maharajah of Nepal is a major-general in the British army by virtue of an honorary commission. His regular army numbers 30,000 men, with an artillery force of 250 modern guns. The majority of his troops are of the Gurkha tribe, the most famous soldiers in India.

All Well With Lusitania.

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—A wireless was received from the Lusitania that the British liner which is running gauntlet of German cruisers is on her way to Britain.

The message was dated 2 p.m. ship's time and bore only the two words, "All well." It came by Marconi wireless.

French In Alsace.

PARIS, Aug. 8.—The Minister of War announces that French troops have occupied Vic and Moyenvic, small German towns in Alsace-Lorraine, just over the border and about seventeen miles east of Nancy.

BRUTAL TO REFUGEES.

German Soldiery Cruelly Ill-Treated Foreigners on Trains.

LONDON, Aug. 8. — The Berlin correspondent of The Daily Telegraph, who has reached Stockholm, sends the following despatch:

"The scene witnessed at Sessnitz, a famous watering place on the east coast of the German island of Rugen in the Baltic Sea, baffled all description. Some 5,000 Russian refugees turned out on the quay, were left to struggle for access to a steamer which was reached by only a single gangway. The vessel was obliged to sail, leaving 3,000 of them in despair, believing that the last chance to return to their country had gone.

The correspondent says that harrowing stories have been told by refugees who are arriving at Stockholm by the thousands. Many of them were moved about by the train for four or five days, without any idea as to what was being done for them. Foreigners taking the cure at Wiesbaden and Kissingen were glad to crowd the fourth class cars in their desire to get away.

"They were like poultry in crates," the correspondent adds, "without food or drink, and almost without air for fifteen hours at a time. During the nights when they were not in the train they were turned into cow sheds at slaughter houses. Everywhere they were subjected to a continuous fire of insults from the soldiers, especially the officers. Women of delicate breeding were openly threatened with violence, and all before the declaration of war.

"Among the victims was M. Kasso, former Russian Minister of Education. Twice he was placed under arrest, in spite of the knowledge of his identity, and packed into a fourth class carriage. Councillor of State Schreiber and his wife were assaulted by officers, to whom they ventured to complain. Wives were separated from husbands and parents from their children. No consideration was shown either for age, sex or infirmity. Many persons are now in ignorance of the whereabouts of those dearest to them."

Austrian Regiment Exterminated?

ROME, Aug. 8—A despatch from Pontebba, Servia, states that an Austrian regiment operating on the east of Belgrade has been exterminated by Servian forces, the colonel of the invading forces fell heroically fighting.

The despatch adds that the Austrians are in full retreat towards the Danube.

According to the despatch received here from Nish, which is now the seat of the Servian Government, it is officially announced that the Servian troops at Belgrade are continuing their successful resistance of the Austrian advance. The despatch states that a Prebojo two Austrian companies have been repulsed with severe loss.

ADMIRAL SIR GEORGE CALLAGHAN—who is in charge of the First Battle Squadron of the British Navy, which, by latest reports has been in an engagement with the German squadron in the North Sea. Rumours are that the flagship Iron Duke was sunk with Admiral Callaghan aboard, but this report is unconfirmed.

Bishop Offends In West.

YORKTON, Sask., Aug. 8.—A very enthusiastic and largely-attended meeting of citizens of Yorkton was held to consider the manifesto issued by Bishop Budka, of the Greek Catholic Church, calling on the Canadian Ukranians to return to Austria to fight for that country against Great Britain, and a resolution carried by an overwhelming majority condemning Bisop Budka's action and directing the attention of Premier Borden to the same, with the request that he take action in the matter.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, August 7.—After a serious decline, wheat today rebounded 2 3-4c, owing mainly to baseless rumors of an overwhelming British victory in the North Sea. Closing prices were easy at 1-4 to 1 1-4c above last night. The other leading staples, too all showed net gains—corn 1 1-2 to 1 3-4c, oats 1 to 1-8 to 1-4c and provisions 15 to 35c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug 7.—Wheat prices were again soaring after a weak opening. American houses were selling while exporters and local traders were heavy buyers, and at noon prices were on the rise. 2 1-4 per October, 3 3-4 for December and 3-4 for May, all higher than at opening.

Oats also made a sharp advance, October being sold at 2 1-2 higher; Flax opened unchanged and at midday stood at 3 to 4 3-8 higher.

The cash demand for all grades of wheat was good, and cash oats were selling at 2 1-2c higher than yesterday's close. The buyers were principally houses with eastern connections. The British government bought all the cash oats available. The weather while greatly improved as regards temperature, keeps dry only two points in the whole map recording moisture, these being Calgary and Edmonton, and it was light.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 7.—The excitement which prevailed in the local grain market yesterday was more pronounced than ever today, and prices fairly boomed under a continued brisk demand for supplies from all over the country, and a very active business was done. Dealers in some cases found it impossible to keep pace with the orders coming forward. Oats scored another advance of 4c to 5c per bushel, and Manitoba barley No. 4 sold 3c higher at 54c, and rejected at 51c. Sales of round lots of No. 2 Canadian western oats, including 25,000 bushels, were made for shipment from Port William, 55 1-2c per bushel, c.i.f., Montreal. It is understood that the government bought several round lots.

The flour market is very excited and spring wheat grades have advanced 60c to 80c per barrel, with orders pouring in from all sources, and a very active business. Winter wheat flour is 50c per barrel higher, but even at this advance buyers found it impossible to fill their wants, as the market is bare of stock, and some dealers are talking of importing from the United States. Mill feed is active and strong, but prices show no further change. Rolled oats have advanced another 5c per barrel. Old crop baled hay is excited owing to the sale of stock on spot and new crop hay coming forward, consequently prices are fully $1 per ton higher. The butter market is excited and strong with prices 1c per pound higher. Offerings of finest creamery at the auction sale today sold at 27 3-4c, and in a jobbing way prices have advanced to 30c. Cheese is strong with a good demand. Eggs firm and active.

SOCIALISTS EXECUTED?

Report Says Kaiser Has Had a Hundred Deputies Shot.

NEW YORK, Aug. 8. — A Berlin cable received by the correspondent here of La Prensa, of Buenos Ayres, the biggest newspaper in South America, states:

"By order of the Emperor, 100 Socialist deputies have been shot in Berlin, among them the Socialist leader, Herr Liebknecht."

There is no confirmation of the report from other sources.

The New York Call, commenting on the despatch, yesterday said:—"It is believed that the charge of treason may have been laid against the entire Socialist delegation in the Reichstag for some action by the German Socialists, knowledge of which has not been permitted to get out of the Kaiser's closely guarded domain. The Socialists' delegation numbered 111."

Other papers ridicule the idea and say the report is absurd.

ANXIOUS TO ENLIST.

Thousands Besieging Various Military Headquarters.

TORONTO, Aug. 8. — University avenue was crowded on every available inch of its space around the Armories last night, when recruiting and parades opened. While recruits poured in, as on previous night, enrolment was somewhat hindered by a massed parade of the 48th Highlanders in full uniform.

Last night it was ascertained that recruiting from the young Hebrews in the city was brisk. Louis Gurofsky has offered to outfit 2,000 men for a Hebrew contingent.

Three thousand infantry are wanted. The artillery division will probably number between 500 and 1,000 more. Only a few cavalry, probably 200 and 400, will be needed.

There was a big rush last night of men anxious to enlist. The Grenadier Guards, it is understood, will go almost to a unit.

Eager For Campaign Service.

THE GERMAN VERSION.

Liege Proved a Hard Nut, But German Heroism Was Unique.

BERLIN, Aug. 8.—(Via London.)—The official German account of the siege of Liege says:

"On Wednesday the German advance guards penetrated along the entire Belgian frontier. A small detachment tried a coup de main with great boldness at Liege. Some of the cavalry entered Liege with the intention of seizing the commander of the forces, who only saved himself by flight.

"An attempt on the fortress itself, the fortifications of which are modern, was unsuccessful. Our troops are before the fortress, in contact with the enemy.

"A hostile foreign press will characterize the enterprise which cannot have the slightest influence on the larger operations, as a defeat. It, however, is but a unique act of heroism in the history of war and a sign of the heroic gallantry of our troops."

Two Councils In Toronto On Monday

The Committee of the Whole Council met in the Council Chambers last night at 8 o'clock, and were met by the members of the North Monaghan Township Council, with Mr. Kerr, their solicitor, and Mr. W. H. Bradburn, clerk of the township. All the members with the exception of Ald. Dobbin, who is out West, were present, the Mayor occupying the chair. City Solicitor Gordon was also present.

The discussion was concerning the trunk sewer which the City proposes to build to the new disposal plant in North Monaghan. The Township Council renewed their suggestion of last Monday, but the last three clauses of the proposal found no more favour with the City Fathers than at their previous meeting.

Ald. Green explained that no engineer would allow the sewer mains to be tapped at the low level that is being asked by North Monaghan. There was a great danger of the North Monaghan connections being flooded and resultant law suits against the City. Then again there was no water system in North Monaghan.

"You give us the sewer, and we'll soon provide the water," said Reeve Howden.

"Not on your life," the Mayor answered. "We don't do things that way."

The meeting was a very harmonious one in spite of the fact that the points could not be agreed upon. Mr. Kerr, when it became evident that no mutual understanding could be agreed upon, asked to have the City apply to the Provincial Board of Health to have the hearing postponed for some days so that Mr. E. A. Peck, the regular solicitor of the township, could be present. Mr. Peck is at present in Quebec.

The Mayor replied that the Provincial Board of Health had set the date, and that anyway the Council was opposed to any further delay in the matter.

"Yes," interjected Ald. Duncan. "Two years ago we promised these factories sewer connection, and we have been dilly-dallying over the matter and have done nothing. Let us see what can be done, and do it at once."

So the hearing of the two Councils will be held on Tuesday morning in Toronto.

FUNERAL WILL BE HELD ON MONDAY

The body of the late Thomas Henry will arrive in Peterborough at 6 o'clock to-night. The funeral will be held Monday from the residence of Mrs. Myles Henry, 264 Brock street.

ASSAULT SLACKENS

Germans Have Given Up Efforts To Rush Liege Forts

LIKELY TO BE CUT OFF

BRUSSELS, Aug. 11.—(Via Paris)—According to the War Office, the fighting at Liege has now narrowed down to exchanges of shots between the German siege guns, which have been thrown about the unyielding forts, and the artillery of the forts themselves, which are picking off points in the German position at long range. Evidently the Germans have for the time abandoned their efforts to take the forts.

The commander of the forts at Liege, according to an official announcement, reports that all the forts are intact. The soldiers manning them are in fine health and spirits, and are amply supplied with provisions and munitions. There is no cause for alarm.

The population of Liege maintains its calm, and the official view is that the situation is quite satisfactory. All the approaches to Brussels are well guarded, to prevent anything in the nature of a surprise from reconnoitering parties of German cavalry. Small bodies of Uhlans have been signalled in all directions. Generally they had lost their bearings and surrendered immediately on being challenged.

The German army corps at Liege are in danger of being cut off from all sources of supplies. The German army invasion north of the River Meuse is being sharply attacked by the French and Belgian cavalry, mounted infantry and field artillery, and are said to have broke through the German line of communication at a number of points, having blown up bridges, torn up railroad tracks, and in other ways seriously interfered with transportation.

The German base toward the Dutch border is now being harassed by the French and Belgian cavalry, and their supports, all of which have pushed, by a series of dashes, far north of the River Meuse. The Germans already have relinquished the attack along the River Ourthe, which joins the Meuse about a mile from Liege, and are assembling to rebuff the oncoming French and Belgian forces.

There is considerable probability that the allied army is planning to assume the offensive.

The garrison of Liege, with its reinforcements, has retreated, according to the War Office, for "strategic reasons," and is retiring to Namur, where the French, Belgian and British armies are collected.

The check that Germany has received at the hands of the French and Belgians renders France able to place in position her reinforcements, and now Germany will be obliged to contest every inch of the way as she proceeds south.

It is reported that following their arrival at Warsage, in the Province of Liege, the German soldiers assembled all the inhabitants, and after selecting fourteen from among them, shot eight and hanged two of this number. The mayor was arrested, but was liberated by some German officers who had been his guests the previous day. Other instances of alleged outrages by German troops are cited in the Belgian Government press.

That patriotism is rampant is shown by the fact that the Belgian Minister of War has announced that 40,000 volunteers have presented themselves for service.

Hundreds of German spies swarm through Belgium. More than five hundred have been arrested, and one hundred were shot yesterday.

Captured spies were dressed in every conceivable sort of garb, including uniforms of soldiers and officers of the Belgian army, gendarmes, civic guards, etc. Some were found armed with bombs and revolvers, and others were caught while riding in automobiles carrying false numbers. Letters and telegrams bearing the counterfeit signature of the Belgian Minister of War were found on the person of some of the spies.

Heavy Fighting For Control Of Alsace

Germans and French Wage Bitter War---Germans Have Masses of Men---Location of Armies---French Have Success

LONDON, Aug. 11. — A terrific battle is believed to have been in progress during the day between the German and French forces near Neu Breisach for the control of Alsace-Lorraine. Neu Breisach is strongly fortified, and it is said that a division of the second German army has been concentrated there to check the advance of the French, who have already swept through Ferny, Muhlhausen, Altkirch and Colmar.

French reinforcements are reported to be rushing through the pass east of Belfort, in an effort to prevent a force of 40,000 Austrians from cutting the French line of advance between Altkirch and Muhlhausen. The Austrians, it is said, are in force near Basle, Switzerland.

The Germans, it is reported, are hurrying reinforcements to Neu Breisach from Strassburg.

The French War Office reports an important engagement pending between the French and German troops in Lorraine, below Saarburg. It is believed the French artillery is supporting an attacking column engaging Germans coming on from Saarburg.

Muhlhausen, Ferny and Colmar all are now in the possession of the French troops. Alsace is inflamed against the Germans, whose army is now concentrating on the front of Gen. Joffre, the French commander.

Neu Breisach, east of Colmar, and Strassburg, on its north, are the centre of the German advance. The German army of the lower Rhine, meanwhile, is proceeding against the French, whose lines extend across to the Rhine along the Swiss border.

The French cavalry patrol has been driven from the border town of Longuyon, in the department of the Meurthe et Moselle by German Horse, supported by infantry and artillery.

After wresting, in desperate encounters, the passes of Bonhomme and Sainte Marie, on the frontier below Muhlhausen, from the German troops, the French now occupy the village of Sainte Marie, Aux Mines. The fighting continues along the line.

Spread out in fan-fashion, the French army in Alsace, led by Gen. Joffre is moving from the Jura Mountains on the Swiss border through all of Alsace, to a point east of Colmar, now held by the French. This is the second mobilization centre of the French army which has its headquarters at Langris. The Germans, according to the War Office report, after making their first stand at Altkirch, retired rapidly and it was not until Colmar was reached that Gen. Joffre's men encountered any serious opposition. Muhlhausen fell without any long continued fighting.

At Colmar there was considerable sharp fighting, wherein the French are reported to have beaten back the Germans in a succession of brilliant bayonet charges. Many hand-to-hand encounters took place in this battle. The German forces are now said to be trying to dam the Seille river, which forms part of the boundary of Lorraine, being a tributary of the Mosel. This move, is said to be intended to prevent the French from assauling Metz.

German troops are said to be moving on France by way of Luxemburg, the main column being reported at Esch.

Eight Austrian regiments are said to have violated the neutrality of Switzerland, according to a Basle report, and they are now said to be on the Alsace border, preparing to attack the French in the rear in Alsace. These are said to be the choice of the Austrian Tyrol soldiery, hardy mountaineers capable of giving vigorous battle to the French. The Foreign Office is said to have demanded from the Austrian Ambassador a declaration regarding the intentions of Austria.

At the capture of Muhlhausen the French seized a big aeroplane factory, in which they found a number of machines intended for the German army. As they are near completion, they will be finished and then confiscated.

The plan of the German engineers to flood the valley of the Seille has proved ineffectual.

Both the French and German aerial force, in the fighting along the ridges of the Vosges Mountain range, have been most active.

Into upper Alsace yesterday came detachments of the famous Turcos, or native troops from the French colony of Algeria. They are a bold and well-trained body of fighting men.

WANTS 100,000 MORE MEN.

British War Office Issues Call—Report of Battle Near Canaries.

LONDON, Aug. 11. — Great Britain will raise a new volunteer army of 100,000 men for the war.

This announcement came yesterday afternoon from Premier Asquith, in the House of Commons, and is interpreted as signifying that the entire available British army is under orders for continental service, and that a considerable portion of it is already on the ground.

It is reported that a great army, composed of British and French soldiery, is being mobilized to help the Belgians retain Namur.

The previous published announcement that the British battleship fleet had sunk the German submarine U15, definitely locates the fleet, which must be somewhere off the German naval base at Heligoland, since the U15 was designed for coast defensive work exclusively, and therefore has a limited steaming area. As the Germans apparently are utilizing their coast defence submarines, it is taken to mean that the British fleet must have closed up on them and has them bottled. It is also probable that the British fleet is now subject to continuous attacks by submarines, destroyers and torpedo boats.

Reports from Madrid insist that a naval engagement has occurred near the Canary Islands, in which a German battleship was sunk and another captured. A message from Corfu reports heavy firing in the vicinity, which, if true, would indicate an engagement between the two elusive German cruisers and some British or French men-of-war.

While it is known that many British troops are on the continent, the closest secrecy is being maintained here regarding the soldiers' movements.

How To Absorb An Unlovely Complexion

(Phyllis Moore in Town Talk.)

The face which is admired for its beauty must have a satin-smooth skin, pink and white and youthful looking. The one thing I know of that can make such a complexion out of an aged, faded or discoloured one—I mean a natural, not a painted, complexion—is ordinary mucilaged wax. This remarkable substance literally absorbs the unsightly cuticle, a little each day, the clear, healthy, girlish skin beneath gradually peeping out until within a week or so it is wholly in evidence. Of course such blemishes as freckles, moth patches, liver spots blotches and pimples are discarded with the old skin. If you will procure an ounce of mucilaged wax at the drug store, use like cold cream every night washing this off mornings, you'll find it a veritable wonder-worker.

Another valuable natural treatment is a wash lotion to remove wrinkles which can be easily prepared. Dissolve 1 oz powdered saxolite in 1-2 pt. witch hazel. Bathe the face in this and you'll find it "works like magic."

WOULD JOIN THE FORCE

Servians, French and Russians Want to Enlist With Canada

MOBILIZATION IN THE WEST

OTTAWA, Aug. 11.—Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes stated last night that mobilization would start at once on the Pacific coast. He also announced that Servians resident in the United States had asked to be allowed to enlist with the Canadian troops. A whole regiment of Servians in Detroit wish to be allowed to join the contingent which will sail from Canada. The mobilization points in British Columbia will be Vancouver, Victoria and New Westminster. While no definite reason was given for the mobilization out there it is known that there has been some anxiety at the coast on account of the presence of German cruisers on the Pacific.

The closing of all the Canadian Atlantic ports, including Montreal, simultaneously with the closing of the British ports has started speculation here about the possibility of a big naval battle having taken place and some German warships having escaped. There has been no report of any such conflict, however, and the closing of the ports is generally taken as only a precautionary measure. When the German cruisers on the Atlantic have been removed, there will be no danger to British ships and the ports can open again.

The requests from the Servians in the U. S. who want to join the Canadian troops come from various parts of the country. They are reservists and are anxious to join in the fight in defence of their country against the Austrians and Germans but find it impossible now to cross the Atlantic. The Detroit regiment has drilled and is all ready to leave. The request of the Servians is being considered by the Government and the advice of the Imperial authorities will be obtained. French reservists especially in the west, are also anxious to join the Canadian contingent also and their case is being considered as well as that of the Russian reservists.

A suggestion which is being made, and which has support in very important circles, is that it would be well to establish a patriotic fund for the relief of the families of men who go to the front and for the men who are taken sick or wounded, the same as was done during the South African war.

During the South African war, a fund of some $500,000 was secured and $150,000 of this was never paid out. This would do as a beginning of the new fund, it is suggested.

The expectation now at militia headquarters, is that some of the Canadian troops will begin to assemble at Valcartier, near Quebec, about the end of this week, while the first contingent will all be there in two week's time and it will sail for the scene of the war in the first week of September. There will be about 24,000 in all, including the first army division of 20,000 men, the regiments of a thousand men each to be equipped by New Brunswick and Manitoba. Hamilton Gault's regiment, the automobile battery, which has been offered and accepted, and the battalion of 500 mounted men offered by the City of Calgary.

The Government has closed the port of Montreal as well as the port of Quebec, and as far as any invading ships entering the St. Lawrence are concerned there is not felt to be much danger. If they came up to Quebec they would meet the battery of heavy guns of the embankment, which have a range of ten to twelve thousand yards. Then if they turned to leave again, they would find themselves trapped by British cruisers, four of which are now on the North Atlantic and can be often reached by wireless. Invading ships would be trapped in the same way in the Bay of Fundy if they tried to reach St. John, and as for Halifax the entrance of the harbor is well protected by powerful guns. In addition the St. Lawrence and the maritime ports are protected by mines.

Spirituous Liquors Go Up.

MONTREAL, Aug. 11—War prices went into effect yesterday in all spirituous liquors and struck a hard blow to the many patrons. Beers and ales alone were retailed at the old price.

It was in whiskies, brandies, gins of all kinds that the change was felt. Certain drinks have been practically eliminated, the many brands which retailed at ten cents being now fifteen cents or two for a quarter, and in some places fifteen cents straight. In the more expensive brands, which retailed at fifteen cents, there has been an increase also of five cents.

Do you still buy soap by the cake? Have your grocer weigh the different kinds for you, and this is what you will see. 1 Bar of N.P. OUR SERIAL STORY PAGE

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

There's a chance, a mere possibility," said he, "that those boats, canoes, coracles or whatever they may be, belong to white people, far descendants of the few supposititous survivors of cataclysm. There's some slight chance that these people may be civilized, or partly so.

"Why, they're coming across the Hudson, at this time o' night, with what object and to what place, we can't even guess. All we can do is wait, and watch and—be ready for anything."

"For anything!" she echoed. "You've seen me shoot! Ye—now!"

He took her hand, and pressed it. And silence fell again, as the long vigil started, there in the shadow of the tower, on the roof.

For some quarter of an hour, neither spoke. Then at last, said Stern:

"See, now! The lights seem to be winking out. The canoes must have come close in toward the shore of the island. They're being masked behind the trees. The people—whoever they are—will be landing directly now!"

"And then?"

"Wait and see!"

They resigned themselves to patience. The girl's breath came quickly, as she watched. Even the engineer felt his heart throb with accelerated haste.

Now, far in the east, dim over the flat and dreary ruins of Long Island, the sky began to silver, through a thin veil of cirrus cloud. A pallid moon was rising. Far below, a breeze stirred the tree-fronds in Madison Forest. A bat staggered drunkenly about the tower, then reeled away into the gloom; and, high aloft, an owl uttered its melancholy plaint.

Beatrice shuddered.

"They'll be here pretty soon!" whispered she. "Hadn't we better go down, and get out guns? In case—"

"Time enough," he answered. "Wait a while."

"Hark! What's that?" she exclaimed suddenly, holding her breath. Off to the northward, dull, muffled, all but inaudible, they both heard a rhythmic pulsing, strangely barbaric.

"Heavenly!" ejaculated Stern. "War-drums! Tom-toms, as I live!"

CHAPTER XVI.

THE GATHERING OF THE HORDES.

"Tom-toms? So they are savages?" exclaimed the girl, taking a quick breath. "But—what then?"

"Don't just know, yet. It's a fact, though; they're certainly savages. Two tribes, one with torches, one with drums. Two different kinds, I guess. And they're coming in here to parley or fight or something. Regular powwow on hand. Trouble ahead, whichever side wins!"

"For us?"

"That depends. Maybe we'll be able to lie hidden, here, till this thing blows over, whatever it may be. If not, and if they cut off our water-supply, well—"

He ended with a kind of a growl. The sound gave Beatrice a strange sensation. She kept a moment's silence, then remarked:

"They're up around Central Park now, the drums are, don't you think so? How far do you make that?"

"Close on two miles. Come, let's be moving."

In silence they climbed the shaky ladder, reached the tower stairs and descended to many stories to their dwelling.

Here, the first thing Stern did was to strike a light, which he masked in a corner, behind a skin stretched like a screen from one wall to the other. By this illumination, very dim yet adequate, he minutely examined all their firearms.

He loaded every one to capacity and made sure all were in working order. Then he satisfied himself that the supply of cartridges was ample. These he laid carefully along by the windows overlooking Madison Forest, by the door leading into the suite of offices, and by the stair-head that gave access to the fifth floor.

Then he blew out the light again.

"Two revolvers, one shotgun, and one rifle, all told," said he. "All magazine firearms. I guess that'll hold them for a while, if it comes down to brass tacks! How's your nerve, Beatrice?"

"Never better!" she whispered, from the dark. He saw the dim white blur that indicated her face, and it was very dear to him, all of a sudden—dearer—far, than he had ever realized.

"Good little girl!" he exclaimed, giving her the rifle. A moment his hand pressed hers. Then with a quick intake of the breath he strode over to the window and once more listened. She followed.

"Much nearer, now!" judged he. "Hear that, will you?"

Again they listened.

Louder now the drums sounded, dull, ominous, pulsating like the hammering of a fever-pulse inside of a sick man's skull. A dull, confused hum, a noise as of a swarming mass of bees, drifted down-wind.

"Maybe they'll pass by?" whispered Beatrice.

"It's Madison Forest they're aiming at!" returned the engineer. "See there!"

He pointed to westward.

There, far along the forest-lane of Fourteenth Street, a sudden gleam of light flashed out among the trees, vanished, reappeared, was joined by two men, ten, a hundred others. And now the whole approach to Madison Forest, by several streets, began to sparkle with these feux-follets, weaving and flickering unsteadily toward the square.

Here, there, everywhere through te dense masses of foliage, the watchers could already see a dim and moving mass, fitfully illuminated by torches that now burned steady, now flared into red and smoky tourbillons of flame in the night-wind.

"Like monster glow-worms, crawling among the trees!" the girl exclaimed. "We could mow them down, from here, already! God grant we sha'n't have to fight!"

"S-h-h-h Wait and see what's up!"

Now, from the other horde, coming from the north, sounds of warlike preparation were growing ever louder.

With quicker beats the insistent tom-toms throbbed their rhythmic melancholy rune, hollow and dissonant. Then all at once the drums ceased; and through the night air drifted a minor chant: a wail, that rose, fell, died, and came again, lagging as many strange voices joined it.

And from the square, below, a shrill, high-pitched, half-animal cry responded. Creeping shudders chilled the flesh along the engineer's backbone.

"What I need, now," thought he, "is about a hundred pounds of high-grade dynamite, or a gallon of nitro-glycerine. Better still, a dozen capsules of my own invention, my 'Pulverite!'

"I guess that would settle things mighty quick. It would be the joker in this game, all right! Well, why not make some? With the chemicals I've got left, couldn't I work up a half-pint? Bottled in glass flasks, I guess it would turn the trick on 'em!"

"Why, they look black!" suddenly interrupted the girl. "See there—and there?"

She pointed toward the spring. Stern saw moving shadows in the dark. Then, through an opening, he got a blurred impression of a hand, holding a torch. He saw a body, half-human.

The glimpse vanished, but he had seen enough.

"Black—yes, blue-black! They seem so, anyhow. And—why, did you see the size of them? No bigger than apes! Good Heaven!"

Involuntarily he shuddered. For now, like a dream-horde of hideous creatures seen in a nightmare, the torch-bearers had spread all through the forest at the base of the Metropolitan.

Away from the building out across by the spring and even to Fifth Avenue, the mob extended, here thick, there thin, without order or coherence—a shifting, murmuring, formless, seemingly planless congeries of dull brutality.

Here or there, where the swaying of the trees parted the branches a little, the wavering lights brought some fragment of the mass to view.

No white thing showed anywhere. All was dark and vague. Indistinctly, waveringly as in a vision, dusky heads could be made out. There showed a naked arm, greasily shining for a second in the ruddy glow which now diffused itself through the whole wood. Here the watchers saw a glistening back; again, an out-thrust leg, small and crooked, apelike and repulsive.

And once again the engineer got a glimpse of a misshapen hand, a long, lean, hideous hand that clutched a spear. But, hardly, seen, it vanished into obscurity once more.

"Seems as though malformed human members, black and bestial, had been flung at random into a ghastly kaleidoscope, turned by a mad man!" whispered Stern. The girl answering nothing, peered out in fascinating horror.

Up, up to the watchers rose a steady, droning hum; and from the northward, even louder, even clearer, came now the war-song of the attacking party. The drums began again, suddenly. A high-pitched, screaming laugh echoed and died among the woods beyond the ruins of Twenty-eighth Street.

Still in through the western approaches of the square, more and more lights kept straggling. Thicker and still more thick grew the press below. Now the torch-glow was strong enough to cast its lurid reflections on the vacant-staring wrecks of windows and of walls, gaping like the shattered skulls of a civilization which was no more. To the nostrils of the man and woman upfloated an acrid, pitchy smell. And birds, dislodged from sleep, began to zigzag about, aimlessly, with frightened cries. One even dashed against the building, close at hand; and fell, a fluttering, broken thing, to earth.

Stern, with a word of hot anger, fingered his revolver. But Beatrice laid her hand upon his arm.

"Not yet!" begged she.

He glanced down at her, where he stood beside him at the empty embrasure of the window. The dim light from the vast and empty overarch of sky, powdered with a wonder of stars, showed him the vague outline of her face. Wistful and pale, she was, yet very brave. Through Stern welled a sudden tenderness.

He put his arm around her, and for a moment her head lay on his breast.

But only for a moment.

For, all at once, a snarling cry rang through the wood, with a northward surge of the torch-bearers, a confused tumult of shrieks, growls, simian chatterings and dull blows, the battle joined between these two vague, strange forces down below in the black forest.

Jesus' Teachings Harmonized the Law and the Prophets—Jewish Doctors of Divinity Had Failed to Teach the Deep Things of the Law—Opposition to Bible Study—Common People Heard Jesus Gladly—Jewish People Typical of Spiritual Israel—Jewish Age Typical of Gospel Age—Jewish Harvest Typical of Gospel Harvest.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible studies, and who have arranged for its insertion.]

August 9.—The Photo-Drama of Creation continues to awaken deep interest in Bible study. Its orderly presentation of the world's masterpieces of art illustrating sacred history deeply impresses the thoughtful spectator. Every subject dear to the Christian's heart is beautifully depicted.

Pastor Russell preached to-day from the text, "Woe unto you, lawyers! for ye have taken away the Key of Knowledge; ye entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered." (Luke 11.52.) He said in part:

In the New Testament the word lawyer has a very different meaning from our general usage. It applied to those religious teachers of the Jews who made special professions of sanctity and earnest desire to know God's will, as expressed in the Mosaic Law, and to teach the same to the people. The corresponding class of to-day are designated Doctors of Divinity. Our text, therefore, with this correction reads, "Woe unto you, Doctors of Divinity! for ye have taken away the Key of Knowledge; ye entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered."

It was the custom amongst the Jews that lessons from the Law and the Prophets should be read every day in their synagogues. The people were thus familiar with the letter of the Divine Law and promises. The majority of them were, of course, illiterate; for educational facilities were not then what they are now. As a result, only a few claimed to have a knowledge of the spiritual part of the Law and the Prophets. These were chiefly of the literary and wealthy classes. To these the common people looked for guidance respecting God's will and plan.

As an illustration: When the common people heard Jesus gladly, they were unwilling to trust their own judgments, but inquired, "Have any of the Scribes and Pharisees believed on Him?" Have the Doctors of the Law, the Doctors of Divinity, endorsed Him? They have made a study of these things, and we would rely more upon their judgment than upon our own. But not one of the Scribes and the Pharisees endorsed Him, and hence few of the people believed on Him and became His disciples.

The common people were hungry for the Message which Jesus brought. It is recorded that they said of Jesus' teachings, "Never man spake like this man." The nation would have gone over promptly to Jesus had the Scribes and the Pharisees, Doctors of the Law, set the example and given the word. Moreover, the teachings of Jesus harmonized the message of the Law and the Prophets, over which the Scribes and Pharisees and the Sadducees had long wrangled and disputed. Had the Doctors of the Law been as hungry for the Truth as were the people, undoubtedly all of their differences of interpretation of the Old Testament Scriptures would have been speedily removed in the light of the then Present Truth and knowledge of God, which was shining upon the Bible through the Holy Spirit, Jesus and the Apostles being Jehovah's mouthpieces.

In our text Jesus charged the Jewish Doctors of Divinity with the responsibility of having taken away the Key of Knowledge, refusing to use it themselves to enter into appreciation of the great blessings due and hiding it from the common people, who trusted them implicitly. We charge that the same thing is true to-day.

Not only were the Jewish people typical of Spiritual Israel, and their Age typical of this Age, and their Harvest typical of the Harvest, or closing time, of this Age, but additionally, now as then, God's people perish for lack of knowledge. (Hosea 4:6.) Now, as then, the Doctors of Divinity will not use the Key of Knowledge themselves, to enter heartily into the wonderful privileges and blessings now due, and additionally they have buried the Key of Knowledge, hiding it from the people under a mass of forms and ceremonies.

In our Lord's day the Jewish Doctors of Divinity, or Rabbis, contented themselves with telling the people what they should do and what they should not do, but did not teach the people—did not help them to any understanding of the deep meaning of the Law and the Prophets. In our context Jesus said to them, You bind heavy burdens upon the people, grievous to be borne, but you do not attempt to carry them yourselves.

So is it to-day with the Jewish Rabbis, as well as with other ministers; for instance, a minister stands as a representative and mouthpiece of the church creed, which in roundabout terms declares that whoever does not live a saintly life will suffer an eternity of torment. Is not this a grievous burden to put upon any conscientious soul? Has it not caused untellable anguish to many of God's people? Has it not driven away from God and the Bible thousands of the most intelligent minds in the world?

As the Jewish Doctors of Divinity carried no such burdens, neither do the Doctors of Divinity of Christendom. In private they acknowledge that they carry no such burdens. In public they give the inference that they do—not so much by positive terms as by implication, tone and inflection of the voice, and by the general fact that they stand for and are representatives of the creeds which so teach. It does not excuse these influential teachers for them to claim that in their official capacity they lose their personal responsibility and shift it upon those who made the creeds and those who adopt them. The people are no longer trusting the creeds. They realize that the creeds contain many inconsistencies, and that greater light is shining to-day from one page of the Bible upon another than shone in the days when those creeds were formulated.

The common people trust the Bible—Jesus, the Apostles and the Prophets. They know that all the creeds of Christendom claim to be built upon the inspired Record. They understand the Scribes and Pharisees of to-day, the Doctors of Divinity of Christendom, to give assurances that those creeds properly present the teachings of the Bible. The creedal chains would become ropes of sand if all the prominent Doctors of Divinity of Christendom came forward and publicly renounced the creeds, as they nearly all do in private conversation.

It was this matter of misleading the people, deceiving them, that constituted the basis of Jesus' charge against the Doctors of Divinity of old; and we believe that His judgment is very similar to-day respecting the Doctors of Divinity of Christendom—"Ye have taken away (ye have hidden) the Key of Knowledge. Ye have not entered in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered."

Christian people to-day are so disguested with the creeds which have separated them and their forefathers into six hundred different denominations that they are quite ready to discard all creeds, and to come together as one Church of the Living God to study the Bible in its own light.

The Scribes and Pharisees of our day are proving themselves to be the antitypes of those addressed by Jesus in our text, and have a substitute for knowledge. Taking away the Key of Knowledge, they say to the common people, "Do not bother your head about doctrines; leave doctrines to the clergy; let the clergy endorse all the creeds, however conflicting they be. We do this in order to lull you to sleep. There is nothing so disturbing to the Christian's rest as the discussion of the doctrines of Christ.

"If there be in any congregation those who cannot feel satisfied without some kind of Bible study, let them have it; but get them rather to discuss the geography of Palestine and the habits and customs of the people, etc., then the prophecies of old or the interpretation of them, as given by Jesus and the Apostles. We ministers will keep aloof from such Bible study; we will leave the impression that we understand these prophecies perfectly, and we will keep a watch upon the Bible classes, but will interfere only when we find some brother therein who is inclined to delve after the doctrines of Christ and the Apostles."

One minister, voicing this opposition to Bible study, especially along the lines of difference where it would be of special value, said, "The Church is like a great hospital. Everything like doctrinal discussion must be banished and excluded, just as in a hospital all noise is forbidden, in order that the patient may sleep; or just as in a nursery all noise is excluded."

Alas! It is too true that the nominal Church of Christ is like a hospital, many of the patients in which are blind, deaf, asleep and mentally confused. But the trouble is that these got into this condition because of a neglect of healthful exercise; and the keeping of them quiet will but turn the present hospital into a cemetery.

What the churches of all the denominations need is the Word of God—as presented in the words of Jesus and the Apostles. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life," said the Master. The sin-sick and lame, the blind, deaf and mentally perplexed need to hear the voice of Truth—"Wonderful Words of Life"—otherwise they will become more sick and will perish as Christians, only to become alive perhaps as "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God."

An Episcopal minister in our hearing urged his congregation to simply rest, and not to bother themselves about their own future or that of others. The Holy Catholic Church, he said, resembled a ship, in which the members should come as passengers to be carried to the Heavenly destination. They need not examine the compass or the chart or the machinery. All that they need to do is to sit down and enjoy the journey, trusting that their baptism and the Holy Spirit have given them a ticket to a proper destination.

Knowledge of God, the Bible declares, is indispensable for the attainment of the great Prize of the High Calling. Thus Jesus said, "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent." (John 17:3.) We are not to understand this to signify that any one who has merely been made acquainted with the fact that there is one Creator, and that Jesus Christ is His Son, is on account of this knowledge to be granted everlasting life. Some apparently think to be able to make void the various Scriptures which tell of the necessity of making our "calling and election sure" by so running as to obtain the prize.

Our Lord's words do not refer to a knowledge about God, but to a knowledge of God and His Son—a personal acquaintance with them. And such an intimate acquaintance is not obtained merely by an introduction, but by companionship. It signifies an intimacy of acquaintanceship, a familiarity. Everything in the Divine Word encourages those who accept the Divine invitation to draw near to God, to come into fellowship with Him.

But this knowledge of God which will bring a saintly few to salvation on the highest plane stands related to God's Word—the teachings of the Bible; for thus God exalted His Word, by making it the channel for spiritual refreshment and personal acquaintanceship with Himself.

Thus Jesus prayed for us, His followers, "Sanctify them through Thy Truth; Thy Word is Truth." Any who neglect the Divine Word will fail of the sanctifying power and thus fail of the ultimate acquaintanceship with God which alone will guarantee everlasting life. The reason why the Lord has thus arranged the matter and made knowledge of the Scriptures essential is, doubtless, that thus His faithful people may be benefitted; and they alone may receive the instruction which will profit them alone, but which would more or less injure others. Thus it is written, "Ye shall know the Truth, and the Truth shall make you free."

To this class our Lord says to-day, as He said to His Jewish followers eighteen centuries ago, To you it is given to know the Mysteries of the Kingdom of God; but to all outside these things are spoken in parables and dark sayings, that seeing they might see and not perceive, and hearing they might hear and not understand. To the outsiders—the Doctors of Divinity—is not committed the Key of Knowledge.

The Key of Knowledge consists of the faithful study of the Word of God, with an honest purpose to know the things that are freely given unto us of God. This implies a consecration of heart; for none others would really desire that they might do the Divine will. This also implies a faith in our Lord's promise that "if any man will do God's will, he shall know of the doctrine." It is this consecrated, conscientious Bible study that is lacking to-day—that is being discouraged by the great teachers and Doctors of Divinity.

Everything designed to help Bible study, to get rid of the darkness of the creeds and superstitions of the past, is opposed — but not openly. The Doctors of Divinity of our day, like those of Jesus' day, are wise and act as though they do know. But they do not know; they oppose real Bible study—not openly, but secretly, "for fear of the people." (Mark 11:32; 12:12.) The great religious leaders of the Jews were marked by our Lord as being less conscientious, less honest, than the masses of the people. Concerning the people we read that "Jesus was moved with compassion when He beheld the multitude, that they were like sheep without a shepherd."

And is it not so to-day also? Are not many of the Lord's people hungering and thirsting for the Truth, and greatly perplexed and discouraged because, going time after time to the religious leaders, they have received a stone instead of bread, a serpent instead of a fish—have received a false doctrine, a devilish misrepresentation of God's Character and of His Plan respecting humanity? These devilish doctrines of the Dark Ages St. Paul calls "doctrines of demons"; for the demons, the fallen angels, evidently have propagated them. They are to be found amongst all the heathen, but nowhere in so bad a form as amongst Christians of all denominations. Is there not therefore a great responsibility resting upon every conscientious minister of the Gospel, that he should step out from amongst the mass of the Doctors of Divinity, who are hiding the Key of Knowledge and are misleading the Lord's trusting sheep of nominal Christendom?

As we have already shown, they cannot keep penned or asleep those who constitute "the very Elect," nor can they keep knowledge from this saintly class. Our Lord, speaking of this time, said that the deceptions would be such that they would deceive, if possible, "the very Elect"; but in their case deception will not be possible, for the True Shepherd Himself will help them. But oh, what weeping of disappointment, what chagrin and gnashing of teeth will come shortly to the false shepherds, to the Key-hiding Doctors of Divinity, when they find that with all their endeavors to bolster up shams and superstitions in which they themselves do not believe, the entire fabric of Churchianity will collapse, as the Scriptures predict?

Is it any wonder that the Master prophesied respecting the unfaithfulness amongst His professed followers at this time, saying, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find the Faith upon the earth?"

Varieties of Bridges.

Bridges are seen hanging over rivers and upon noses. They also span some streets. They should not be confused with the game called bridge, which spans only time and money. Some bridges, like poker, depend entirely upon the draw. Bridges spend their time in heaving up and down and leaning against their towers. The object of bridges is to give very one a chance to get back from where he has been, or to go whence he can get back. Sometimes bridges are built over railroad tracks and spend all their time in saving people from being run over. A bridge which is thus employed is very happy, because it leads an upright life; also because the railroad company was sad when obliged to put it there.

Bridges are also used over chasms. Every chasm ought to have one. It provides a place for children to fall from; also it gives the chasm something to look up to.

TEN MILLION WILL DIE.

Chauncey M. Depew says Kaiser Thinks He Is a Napoleon.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—Chauncey Depew, formerly an ardent admirer and friend of the Kaiser, as exemplified in a speech on the 25th anniversary of the Kaiser's succession, said yesterday: "This is a crime of all the centuries. This crime is the outcome of the ambition and dream of a man visioning himself Napoleon. Ten million will die directly and indirectly, and there will be deplorable suffering for generations. It is incredible to think that one man can throw the whole world into conditions of the sixteenth century. Something is wrong with the Kaiser's environment, or his mental processes are reversed. War will mean the greatest impulse for socialism in history. It will mean the end of all kings with real power, and the end of all bullying bureaucracies."

Wedding Houses.

In olden times certain towns and villages in England used to possess a wedding house, where poor couples after they had been wedded at church could entertain their friends at a small cost, the only outlay being the purchase of such provisions for their guests as they brought with them, the house for the day being given free of payment. — Westminster Gazette

Elephant and Tiger Enmity.

One of the most interesting employments of the elephant is in hunting tigers. From the lofty back of his elephant, at a height which, increased by the howdah, may be twelve or fourteen feet above the ground, the hunter can take his aim at a tiger with a coolness that he would not possess if facing the animal on terra firma. If, as sometimes occurs, the tiger makes a leap for the elephant he seldom succeeds in attaining the man in the howdah, although the driver in his exposed position on the elephant's neck, is in greater danger.

There seems to be a natural enmity between elephants and tigers, although an elephant will not attack a tiger unless cornered or compelled to do so by the tiger's own fault. But then a good fighting elephant will if he can once get his tusks to bear on his enemy gore him to death or literally crush him by kneeling on him. It is said that the mere presence of a dead tiger will drive some elephants to fury.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

Odd Death Certificates.

Certificates of death are not documents where one usually seeks for humor, but there is frequently to be found in them much of the unconscious variety. Here, for instance, is how the cause of death is stated in the case of a laborer:

"Died from injuries received through a bull accidentally kneeling on his chest."

The consideration shown for the feelings of the bull is a fine touch and suggests grave questions on the moral responsibility of the lower animals.

Again, a man is stated to have "died from the effects of injuries received after being run over by a railway train in motion owing to a misunderstanding between deceased and an engine driver." This description of a rather ordinary railway casualty is excellent.—London Express.

FIRE AT GRIMSBY BEACH.

Thirty-Eight Houses Burn After Gasoline Stove Explodes.

GRIMSBY BEACH, Aug. 10.—Thirty-eight houses were totally destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon as the result of the exploding of a gasoline stove in the home of W. Terryberry. A total loss of nearly $60,000 was entailed. The explosion occurred shortly before two o'clock, and in a little more than an hour the thirty-eight homes were burned to the ground, despite the efforts of the cottagers to save them. Men, women and children worked heroically in attempting to stop the raging fire. The residents were successful in getting considerable of the household goods out of the buildings, but owing to the sparks most of this caught fire and was totally ruined.

Luckily no one was seriously injured. Mrs. Terryberry, in whose home the fire started was slightly burned, and a young lad had his arm broken in jumping off a roof. Several men had a narrow escape when they climbed to the roofs of the buildings.

LONDON'S UGLY CHURCH.

The First Sacred Edifice in the World to Be Lighted by Gas.

Readers of "Our Mutual Friend" will remember that Dickens gives a whimsical description of St. John's, Westminster, when referring to the home of the doll's dressmaker, Miss Jenny Wren.

"In this region," he writes, "are a certain little street called Church street and a certain little blind square called Smith square, in the center of which last retreat is a very hideous church, with four towers at the four corners, generally resembling some petrified monster, frightful and gigantic, on its back, with its legs in the air."

Lord Chesterfield said St. John's reminded him of an elephant with its legs in the air, and Charles Mathews likened it to a dining table in the same position.

St. John's enjoys the distinction of being the first sacred edifice in the world to be lit by gas. As may be imagined, the introduction of the new illuminant was deeply resented by many conservative spirits, some of whom went so far as to describe it as a sacrilege.—Manchester (England) Courier.

HAD DYNAMITE HIDDEN.

Toronto Police Arrest German on a Serious Charge.

TORONTO, Aug. 10. — Ninety-six sticks of the most powerful dynamite manufactured were located in the cellar of Henry Geercke, a German merchant, whose residence is situated about a quarter of a mile north of the half way house on the Kingston road. The seizure was made by Detective Taylor and County Constable Burns about eight o'clock Sunday night. Geercke was placed under arrest on a charge of having explosives in his possession, and was confined in No. 1 police station over night.

The local police, beyond admitting that the arrest is of the utmost importance, refused to discuss details with the press last night. That Geercke is a German patriot, who intended to sacrifice his own liberty and life in an attempt to strike a blow for the fatherland in the foremost British colony, is taken for granted by the authorities. Geercke says he found the dynamite on the road.

Another Pull.

The kaiser has a habit of gently tugging at his left ear when anything bothers him.

One day some years ago when he was on a visit to England he was handed a telegram. The contents of the message apparently displeased him, for he immediately began tugging at his ear.

The Prince of Wales, then a boy, watched the performance with considerable interest.

"Uncle," he said at length, "why are you pulling your ear?"

"Because I'm annoyed, I suppose," replied the kaiser.

"And when you're very annoyed," persisted the young prince, "what do you do then?"

"Then I pull somebody else's," announced his majesty viciously.—London Tatler.

Did His Part.

A little boy of five was invited to a children's party. The next day he was giving an account of the fun and said that each of the little visitors had contributed either a song, a recitation or music for the pleasure of the rest.

"Oh, poor little Jack!" said his mother. "How very unfortunate you could do nothing!"

"Yes, I could, mother," replied the young hopeful. "I stood up and said my prayers!"

Had Nervous Dyspepsia

With Frequent Sick Headaches and Much Pain After Eating — Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Cured.

Mrs. Susan oDbson, Spring Hill Mines, N. S., writes:—"It is with pleasure that I write to you in praise of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I was troubled with dyspepsia, and could not eat without suffering much pain; also had sick headaches frequently, and my nerves were in bad condition. About ten years ago I took a thorough treatment of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, using altogether 21 boxes, and since then can eat anything, have been freed from headaches, and my health has been greatly improved in every way. I gained 14 pounds in weight, and feel sure I owe everything to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. You may use this letter, and my neighbours can tell you of my condition before using this treatment."

Every Meal Brought Agony

But Since Taking "Little Digesters" He Can Eat Heartily

From Osgoode Station, Ont., comes a story of five years of suffering from Indigestion and Dyspepsia—five years of doctoring in vain—then "Little Digesters" and a complete cure. Mr. R. H. Ralph tells the story—his own story—thus:

"I have been a sufferer from Indigestion and Stomach Trouble for five years. I had treatment from several doctors. I did not find a cure until I began using "Little Digesters".

I can hardly describe how much I suffered at times. Every meal brought with it more or less agony and I seemed to have a complete distaste for food. I had almost begun to think my case incurable when I came across an advertisement in the papers about "Little Digesters". I decided to give them a trial. I am very thankful that I did so for I had not been taking them long when I found them helping me. I can now eat heartily and no longer feel pain and discomfort after eating."

Does Indigestion or Dyspepsia make your life miserable? Take "Little Digesters"—they will cure you or your money will be refunded.

A Strange Deadlock

And How It Was Broken

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

My childhood till I was six years old is very hazy. I cannot go back of that period except for a dim remembrance of my mother. I must have been without any child to play with, for I remember my aunt, by whom I was brought up, coming into my lonely playroom one day leading a little girl and saying:

"Here's a little sister for you."

My childhood from Ethel's coming was very different from what it was before. Why we did not meet other children I do not know, but I think it was because my aunt lived in the country, with no one of her own class living near her. But neither Ethel nor I seemed to need other associates, studying together under a tutor and playing together in perfect contentment. From this continued association with a girl I did not become effeminate, but Ethel formed a taste for boyish sports. Indeed, as a girl she was quite a tomboy, rivaling me in tree climbing, horseback riding and other exercises pertaining rather to boys than to girls. One of our favorite sports was to toss a baseball to each other, Ethel being as good a catcher as I. But she never learned to throw a ball like a boy. I presume that this peculiarity in a woman is owing to the difference in the masculine and feminine figures.

There was no well defined reason why Ethel and I were permitted to grow up with the understanding that we were brother and sister. My aunt was responsible for it, and she never made her reasons clear to either of us.

The supposed relationship certainly gave us a freedom when we were emerging from childhood into youth that we would not otherwise have experienced. Up to the time when I was sixteen and Ethel fourteen there was not the faintest suspicion that we were not brother and sister. Then I was required to go to a lawyer's office about some property of which I was possessed, and a paper was presented to me in which I saw it stated that I had no brothers or sisters living. The secret was out, but I was so pained that I pretended not to notice it and asked no questions about it.

When I met Ethel again I said nothing to her about my discovery, but felt that a great change had come over me.

When I came back from the city, where I had gone to the lawyer's office, Ethel threw her arms around my neck and kissed me. I had lost the brotherly feeling I had had for her, but it had not been replaced by any feeling differing from what I might have had for any other girl. I was filled with a deep regret. Ethel noticed it and asked me what was the matter, but I gave her no satisfaction. I did not care to distress her as I was distressed. I preferred that she should discover the truth herself.

From this time till I went to college Ethel was still my sister, but I was not her brother—at least, that describes our feelings toward each other. I wrote her regularly, addressing her as "Dear Sis," as I had always been used to doing, while she, replying, would begin with "Dear Brother" or "Dear Dick," sometimes one and sometimes the other.

During the four years I was in college I often wondered if Ethel had acquired the secret that I possessed. It seemed to me that she surely must know it, but I could not detect the slightest change in her treatment of me to indicate that she did. By the time I came home for my vacation between my sophomore and junior year she had grown to be a lovely girl, between seventeen and eighteen years of age.

I had recovered from the shock I had received in learning that I was not her brother and was now begin ning to be rather pleased that some other fellow need not take her away from me. Indeed, if we chose we could enter upon a far closer relationship than brother and sister.

"I HAVE KNOWN THAT FOR A LONG WHILE."

But I found myself in rather a peculiar position. I knew that there was no obstacle in the way of Ethel's being my wife, but she did not. At least, if she did she gave no evidence of such knowledge.

Meanwhile I was desirous of acting toward Ethel as a lover and not as a brother. But how could I do that while she supposed our relationship to be what we had grown up to consider it? She treated me precisely as she had always treated me. There was the same freedom that had always been between us—anyway, on her part.

Another year passed. I was twenty years old and had one more year in college before me. Ethel was eighteen and had returned from a seminary with her education completed. I was no longer able to treat her as a sister, and since I did not dare treat her as a lover I fell, so to speak, between the two. My treatment of her, being neither the one nor the other, was constrained. She made no complaint, but it seemed to me that the change in me had produced an equivalent in her. We played tennis and took long walks together, getting on well enough at the tennis, but on our walks there was none of that easy chat, mingled with jokes and laughter, of former times. I walked beside her with the secret between us, talking in that philosophic vein one is apt to fancy about the time he leaves his teens, while Ethel seemed at times a trifle bored.

Why did I not break the ice by telling her the secret? There were many reasons from one point of view and none from another. Why are certain events in families never referred to? For the same reason that I shrank from telling Ethel that I was not her brother, and, as to telling her that the spark of love for her had been kindled within me, how could I say such a thing to one who believed herself to be my sister?

This condition continued during my senior year in college. My letters to Ethel were bereft of either brotherly or lover-like expression, and hers to me were also neutral. But when I returned home a graduate a new element had been injected into the problem that was bound very soon to change the situation. I found a young man hanging about Ethel whose intentions were as plain as the sun in heaven.

His presence threw me into a fever at once. I found it difficult to treat him with ordinary civility. If Ethel had been my sister I should doubtless have freely discussed the matter of the attentions of this young man with her. As it was, I did not feel the right even to mention the matter. Besides, I was so inordinately jealous of her suitor that I should have doubtless spoken offensively.

In Ethel there was no change toward me. She was the same as she had been for the past two years. She must have known that there were fires burning within me, but she did not appear to notice them. She said nothing to me about the attentions of Mr. Jackanapes, as I considered him, but a sister is not likely to speak of a suitor to a brother until the brother first speaks to her.

My pentup feelings kept rising until the dam burst. One day, coming unexpectedly upon Mr. Jackanapes pleading his suit with Ethel, I lost my grip on myself and blurted out:

"What do you mean, sir, by wooing my—my sister without first asking permission from me, her natural guardian?"

He looked at me in astonishment, then said: "I beg a thousand pardons. If it is not too late may I now have that permission?"

"I prefer before giving my permission to consult with her."

"That being the case, I will withdraw."

Rising, he left Ethel and me together. I stood with my back half turned to her, scowling. I should have been conscious of having made a guy of myself, but I was not.

"Dick," said Ethel, "what's the matter with you?"

"Don't you think I should be consulted in a love affair of yours?"

"How do you know that this is a love affair of mine?"

"It certainly is one if this fellow who has intruded upon"—

"I can't help what he may feel for me. I have not accepted him and don't intend to."

"Thank God!"

"Why are you so concerned about whom I marry? For some years past you have acted coldly toward me."

"That was because"—

"Because what?"

"I discovered"—

"What did you discover?"

"That you and I are not brother and sister. We are no relation."

"I have known that for a long while."

"You have known it a long while! Why didn't you tell me?"

"Why didn't you tell me?"

I went to Ethel. Now that the barrier between us was broken down, my former brotherly treatment of her was a help. Sitting beside her, I took her to my arms, and, beginning as a brother, I rapidly developed into a lover.

Ethel and I were the children of two bosom friends. My mother died when I was a baby, and I was turned over to my aunt. Ethel's mother died when Ethel was four years old, and my aunt, being a near friend of her family, was prevailed upon to take the child, being chiefly moved by a desire to furnish me with a playmate. She gave me in addition a companion for life.

I have never been sure but that Ethel encouraged Mr. Jackanapes in order to break the deadlock there was between her and me.

OUR WORD "GARDEN."

In the Old Anglo-Saxon It Meant Private Inclosed Land.

We speak so freely and often of a "garden," assuming that there is some well defined common use of that word even among the authorities on gardening subjects. But the fact is that it has reached mighty elastic limits in their writings and speech and can be taken to mean anything from the enormous private parks and estates to the tin can glories of a back yard.

The word garden is from the old Anglo-Saxon root "gyrden," meaning an inclosure. At that time, due to the uncertain character of community life, it was either inclosed within fortifications or left unprotected and exposed without. This private inclosed land was the garden of that time. That is the meaning of garden in the Song of Solomon.

Gradually the sense of the word has changed to cover those parts of the land devoted to the cultivation of plants either for pleasure or for use; thus, we have the vegetable or fruit garden, and on the other hand, the wall, water or rose garden, etc.

Liberty Hyde Bailey defines a garden as "the personal part of an estate, that area which is most intimately associated with the private life of the home."

Whatever the sense in which it is used, the word "garden" always succeeds in carrying with it an atmosphere of romance and beauty, which countless ages of use cannot dim.—Philadelphia Record.

STOMACH TROUBLES DUE TO ACIDITY

SO SAYS EMINENT SPECIALIST.

So-called stomach troubles, such as indigestion, wind, stomach-ache and inability to retain food, are in probably nine cases out of ten simply evidence that fermentation is taking place in the food contents of the stomach causing the formation of gas and acids. Wind distends the stomach, and causes that full, oppressive feeling sometimes known as heartburn, while the acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach. The trouble lies entirely in the fermenting food. Such fermentation is unnatural, and acid formation is not only unnatural, but may involve most serious consequences if not corrected. To stop or prevent fermentation of the food contents of the stomach and to neutralize the acid, and render it bland and harmless, a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia, probably the best and most effective corrector of acid stomach known, should be taken in a quarter of a glass of hot or cold water immediately after eating, or, whenever wind or acidity is felt. This stops the fermentation, and neutralizes the acidity in a few moments. Fermentation, wind and acidity are dangerous and unnecessary. Stop or prevent them by the use of a proper antacid, such as bisurated magnesia, which can be obtained from any druggist and thus enable the stomach to do its work properly without being hindered by poisonous gas and dangerous acids. — M. AUSTRIA PROVOKES WAR

France Issues Declaration In Reply to Threatened Invasion.

PARIS, Aug. 11.—(Via London.)—It was officially announced last night that France had broken off diplomatic relations with Austria-Hungary. The French Ambassador at Vienna has left the Austrian capital, and the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador at Paris has asked for his passports.

There is much speculation here to-day over the effect this declaration will have on Italy's position. Under the terms of her treaty with Austria and Germany she is bound to come to their aid when they are "attacked." However, in the case of Britain and Germany, where there was a dual declaration, the Italian Government took the position that Britain was not the aggressor. In the present instance France acted, taking the initiative, but only after she had raised the point that her frontier was endangered by Austrian troops. Should Italy accept this position she can continue her plan of neutrality and refuse to be drawn into the war."

No Ships May Leave Until Further Notice Says Order.

HALIFAX, N.S., Aug. 11. — The port of Halifax has been temporarily closed. Naval officials announced no ships now in port will be allowed to sail until this order is countermanded. Any British ships arriving of the harbor will be convoyed in after the regular examination, but once in port they will not be allowed to take their departure. Customs house officials have been ordered not to clear any more vessels. One vessel which had been given her clearance yesterday morning was hastily recalled. Coastwise ships now in port will be seriously affected by this order. Fishing vessels and others from ports along eastern and western shores are not allowed to sail.

The fog signal at Meagher's beach will be discontinued on and after Tuesday morning according to orders given. No reason is given for the order.

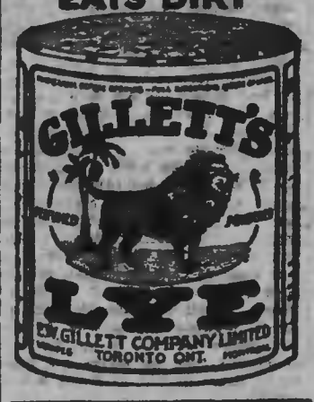
GILLETT'S LYE EATS DIRT



WHALES IN THE HUDSON.

They Gave the Dutch Colonists a Scare in the Winter of 1646.

In 1646 the colony of Hennselaerswijk had a very hard winter of it indeed. On the 25th of November the North river was closed and remained frozen for four months. A very high freshet followed, which destroyed a number of houses in the vicinity, nearly carried away the fort and inflicted considerable damage in the colony.

This, however, was not an unusual thing to the colonists, who in Holland had been accustomed to equally hard winters. Much worse was the appearance of a sea monster that they had never seen in their native country.

"At the same time as the freshet," says Antonie de Hoogne, secretary of Hennselaerswijk, "there appeared before me a certain fish of considerable size, snow white in color, round in the body and blowing water out of his head. What it portended God the Lord only knew. At the same instant this fish appeared we had the first thunder and lightning this year." The public astonishment had scarcely subsided when "another monster was seen, estimated at forty feet in length, of a brown color, having fins in his back and ejecting water in like manner high in the air."

This fish "which had first ascended the river (the North river) stranded on his return to sea on an island some forty miles from the mouth of the river, near which place four others grounded this year."

This island goes since by the name of Walvisch or Whale island.—Gazette de Hollande.

THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT.

Those Who Are and Are Not Eligible to the House of Commons.

The British parliament consists of the king (or queen regnant), the lords spiritual and temporal and the commons. The crown virtually appoints the lords spiritual, and the peerages of the lords temporal have been created by the crown, but the members of the house of commons are elected.

Every male British subject of full age and sound mind is eligible unless he is a peer, a member of the clergy of the Roman Catholic church, the Church of England or the Church of Scotland, a judicial officer, a holder of an office under the crown which has been created since 1705 or a pensioner from the crown.

A member of the house of commons holds office until the dissolution of parliament by proclamation under the great seal. The king summons parliament to meet and prescribes the time and place of its meeting, prorogues and dissolves it and commands the writ for the election of members to the house of commons. The present statute law exacts the meeting of parliament once in three years, but the annual voting of supplies has superseded obsolete statutes.

In addition to the general elections held after the dissolution of a parliament, there are byelections, occurring when a seat has become vacant by the death of a member, by his succession to the peerage or by his acceptance of office under the crown.

Mazzini Loved London's Fogs.

What feature of London has the strongest appeal for the foreigner? Mazzini loved above all things else the London fogs.

"When you look up," he wrote, "the eye loses itself in a reddish, bell shaped vault, which always gives me, I don't know why, an idea of the phosphorescent light of the inferno. The whole city seems under a kind of spell and reminds me of the witches' scene in 'Macbeth' or the Brockaberg or the Witch of Endor. The passersby look like ghosts. One feels almost a ghost oneself."

And years after he had left London for Italy he writes to a friend, "I think very often under these radiant skies of the London fogs and always regretfully."—London Spectator.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—Although war fever today sent the wheat market scurrying higher by far than had previously been known since the crisis began, the account was out of all proportion to the amount of business transacted. The trade is still a good deal short of what would be a normal aggregate under ordinary conditions, and it did not take much selling to bring about a decided reaction from top prices. The close was unsettled at 3c to 3½c above Saturday night's level. Corn finished at a net decline of ½c to 2¾c, oats off ½c to ½c, and provisions irregular, ranging from 50c loss to a rise of 17½c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 10.—Wheat prices were stronger on unfavorable weather conditions in the Canadian west, and in sympathy with prices in the American markets. By the gift of a million bags of flour to Great Britain by the Canadian Government the flour trade locally will not be affected, in the consensus of the millers' opinion.

Trading in all lines was quiet, there was a good existing demand for all grades of cash wheat, but offerings were nil, and owing to this being a bank holiday business was restricted. Winnipeg wheat opened ½c to 1¾c higher, and closed 1¾c to 4¾c higher.

Cash wheat closed 3¾c to 4¾c higher for contract grades. Cash barley unchanged. The number of cars inspected on Saturday was 90, as against 128 last year. Frosts at seven points were recorded in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, varying from freezing point to four degrees.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 10.—A very firm feeling prevailed in the local grain market today, with a good demand from local and country buyers for supplies, and a fairly active trade was done. The feature of the flour situation continues to be the great scarcity of winter wheat grades; in fact, supplies are exhausted on spot, and dealers state that it is impossible to get any offers from Ontario millers for either prompt or future shipment, and buyers in consequence find it difficult to fill their requirements. The demand for spring wheat flour continues active, and a large volume of business is doing for local and country account at firm prices.

The Dominion Government purchase of 1,000,000 bags have been pretty evenly divided up with all the leading Canadian mills of spring wheat flour. The trade in millfeed is very active, and the tone of the market is firm, with prices tending towards a higher level. Rolled oats are firm and fairly active. Butter is strong, with a fairly active trade passing.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Aug. 10.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 160 cars, comprising 2168 cattle, 1091 hogs, 1087 sheep and lambs and 265 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Stockers and Feeders.

Choice steers at $7 to $7.40; medium steers at $6.75 to $7; stockers at $5.75 to $6.50.

Milkers and Springers.

The number of milkers and springers on sale yesterday was not large, and prices ranged from $45 to $90, the bulk going at $65 to $75. There were two choice cows reported at $90.

Veal Calves.

Choice veals sold at $9.50 to $10.50; good at $8.50 to $9.50; medium at $7.50 at $8.50; common at $6.50 to $7.50; inferior at $5 to $6.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep: Prices are firmer and lambs were lower. Sheep, light ewes, sold at $6 to $6.50; heavy ewes and rams at $4 to $5; yearlings at $7.50 to $8.25; lambs at $9 to $9.50, the bulk selling at $9.25; cull lambs at $7.50 to $8.50.

Hogs.

The market for hogs was firmer. Selects fed and watered sold at $10.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Aug. 10.—At the Montreal stock yards, west end market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending Aug. 8 were 1500 cattle, 2500 sheep and lambs, 2500 hogs and 1100 calves. The offerings on the market this morning for sale amounted to 1250 cattle, 1700 sheep and lambs, 1350 hogs and 750 calves.

A feature of the cattle trade today was the good demand for canning stock. The offerings were fairly large, but owing to the keen competition between Canadian and American buyers the feeling in the market was strong and prices ruled fully 25c per 100 pounds higher than this day week, with sales of common bulls at $5.25 to $5.50 and cows at $3.75 to $4.50 per 100 pounds. There was no actual change in the condition of the market for butchers' cattle, but the feeling was very firm under a good demand with ample supplies to fill all requirements, and an active trade was done. Demand was principally for good steers and sales of carloads were made at $6.25 to $6.50, while fairly good stock changed hands at $7.75 to $8 per 100 pounds.

Owing to the stronger feeling in the Toronto market for hogs at the latter part of last week and the advance in prices of 15c to 25c per 100 pounds, a much stronger feeling developed in the local market and prices advanced 25c to 50c per 100 pounds.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—Cattle—Receipts, 12,000; market, higher; beeves, $7.75 to $10.40; Texas steers, $6.50 to $9.10; stockers and feeders, $5.50 to $8; cows and heifers, $3.60 to $9.40; calves, $6.50 to $11.75.

Hogs—Receipts, 16,000; market, higher; light, $9.60 to $10.20; mixed, $9.15 to $10.15; heavy, $8.85 to $10; rough, $8.85 to $9.10; pigs, $5.25 to $9.50; bulk of sales, $9.25 to $9.90.

Sheep—Receipts, 24,000; market, steady; native, $4.30 to $6.15; yearlings, $6.10 to $7.25; lambs, native, $6.75 to $8.55.

Baby Eczema Becomes Chronic

Causing Great Suffering and Anxiety —Prompt Relief and Cure by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

This is one reason why every mother should know about Dr. Chase's Ointment, since it is an unfailing cure for all itching skin diseases.

Mrs. F. Clarke, Belmont, Man., writes:—"My baby had eczema on her ear. The sore was very bad, and nothing seemed to do her much good. Hearing of the remarkable cures Dr. Chase's Ointment was making, we sent for some, and after the third application the sore began to heal. I am glad to say that it is quite well now, and we give the credit to Dr. Chase's Ointment. We cannot recommend this preparation too highly."

Here is another letter, which tells of the cure of a five-weeks-old baby: Mrs. Wallace Mingon, River John Road, Colchester County, N.S., writes: "My little girl took eczema when she was five weeks old. Though we doctored her until she was nearly a year old, she got no better. I was advised to use Dr. Chase's Ointment, and this treatment completely cured her."

Immense German Army Forces French From Mulhausen

100 SMITH FARMERS FOUGHT SUNDAY FIRE

50 Acres of Pasturage and Brush, Dry as Tinder, Were Swept Clean —Heroic Measures Checked a Serious Looking Outbreak.

CAUSE IS UNKNOWN

About two hundred farmers of Smith township spent a lively afternoon on Sunday fighting a bush fire that swept through fifty acres of pasturage and underbrush on the property of Smith Milburn and Norman Edmison between the third and fourth concessions and east of the Chemong Road.

It was first noticed shortly after the dinner hour and was then making a start from the south-west end of the swamp on the east side of the Milburn farm. There was nothing damp about the swamp, for the prolonged dry spell had left it like tinder. A fresh wind from the south-west licked the flames through the long, dry grass almost as fast as a man could run. Mr. T. Sutton, whose farm was north-east of the swamp and in a direct line with its approach, sent the S.O.S. call to the neighbouring farmers and in a short time the number of fire fighters was close to one hundred. They came from all sides and within a radius of three miles. From Bridgenorth came a number of experienced bush fire fighters, rushed to the scene in automobiles. They were employees of the eKlly mills, and their assistance made a decided difference.

STOUT DEFENCE.

The extension of Hilliard Street is the eastern boundary of the Milburn property and across the road is Norman Edmison's farm. North of the latter's is T. Sutton's place. At the north end of Edmisons' property there is a hardwood bush and the fire swept across the road and blazed afresh in the Edmison bush. Hence, the fire fighters had two attacks to oppose, one on each side of the road.

PLOUGHED FIRE BREAKS.

They ploughed up the ground along the north side of both patches, and out there in the sultry heat of mid-August, with the additional discomfort of smoke-filled eyes, and smoke drugged lungs, the Smith farmers fought doggedly and successfully. More than one hundred men with teams of horses ploughed and dug up the earth, burying the dried leaves that invited the flames. Even the women recalling the parable of the man who would have recovered his ass had it fallen in a well on the Lord's Day, turned out and carried water for the men to slake their thirst.

The fight was concentrated at the north end of the two patches of wood and the flames were checked from crossing into Sutton's property above Edmison's and J. McManus' grain fields on the Findlay farm north of Milburn's. Had the fire licked into these fields it might have gone through to Chemong Lake, devastating a wide stretch of country. Grain in stooks on McManus' land was hurried into the barns as a precautionary measure. Chief Howard went out with chemicals to use as a protection for residences, but his services in this regard were not required.

SOME OF THE LOSS.

Smith Milburn lost about two miles of rail fence. Adjacent grain fields were untouched.

The fire was under control at five o'clock, but a score of men remained on duty during the night. To-day the "black muck" is smoking, some fifty acres have a black top-dressing, but the fields are safe. The farmers declare that the success of their fight is mainly due to the facility of the telephone, by which the farmers were rallied to fight the fire.

None of the farmers knew the cause of the fire.

Manager Clayton Gives Proceeds Of Wednesday

Money Taken in His Three Theatres Will Go For a Hospital Ship

To the Editor,—

Sir,—A committee of the Trades and Labour Council interviewed Manager Clayton as regards helping the Daughters of the Empire to raise $100,000 proposed by them for a Canadian Hospital Ship, to be placed at the services of Great Britain during the present war.

Mr. Clayton was only too pleased to have the committee interview him on this important subject, and as a loyal British subject has consented to hand over the takings of his three theatres—"The Royal," "Princess" and "Red Mill" Theatres—on Wednesday next, the 12th August (including matinee performance in the afternoon) towards this glorious and patriotic effort of the Daughters of the Empire.

It is only those who have seen the horrors of a battlefield and have experienced the sights of the wounded (many dying) can realize the difference between a Field Hospital and an Hospital Ship.

Hoping the people of Peterborough (including our most prominent citizens) will appreciate the kindness of Mr. Clayton, and will visit his theatres next Wednesday, so as to enable the "Daughters of the Empire" to equip this Canadian Hospital Ship for the sick and wounded.

COMMITTEE,
Trades and Labour Council

P.S.—The Trades and Labour Council will supply the ticket collectors at these theatres on Wednesday next.

Salvation Army Entertained The Old People

The Protestant Home desires to acknowledge the kindness of the Salvation Army in providing a very pleasant outing for those of the inmates who were able to go yesterday afternoon. GERMAN HORDES FORCE THE FRENCH FROM MULHAUSEN

War Office in Paris Admits That Gen. Joffre's Lines Have Fallen Back Before the Immense Army the Germans Have Pushed Forward From Strassburg--Both Powers Are Lined Up For a Mighty Struggle

RUSSIANS HAVE LARGE ARMY IN AUSTRIA

Paris, Aug. 11---The War Office officially announces that the French Troops were compelled to evacuate Mulhausen, and are making a stand near the French Frontier.

PARIS, AUG. 11.—THE REAL CONFLICT FOR THE POSSESSION OF ALSACE IS IN PROGRESS. THE GERMANS HAVE DRIVEN THE FRENCH FROM MULHAUSEN CITY AND THE BATTLE IS ON IN THE OUTSKIRTS OF THE CITY.

THAT THE BATTLE IS GENERAL IS INDICATED BY THE ADMISSION FROM THE FRENCH WAR OFFICE, THAT AN ARMY OF INVASION UNDER GENERAL JOFFRE WAS COMPELLED TO EVACUATE MULHAUSEN UNDER AN ATTACK "FROM AN OVERWHELMING FORCE." THE GERMAN ARMY COMPRISES THAT WHICH HAS BEEN MASSED AT STRASSBURG. IT IS UNDERSTOOD TO NUMBER NEARLY HALF A MILLION MEN, AND IT WAS ORIGINALLY DESIGNED TO LEAD THE INVASION OF FRANCE FROM A POINT NEAR THE SWISS BORDER. THAT THIS ATTACK WAS LOOKED FOR BY THE FRENCH WAR OFFICE IS INDICATED BY THE ADMISSION THAT ADDITIONAL REINFORCEMENTS ARE BEING RUSHED TO THE FRENCH ARMY INVADING ALSACE. ON THE OUTCOME OF THE PENDING BATTLE WILL DEPEND WHETHER THE FRENCH CAN MAINTAIN A FOOTHOLD IN ALSACE OR WHETHER THEY WILL HAVE TO FALL BACK ACROSS THE BORDER TO THE PROTECTION OF THEIR HOME FORTIFICATIONS.

IN BELGIUM THE GERMAN INVADING ARMY IS MOVING TOWARDS WATERLOO AND BRUSSELS, BUT SO FAR HAS FAILED TO PENETRATE THE BELGIAN TERRITORY WEST OF TONGRES, WHERE TWO DIVISIONS OF THE FRENCH CAVALRY WITH SUPPORTING INFANTRY AND ARTILLERY ARE OPERATING. IT IS NOW CONSIDERED CERTAIN THAT THIS IS THE MAIN ARMY OF INVASION.

LAST DANCE PATRIOTIC

Unusual Scene at Stoney Lake Saturday Night When Medley Two-Step Was Played

ANTHEMS WERE SUNG

A pleasing incident and one that is significant of the feeling of Canadians in all parts of the Dominion, took place at the conclusion of the dance at Juniper Island on Saturday night. Mr. Asa Huycke, assisted by Mr. W. Wilson, violinist, was supplying the music, and for the last two-step he played a medley of stirring patriotic airs. Before the music had ceased, and just as the piano was resounding to the strains of "Rue Britannia" the dancers ceased of one accord and three rousing cheers were given by all present for the armies and navies of England, France, Russia and Belgium. The incident served to show that in the midst of gaiety the thoughts of the youth and beauty present could not entirely leave the grave crisis in Europe that is threatening the welfare, and, perhaps, the existence of the British Empire. The orchestra also played "Dixie" and "Yankee Doodle," which were generously honoured, but the finale, "God Save the King" was sung with unusual fervour.

DELAYED BY LACK OF OUTGOING STEAMER

Mr. Louis Houedry, who arrived at Montreal a day or two ago for the purpose of embarking for Paris, found that no boat was leaving for France and he was in consequence obliged to return, arriving early this morning. He is waiting instructions, however, and will embark on the first boat leaving for France.

Leaves In A Few Days For Front

Mr. Stanley Fenwick in the City at His Home

Mr. Stanley Fenwick of Toronto, is spending the day at his home here, prior to his departure later in the week for Halifax, from where he will sail to join the forces at the front. Mr. Fenwick is a member of the Second Field Battery, Canadian Engineers. He is returning to Toronto tomorrow and from that City goes on Friday to Halifax.

BEACH'S PATRIOTIC WINDOW DISPLAY

Mr. Robt. Beach, proprietor of "Parker's," has drummed up the first patriotic show window in the City, at 177 Charlotte Street. It was no trouble for the most expert drummer in the Dominion. All the needed was the patriotism which he keeps in stock and the idea, which sprang from it, and was promptly carried out very artistically and effectively. The window opening is draped on three sides with British and Canadian flags, with a background, having in the centre a device, "long live our King" flanked by symphols of the service, a regular army artillery tunic and an infantry mess jacket. In the middle of the window floor is a copy of the celebrated cavalry charge "Scotland for ever"; on the right of this, a very strong portrait of the British Lion, and on the left, a group of the "lions and cubs". The whole window is very timely, and Mr. Beach has set a pace for other window decorators which they will have to work hard to beat.

BIG ORDER OF TENTS AND ARMY KIT BAGS

Being Rushed For Militia Department by J. J. Turner and Sons —Reminder to Employees of Patriotic Assistance They Can Lend.

NIGHT AND DAY WORKERS

Messrs. J. J. Turner and Sons are working night and day on an order from the Militia Department for 10,000 kit bag and quite a number of army marquee tents. As a result the machinery is running night and day to hurry the order in time for the first sailing of Canadian Overseas recruits. The goods are for immediate use and the staff is putting forth an extra effort to facilitate the movement of the troops. In this connection a banner was prepared and hung in the workroom reminding the employees that while everyone cannot go to war, those who remain behind often have opportunities of aiding presented to them. The banner prompts the use of extra time to rush the war order. It is hardly necessary to say that the staff are determined to do their duty and to make a personal sacrifice if necessary.

SUGAR UP 50c TO-DAY

One-Half a Cent a Pound Advance is the Real War Price

NO CAUSE FOR ALARM

Just before going to press Mr. E. F. Mason informed The Examiner relative to an interview of this morning that granulated sugar was up 50c a hundred pounds. This news came today in the face of a letter issued last week to the consuming public and to the trade that there was no occasion for nervousness about prices. At that time there was an advance of ten cents, but the raise of fifty cents in one quotation as reported to-day came as a sharp surprise, and the reassurance published by a prominent sugar company very recently, will leave the public in something of a daze.

Belgium Is Overrun With German Spies

BRUSSELS, Aug. 10. — Belgium has been covered with a network of German spies. Six hundred already have been arrested and one hundred were shot today.

Some of the Germans captured were wearing uniforms of gendarmes, civic guards, and officers of the Belgian army. Many of the spies captured were armed with bombs and revolvers, and were riding in automobiles bearing false numbers. They also had in their possession telegrams and letters with the counterfeit signature of the Belgian Minister of War.

Just before and after the fighting began private signs were discovered on bridges, military works and aqueducts, indicating that those structures should be blown up. Severe precautions have now been taken by the military authorities, and no one is admitted at the railway stations without military permits. Automobiles are halted at every mile.

CITY TO PROVIDE ALL THE WORK THAT IT CAN

No Need For Alarm, Says the Mayor—Panic About Food Prices is a Mistake

(Toronto Star)

"There is no need for the citizens of Toronto to be alarmed," said Mayor Hocken to-day in a statement to the Star on the war situation as it affects Toronto.

"There is no timidity at the City Hall, as one paper intimates. We are going ahead with all the public works that we can touch, and all the local improvement, the new registry office, the Bloor street viaduct, and other works will be gone on with as if there was no war. We will do everything that we can to provide work that will give wages to men. We are opening tenders to-day for public works. I would ask all employers not to dismiss their men, but rather to keep them at work for at least part of the time. I am doing that myself. Though the printing business has dropped and there is nothing to do part of the time, I am keeping all my men on. If all employers would do this it would ease the situation a whole lot."

There is no need to fear a big increase in food prices. The panic in some quarters in regard to food is a great mistake. I know a man who has stocked his cellar with $100 worth of provisions and his family is away at a summer resort. The stuff will simply be there until they eat it up, and by that time everything will be normal. Canada and Toronto are in good condition and if people are not panic-stricken there should be no distress."

A new surface drain is being laid under the G.T.R. Charlotte Street crossing.

Botha's Men Are Strong For Britain

LONDON, Aug. 10.—A Capetown despatch to the Morning Post shows that Dutch leaders there are intent on supporting the Imperial Government in the present crisis. A meeting attended chiefly by Dutch African leaders sent to Gen. Botha for despatch to the Imperial Government a resolution declaring that the local Africanders could be depended upon to defend the Union Jack to their last cartridge.

The convener of the meeting stated that he himself had been a rebel and that many of those present had also been rebels. The union with Great Britain suited them so well that they would shed the last drop of their blood for the British flag, and for South Africa. He added that the ex-rebels in Aliwal wanted the Germans to know that Britain could firmly rely on them.

The proceedings began and ended with the singing of the National Anthem and Rule Britannia, a thing almost undeard of in Aliwal North.

Von der Horst, most prominent of Hertzogites has issued a manifesto expressing the readiness of his party to support the Imperial Government in order that the cause of right should prevail.

WAR LAW AND COURT LAW.

The moment Great Britain declared war against Germany (and Austria) every part of the far-flung Britannic Empire was at war with the powers hostile to the Mother Country. The fact is that, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier declared in Parliament years ago, when Britain is at war Canada it at war. The same conditions as in the Mother Country in regard to the subject of Germany and Austria come into existence here and in every British dominion.

Th declaration of war places the subjects of these countries in Canada outside the pale, privileges, and protection of our laws civil and commercial. In their case the processes of civil law give place to the short and sharp shift of martial law, if we want to exercise the power that a state of war confers. Theoretically, at least, the subjects of hostile countries such as Germany and Austria, living amongst us, are at the mercy of our people; their goods, their possessions can be seized by land or sea. The non-combattants of hostile countries domiciled or otherwise remaining amongst us, are subject to all sorts of constraint, if we should see fit to exercise the authority that a state of war confers upon us. An enemy of Great Britain in time of war cannot recover in a civil suit his othrwise just legal claims against a debtor. In effect every enemy of the British Empire who finds himself amongst us is to be considered as practically a prisoner of war, his possessions and his person, his personal liberty and his life are at our mercy, since Great Britain has not, so far relaxed the stringent conditions under which in time of war the subjects of hostile countries remain in British territory, in any part of the world. Such persons, obviously cannot be allowed to leave the country—to return to their own and join their armies to fight against us. They are here practically as has been said, prisoners of war, and their treatment by the Canadian authority whether harsh or lenient, will autogether depend upon their behaviour. The moment one abuses his opportunities and takes any action detrimental to British interests he will not only forfeit all consideration, hut will force consideration of drastic measures towards all subjects of Germany or Austria who may remain or be detained in this country.

The same principle of action and regard that limits the ilberty of action and impose constrant upon subjects of hostile countries—the precautionary protection of British interests—justifies the "moratorium," which represents the legal rights accorded to debtors, to withhold or delay for a fixed period the payment of their debts. This seems to be t just and justifiable measure to take in time of war. In the case of a citizen is called suddenly to drop everything and take the field to fight for his country, he may leave unpaid debts, which he would have paid willingly if he had had the present means and opportunity. It would not be fair to penalize the man for doing his duty and add to the distress of his family to allow a greedy creditor to enforce collection by perhaps seizing the property of the debtor, and destroying the home which with other homes of the country, he took arms to defend. The "Moratorium" gives the delay and affords the opportunity for making arrangements to satisfy the debt, without resort to summary, extreme, and in many cases ruinous, measures.

CAN'T DO ANY HARM.

La Presse, Montreal, prints the following editorial note:

"A Peterborough journal complains that the French Canadians of to-day are slow in declaring the duty of Canada towards the Empire. The loyalty of our people is too lively and too sincere to need "warming up" by empty professions. It has already been translated gloriously on the field of battle, and only people of evil minds and bad faith can call it in question."

La Presse does not name the journal. It is, however, not the Examiner. The guilty journal, itself, and the public know well what journal is meant. Such journalism cannot be too severely condemned. Any paper that takes an attitude and makes statements that would tend to create the slightest danger of impairing the unanimity and good understanding amongst our people, or insult a section of our population, is, in effect, doing the work of a traitor at this critical time. It is an insulting thing to assume the Pharisaic attitude that loyalty and patriotism are a matter of copyright and party label. A man or a journal can be an enemy to his country and effectively a traitor to its interests without taking up against its peace and harmony and best interests any other arms than the ben of the traducer. However, the good understanding between the diverse leading races of Canada is too well based; the entente between Great Britain and France is too cordial to be injured by any petty exploitation of partizanship. Such pin pricks are only skin deep and can't do much harm, and won't do any good to the cause sought to be served.

COAST DEFENCE

It is already being demonstrated that the dreadnought is not the kind of ship required to guard our coasts in time of trouble. The armoured cruiser is the thing for the kind of work that is demanded now. We have the British cruiser Essex policing our seas, escorting ocean liners, and now steaming to Bermuda, if she has not already got there, with an important German prize. The Canadian "tin-pot" navy is also doing something. The Rainbow is busy on the Pacific Ocean, and if she is not overcome by numbers will justify herself. The Niobe is being brought to effectiveness for service, something that might haye been done with present advantage any time these two or three years. She will also be able to do good service.

The Toronto Star, under the heading of "The Essex and Niobe," says:

The cruiser Essex is a busy bee these days. After escorting ocean liners safely in to Halifax she is now reported to be running to Bermuda with a prize.

When the Niobe is restored to usefulness there will be two of them. She is a larger vessel than the Essex, having more tonnage and guns. The Niobe has 11,000 tons displacement and the Essex 9,800. The Niobe carries sixteen six-inch guns, the Essex fourteen. She has eleven smaller guns and the Essex has thirteen. But in addition the Niobe has three torpedo tubes.

When the two of them get together they will make something of a force, and will be able to protect shipping against any attack likely to be met with on this side of the water.

The little Rainbow, in the meantime, may, according to a rumour, have had an engagement with the German cruiser Leipzig in the Pacific. Although the smaller of the two, it is said that she would not feel under the necessity to evade the contest.

BRITISH ALL.

Two pregnant words of support from Ireland uttered by John Redmond are epoch making in their way. We cannot conceive words were ever more apt to stir the hearts of Britons. The offer of Redmond and their fulfilment will for ever dissipate the ground for distrust which has been honestly felt by many of the opponents of Home Rule. That distrust cannot live in the white light of such burning patriotic words as those uttered by John Redmond when he assured the Government every soldier might be withdrawn from Ireland, her armed sons—the Catholics of the South and the Protestants of Ulster would defend Ireland. It was a veritable stroke of statesmanship and patriotism.— St. John, (Newfl.) Telegram.

RULE BRITANNIA.

When Britain first at Heaven's command
Arose from out the azure main,
This was the charter of her land,
And guardian angels sung the strain:
Rule, Britannia! Britannia rules the waves!
Britons never shall be slaves.

The nations not so blest as thee
Must in their turn to tyrants fall,
Whilst thou shalt flourish great and free
The dread and envy of them all.

Still more majestic shalt thou rise,
More dreaded from each foreign stroke;
As the loud blast that tears the skies
Serves but to root thy native oak.

Thee haughty tyrants ne'er shall tame:
All their attempts to bend thee down
Will but arouse they generous flame,
And work their woe and thy renown.

To thee belongs the rural reign;
Thy cities shall with commerce shine;
All thine shall be the subject main,
And every shore it circles thine!

The Muses, still with Freedom found,
Shall to thy happy coast repair;
Blest Isle, with matchless beauty crown'd
And manly hearts to guard the fair:—
Rule, Britannia! Britannia rules the waves!
Britons never shall be slaves!

—J. Thomson.

THE CALL TO ARMS

Mars now mounts his fiery car.
Wild, the thunders of the war,
Sweep across the seas afar—
Canada arise.

Loud the murderous cannons roar,
Fierce destructions hourly pour,
Echoing from shore to shore,
Fast the challenge flies.

The Teuton foe is at her gate,
In arrogance and hitter hate
And old England, free and great,
'Gainst him takes the field.

Rise then, ye brave Canadians, too;
Spread to the breeze your banners blue;
And face the foe, as heroes do—
Who will never yield.

Proudly let your banner fly,
The presumptious foe defy;
Put your trust in God, on high,
He, the brave, will shield.

To the God of battles strong,
Threads of life and death belong;
And yours shall be the victor's song
Or a laurelled grave.

Ye wives and mothers, cheer them on;
Grudge not husband, brother, son;
Teach them that duty must be done,
Though your hearts may break.

Cheer them on what e'er befall
At our King's and Country's call,
Perchance to glory or a pall,
And old England's sake.

For Canada will not withhold
A worthy navy, sailors bold,
Nor millions of her minted gold,
Aught that she can do.

In England's cause a part we'll bear,
And neither life nor limb will spare;
To her last drop of blood will dare
Foreign foes subdue.

Sure every race that here has found
A home on free Canadian ground
Must feel their grateful pulses bound
With affection high.

For the land that gave them bread
And a place to lay their head,
Loyally their blood would shed,
For her, live or die.

From Newfoundaland, bleak and bare,
To Vancouver's Valleys fair,
Many a heart will raise a prayer,
And with Heaven will plead.

That grim war may quickly end
Your righteous cause, kind Heaven defend;
Protection, help, and comfort send
In your hour of need.

—Mrs. A. F. Calder.

BETTER BABY CONTEST

Have you a baby in your house?
Or has your next-door neighbour a baby of whom you are fond?

If so, you will be interestedi n the Better Babies Contest to be held at the Public Library in Peterborough on 5th October.

Why?

Because the public in general is just beginning to realize that a great deal depends upon just your baby or your neighbour's baby. The health of the nation is built on the health of each baby, and physicians will tell you that with proper care and feeding of children the entire health of the nation can be built up. Healthy babies mean healthy children in the public schools. Thus the expense of trying to educate defective children is reduced for the tax-payer. Healthy children in the school-room grow into healthy, vigorous, stainsed workers in the industries and professions. And best of all, healthy babies mean peace and happiness in the home, and care-free parents.

The Better Babies Contest proves these statements and more.

If your baby is pretty well, and pretty good and cries very little, you may think it an all-round good baby. But if you bring it to the contest, you will learn how it can be made a perfectly well baby, a baby who does not cry except when actually hurt—an all-round better and best baby.

That is what Better Babies Contests are for. The babies are entered just as they used to be at the old-fashioned baby shows. But there the similarity stops. For at the Better Badies Contest, physicians examined the babies for physical and mental development, enter their records on Better Babies Standard Score Cards and advise parents as to how the condition of the babies can be improved.

When that is all over, the judges step in and award prizes to the babies making the highest scores, and other doctors tell mothers how to get the babies who did win prizes into fine condition for the next contest. It's the most cheering and hopeful contest imaginable and even the babies seem to understand and enjoy it.

This contest, which is being held under the auspices of the Women's Council, will be a big event for mothers and babies. The Council announces the following prizes:

Boy 6 month to 12 months of age —1st and 2nd prizes.
Girl 6 months to 12 months of age —1st and 2nd prizes.
Boy 12 months to 24 months of age —1st and 2nd prizes.
Girl 12 months to 24 months of age —1st and 2nd prizes.
Boy 24 months to 36 months of age —1st and 2nd prizes.
Girl 24 months to 36 months of age —1st and 2nd prizes.

In addition to these prizes, the Better Babies Bureau of the Woman's Home Companion will present the following, to fortunate babies:

To highest scoring boy or girl, medal in bronze.

Also to each first prize winner in all classes, a Better Babies Diploma, b eautifully printed in colours, sealed with the Better Babies seal in gold and blue ribbon. Each child examined in the contest whether a prize winner or not, will receive a Better Babies Certificate of Examination, also printed in colours, bearing the baby's name and score, signed and sealed, a beautiful souvenir of the contest. Watch the papers for further particulars.

Gift Appreciated

T London Evening Journal gives much prominence to Canada's gift. The Ministerial Westminster Gazette says it is immensely valuable as a steadying influence upon food supplies.

"The offer means that Canadians regard the Atlantic as practically safe for transport. Their confidence should reassure any who have been displaying unnecessary timidity. We are glad to be able to assure our readers that ship owners and shippers are cheerfully facing the risks of war, and as at all periods in our history, sailors are keeping to the sea with quiet indifference to whatever danger there may be. If that spirit continues we believe that food supplies will be as well assured as in time of peace."

The Evening Standard talks of Canada's fine generosity, and says if the ties binding Canada with the Motherland are intangible, they are apt to prove extraordinarily effective on occasions.

"We are not at present short of food owing to the sagacity and discretion with which the Government handled a critical situation. There is little probability that we shall be, but this stock of flour is both handsome and useful. English people are not unmindful of the kinship that prompted this act of fine generosity."

"On the hotel plazza. I've heard all the scandal of the place."

THINNING FRUIT PROFITABLE

D. Johnson, Dominion Fruit Commissioner.

To some growers the practice of thinning, which has been given considerable publicity, is a somewhat ludicrous one. But in the fact of results which have already been obtained where the practice has been adopted, its benefits appear to be indisputable.

In Nova Scotia it has been shown conclusively that the percentage of No. 2 apples on trees which have been thinned is at least 15 per cent. lower than on these which have not been so treated. Nor must it be presumed that the quantity of No. 3 apples can be reduced to a minimum by thorough spraying, for the results quoted above were obtained in the orchards of 20 of the most thorough sprayers in the Annapolis Valley, and in some instances there was as much as 35 per cent. of No. 3 fruit in these orchards.

Thinning is not an expensive operation, inasmuch as it merely means the removal from the tree of fruit which would be eventually picked in any case. That it should not be picked in an immature condition, and eliminated from the pack is the argument which critics advance. To refute that argument it is only necessary to state that much of the fruit removed in thinning is so defective either in size or quality that it ought never to be packed at all, and the value of the remainder of the discarded fruit will be more than met by the increased size and improved color of the crop harvested.

The results are therefore very evident, and it is safe to say that thinning will soon take its place as one of the necessities of successful fruit growing or just as much so as are spraying, pruning, fertilizing, and cultivation to-day. By its adoption the quantity of defective apples will be reduced, the grade of fruit will be much more uniform one both in size and color, and the profits to the growers will be materially increased.

A LITERARY SWINDLE

IRELAND'S SHAKESPEARE FORGERIES WERE STUPENDOUS.

Seventeen-Year-Old Youth Who Offered Papers Purporting to Be Manuscripts of Shakespeare's Plays Might Have Made a Fortune If He Had Applied His Genius Better—Ann Hathaway's Hair.

It is rather a curious coincidence that, at a time when the notorious forgeries of Pigott are being recalled by the publication of Mrs. Parnell's reminiscences of the great Irish leader, the papers, relics, and facsimiles connected with the forgery of Shakespeare's plays by a youth of seventeen, William Henry Ireland, at the end of the eighteenth century, should have been offered for sale in a London auction-room.

Ireland was the most audacious and successful literary swindler who ever lived. His feats are historic. He even deceived his own father, a respectable bookseller and student of Shakespeare. The great pity is that he did not devote his remarkable ingenuity and genius to some more legitimate channel. He would assuredly have made a big fortune.

Ireland was only seventeen years of age when, about 1794, he visited Stratford-on-Avon with his father, an admirer of Shakespeare, and on his return to London began his famous series of forgeries of Shakespeare's manuscripts; and so successful was he that when, in 1795, the documents were exhibited by the elder Ireland at his house in Norfolk street, Strand, Dr. Parr, Boswell, Sir Isaac Heard, Herbert Croft, Pye, the Poet Laureate, and sixteen others signed a paper testifying to their belief in their genuineness.

The most daring of Ireland's forgeries, perhaps, was his complete Shakespeare MSS of "Lear," while, in order to thoroughly carry out the game of deception, he forged a document which he said was Shakespeare's agreement with his publisher. He also invented an ancestor, William Henrye Irelaunde, to whom, he said, Shakespeare had made a gift of manuscript plays Feeling that "Ann Hattherreway" must have her proper place in this fantastic nightmare, Ireland duly twined a lock of her hair, and gives his ancestor's authority for the statement that she had given it to her spouse. This identical lock was recently put up for sale.

Mention has been made of Ann Hathaway's lock of hair. Conscious that this required extra substantiation, young Ireland composed a letter from Shakespeare returning the lock to her for her to kiss before he puts it away for posterity:—

Dearest Anna—As thou haste always founde mee toe mye worde most trewe so thou shalte see I have stryctly kepte mye promyse I praye you perfume thys mye poors Locke with thye balmye Kysses forre thenne indeede shall Kynges themmselves bowe and paye hommage toe itte, etc.

Yet for matchless impudence the palm must be awarded to a letter which Ireland indited as coming from Queen Elizabeth to Shakespeare, summoning him to spend a Bank Holiday of the period at Hampton Court, beginning:—

Wee didde receive youre pretty verses goode Masterre William through the hande off oure Lorde Chamberlayne.

Underneath this the daring young forger added Shakespeare's note of proud possession:—

Thys letterre I didde receyve fromme mye most gracyouse Ladye Elizabethe ande I doe requeste itte maye bee kept withe all care possyble.—Wm. Shakespeare.

The exposure of this audacious literary forger was due to the fact that Ireland overreached himself. He claimed to have a new historical play, entitled "Vortigern," and a tragedy, "Henry II.," by Shakespeare; and induced Sheridan to produce the former at Drury Lane. It was, however, such a complete failure that suspicions were aroused. The young forger was closely questioned, and ultimately was forced to confess his villainy. He published his confession in a tract in 1796, and more fully in his "Confessions" in 1805. The father's death in 1800 was supposed to have been hastened by his shame, and the son sank into obscure poverty, eking out a miserable living as a bookseller's hack, till his death on April 17th, 1835.

Not Having Any.

At Stockbridge a few decades ago Lord William Beresford rode in one of the minor races, and incurred the displeasure of a rather rough lot who got up an unpleasant demonstration against him.

Lord William was unmoved by the disturbance, and selecting the noisiest of the hooligans, said calmly:—

"See here, my friend, let's take a cab, drive a mile or two away, and settle the thing in a quiet way."

"Oh, yus," replied the rough, who did not fancy a mill with the redoubtable Lord "Bill," "I thinks not. We goes for a drive together, you gives me a thundering good hiding, and leaves me to pay for the cab. It ain't good enough."

Prince Dodged Militants.

The Prince of Wales is taking no chances with the suffragettes. During a bathing parade near Aldershot recently the prince, who is in camp there with the Oxford University Officers' Training Corps, of which he is a lance-corporal, was standing on the bank when he saw two women coming towards him. Shouting to a comrade near him, he jumped into the water quickly and put some distance between himself and the bank. The prince enjoyed the merriment caused by the incident.

Had the Hotel All to Himself.

A hotel in Carlsbad, Germany, was recently opened for the benefit of one guest. It was a new hotel which was due to open within two months, but when Sir Edgar Speyer telegraphed that he was coming and wished to stop at the hotel it was made ready, and he alone occupied it until the regular opening.

NATURE'S ARISTOCRACY

"Why is it," asked Uncle John recently, "that people who have inherited wealth look down on people who earn wealth through their own efforts?" The question is not an easy one to answer. Yet it should be answered.

Why do we look with more respect on a minister or a doctor than on a day laborer? The answer is simple. It is because we believe that he has higher intellectual attainments and that he is doing more for the community at large than is the day laborer. We judge the doctor or the minister to be a superior type of man because we believe that the work they perform requires higher intellectual attainments. Is this not the reason why men who have wealth are looked on with more respect than those who earn wealth?

When we study how great fortunes are made we generally find that they were made by a few men who were quick to see business opportunities that their less discerning fellows did not appreciate and let slip through their fingers. For instance, the man in a community who sees that if he can gain the control of a water power or a valuable building site, or a timber limit, he will be able to make his fellow citizens pay tribute to him through the increased prices he will charge them for the use of the natural resources Nature provided, and intended for the use of all, and who proceeds to take advantage of this situation and is thereby enabled to build up a fortune to which his fellow men have contributed. He thus earns his wealth as easily as to prove to the satisfaction of the non-thinking individual that he has superior intellectual attainments, to the rest of the community. Thus, it is natural for people to respect a man not only for his wealth but also from the belief that he has more ability than his fellows, or he would not have attained that wealth.

When a family has attained wealth it generally becomes possible for the members of the family to become more cultured than the ordinary individual. Thus, where wealth has remained in a family for two or three generations, there is a general impression that these people not only have wealth but culture as well, whereas the man who earns his weath is likely to be a rough diamond who has not had much of an opportunity to acquire culture also. True it is that he may be far superior to the man who inherited his wealth, but mankind at large is apt to think of such cases in the aggregate and not of isolated instances, and therefore to place such a man with the majority of men who have had to fight for their wealth. Men see that the one man has had to earn his wealth by fighting for it and as most men would prefer not to fight for a thing when they can get it for nothing, thus they are apt to think more of the man who acquired his wealth in the easiest way.

Once we see that men who inherit wealth are living off their fellows, because their fellows are not clever enough to see how they do it, and put an end to it, we will begin to study advanced reforms such as the taxation of natural resources according to their value, including the taxation of land values by such measures as these we will make it easier for the ordinary man to earn wealth and harder for a man who has inherited wealth to live off his fellows. Uncle Jim is right: The men who earn wealth are "Nature's Aristocracy," but as yet the world does not recognize the fact.—The Country Philosopher.

Plant Lice

I notice on some of the garden vegetables and on the sweet peas, small green lice that assemble in groups. These lice have been very injurious in past years and I would like to know what they are and what to do with them.—R. H., Peterboro Co., Ont.

The lice that are affecting your garden are known as aphis. They do not eat the leaves or stems of the plants they affect, but suck the juices. Hence they cannot be killed by applications of paris green, arsenate of lead, or other common poisons. They must be smothered by such solutions as kerosene emulsion, soap solutions, or tobacco extracts, which come in contact with their bodies.

Kerosene emulsion, if properly made, is one of the most effective remedies. In a small garden, however, common soap solution could be probably used more readily. Slice up one pound of common laundry soap into four or five gallons of water and boil. Whale oil soap is better in the proportions of one pound to five or six gallons of water. There are several good commercial preparations on the market that are effective when applied directly to the infested vines.

Our Thoughts

As he thinketh in his heart, so will he be.—Prov. 23.7.

How are we thinking? Do we ever pause to take stock and answer this question? A student of human nature tells us that "there is nothing surer than that we grow just in that direction in which our mind is most firmly fixed." The miser spends his time thinking how he may hoard his money; the spendthrift how best he can scatter it. What we are thinking of to-day we are likely to think of to-morrow. Our thoughts rule our actions and our actions form habits.

While none of us wish to be compared to either the miser or the spendthrift, yet we often allow our thoughts to linger on the disagreeable things which enter into our lives, our petty grievances and disappointments, until we make ourselves anything but happy. Should we not rather endeavor to think of the nobler side of life that which will uplift us and crowd out the unpleasant things. We can do much to make ourselves contented by controlling our thoughts.

A Shut-in when asked if she were not lonely very often, replied, "Oh no; not often you see I have my thoughts—such pleasant thoughts, too. A cruel fate took away health, but nothing could blot out thoughts of memory." Surely we can all learn a lesson from such a noble character.

A quotation suggests itself to our mind. It is this: "There is a world within and this is the greatest world. If you want a really lovely world without, you must make the world within bright and lovely." How then are we thinking? Are we making the world without bright or gloomy; are we thinking ourselves upward or downward, backward or forward?

H. Bonar says:

"Think truly, and thy thoughts
shall the world's famine feed;
Speak truly, and each word of thine
shall prove a faithful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be a great and noble creed."—M.M.R.

HE UNDERSTOOD.

There is a celebrated specialist in Washington, as well known for his bluntness of speech as for his professional skill.

On one occasion a rather pretentious and elderly woman, the wife of a cabinet officer, sought his advice. He listened to a long recital of her symptoms and then prescribed as follows:

"An egg and a cup of tea for breakfast, then walk for two hours; a slice of cold beef and half a glass of wine for luncheon, then walk again for two hours; fish (except salmon) and a bit of chicken for dinner, with a single glass of wine; to bed at ten and rise at seven, etc. No automobile exercise, please."

The patient listened with surprise. "But, doctor," she expostulated, "do you know who I am? Do you know my position?"

"Perfectly, madam," said the doctor. "I am prescribing for an old woman with a deranged stomach."

Cold Blueberry Pudding.

This makes an excellent dessert, one that is very easy to make as well as economical, since left over bread can be used for it. To a quart of blueberries and three-quarters of a cupful of sugar and half a cupful of water. Boil them five minutes. Toast four or five slices of bread, then butter them generously. Put them into the bottom of a bowl or baking dish to line the dish. Alternate the bread and berries until all the bread is soaked with berry juice. Then put a plate and weight on top so that the pudding will mould. Serve cold without any sauce, or make a simple sugar syrup thickened with a little cornstarch and flavoured with lemon.

Mint Jelly.

Boil mint to extract, the juice and add to a lemon gelatine. Congeal in a shallow pan and cut into cubes to serve as a mint jelly with a roast of lamb and new peas, or browned potatoes. Mint can be added to rhubarb jelly, making a delicious mint jelly.

LARGE CROWDS FROM ALL OVER KAWARTHA LAKES ATTENDED THE STONEY LAKE REGATTA YESTERDAY

All Events Were Hotly Contested and Interest of Spectators Was Held Throughout the Afternoon

DANCE IN EVENING

Large numbers from Peterborough, Chemong, Sturgeon Point, as well as the multitude of cottagers and others summering at Stoney Lake, made a large assemblage at the annual regatta of the Stoney Lake Cottagers' Association, which was held at Juniper Island yesterday afternoon. And those who expected to see the high standard of other years maintained, were in no way disappointed. Every race was hotly contested, and from the opening of the regatta till the last event, the interest of the spectators was kept focused on the races.

Excursions from Chemong Park and Peterborough were largely patronized, both this City and that summer resort being very largely represented. A number of trophies were carried off by Peterborough boys, and several events were won by representatives of the Parkdale Canoe Club, Toronto, ten of whose members are camping at present in Stoney Lake.

Perhaps it would be safe to say that three events of the day's sports stood out in the minds of all the people gathered to view them. They were the war canoe, open sailing and motor boat races.

For the war canoe honours there were four entries, the local Y.M.C.A., St. Paul's Bible class, Parkdale Canoe Club and the Chemong war canoe. The canoes of the two former clubs are cruising models, while the other two were racing models. The old rivals, St. Paul's and the Y.M.C.A., were therefore the competitors in the first heat of the race. At the beginning of the heat the St. Paul's crew took a good lead, but this was reduced until 25 yards from the finish the "Y" boys led by almost half a length. Then in a wonderful sprint over the home stretch, the St. Paul's paddlers regained what they had lost and nosed their competitors out of the lead. The heat between the Parkdale and Chemong crews resulted in a tie, and when re-raced the Parkdales won by a length. In the final race the St. Paul's canoe led by three quarters of a length, but the judges decided that they had fouled the Parkdale canoe at the finish, so that the race had to be paddled over again. The race was finally won by the St. Paul's crew, and was to some extent the most interesting event of the day. The St. Paul's crew, including Mr. H. B. Cowan, their coxswain, well deserved the numerous congratulations.

The open sailing race was won by Harold Knapman, who has upon repeated occasions proved his title as champion of the lake in the annual regatta. The race was a very close one, Eahen's sail boat crossing the line close on the heels of the winning boat.

The motor boat race was won by Clarke, Sturgeon Point, whose hydroplane model is credited with a speed of over 30 miles an hour. The Mephisto (Hall's of Sturgeon Point), captured the handicap race, being fouled by the winner of the open race a few yards from the line.

The prizes were presented in the pavilion yesterday evening, after which the usual regatta dance was held. Huyoke's orchestra supplied the music, and a very large number "took in" the dance, which broke up in time to catch the midnight boat home to Peterborough.

The collection of craft, small and large, and of pleasure seekers from all over, made the day a gala one, and the regatta was a splendid success.

The prize-winners were:

A Single Application Banishes Every Hair

(The Modern Beauty.)

Here is how any woman can easily and quickly remove objectionable hairy growths without possible injury to the skin: Make a paste with some powdered delatone and water, apply to hairy surface and after 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and the hairs are gone. This is a painless, inexpensive method and excepting where the growth is unusually thick, a single application is enough. You should, however, be careful to get genuine delatone.

GRIM GENERAL IS LEMAN OF THE BELGIANS

(By Dr. D. W. Dillon)

BRUSSELS, Aug. 10. — The German losses on Aug. 5 were enormous. The last figures give them as 5,000 dead, 24 guns captured, together with 15 Prussian flags and several hundred prisoners with a thousand rifles. These figures are confirmed.

The German staff had to modify competely their plans on account of the resistance of the Belgian troops to the seventh and tenth German Army Corps, the latter being the famous Iron Division of Branderburg. The ninth army corps had to be called to the assistance of the other two, likewise a division of cavalry.

General Leman, defender of Liege, is in his 62nd year. He is a strict disciplinarian, but he is as strict towards himself as he is towards others. Until a few months ago he was the head of the Belgian military school, and he is regarded as the chief Belgian authority on Roman Law, military architecture, engineering and science. Physically, he appears never to feel fatigue.

Often after a ride of thirty miles he would return to the military school to discuss strategical and tactical problems with the officers until morning. His example was an inspiration to the garrison of Liege. The allusion to the career of the famous general Stonewall Jackson, who was an instructor in mathematics at the Virginia Institute at the outbreak of the Civil War, will strike historians.

MOST OF IRISH IN U. S. WITH BRITISH

NEW YORK, Aug. 10—The resolution passed here yesterday by the New York Irish Volunteers favouring Germany's action in provoking war does not represent the great bulk of intelligent, Irish-American opinion. It is the view of the extreme Sinn-Fieners and does not meet with approbation of any responsible Irish-American bodies. The latter are sold in their support of the stand taken by John Redmond in declaring that Ireland will stand or fall in the defence of the Empire against her enemies.

There are large numbers of Irish-Americans in New York who are ready to join any recruiting force which Richard Croker might organize. Sympathy throughout New York generally, as indicated by the attitude of the public and the press, is with the Triple Entente, though of course the various foreign elements side with their own nation. It would be the most lamentable error, however, to assume that the resolution of the Irish Volunteers yesterday possesses any significance beyond the obvious expression of a band of malcontents who invariably profess and display antagonism to everything British.

An Arraignment of War

P. B. Walmsley, Muskoka Dist., Ont.

War, defined as a state of fighting, is organized homicide, arson and destruction of property. We do not so much arraign crimes, as the perpetrators of them, and we analyze the nature, causes and effects of their crimes.

Some of the evils of war, including armaments in peace, are: disorganization of commerce, waste of lives and property, withdrawal of able-bodied men from work, heavy taxes, nervous strain created by scientific murders even in time of peace, and destruction of the most physically fit, defeating the perpetuation of a race by the least fit.

In war we inflict the ghastliest tortures on the highest type of being, Man, while in peace we protect by law the humblest animal from ill-treatment. In peace we seek to prolong life and promote health. In war we deliberately spread death and disease.

The actual war-makers are the kings, politicians and financiers, sometimes aided by the press. We need to arraign all citizens of democratic countries, for all of us we share in the government, must share the blame for its acts. Some, like Andrew Carnegie, we will let go at once, apologizing for our mistake, and with him may go the active members of peace societies. Of those left in the dock, some are guilty as principals, others as accessories before or after the fact. They comprise the Jingoes and yellow journalists, war material interests, and all who make use of the "frantic boast and foolish word" of Kipling's Recessional, and include even the "gentle (?) reader" who grumbles because there is no fresh conflict to gloat over in his daily paper.

War is not only a crime, it is an economic blunder. Norman Angell has proved its futility, showing that it seldom gains the objects it seeks.

The causes of present-day wars are frequently matters of trifling moment, quite capable of adjustment by international arbitration.

War is an absurd as the trial by ordeal or by combat, or the duel.

War between two commercial nations is economic suicide. It is as if a merchant cut the throat of his best customer and burned his house, because of a dispute in their account, and then expected to get profitable business from the children.

War is fostered by ignorance and deception, and the secrecy of the drama of diplomacy must be abolished. If we with the "commencement of most" would "hold a festival room in awe." Knowledge is the cure for war-fever.

True are the words of Longfellow:

"Were half the power that fills the world with terror,
Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts,
Given to redeem the human mind from error,
There were no need of arsenals nor forts.

"The warrior's name would be a name abhorred!
And every nation that should lift again
Its hand against a brother, on its forehead
Would wear for evermore the curse of Cain!"

Grain Gift Totals $3,000,000

Two Hundred Trains and a Fleet of Vessels Required To Convey It

OTTAWA, Aug. 10.—It is believed here that the million bags of flour which the people of Canada have sent to Great Britain, and which have been "received with thanks," will relieve an ominous situation in the Mother country. The price paid was $2.80 per bag.

That the act will effect the price in Canada is not believed here, as the capacity of the Canadian mills is 30,000,000 barrels per year. The delivery is to be gradual, and the grain for the flour was secured before the offer or announcement was made.

Two Hundred Trains.

It is figured that two hundred trains and a fleet of ships will be required to transport Canada.s gift of a million barrels of flour. The order will be pretty well divided between the principal flour mills of the country, the Lake of the Woods, Western Canada Flour Mills, Ogilvie and Maple Leaf Milling Companies.

The Government has contracted for the purchase at present market price. The four companies have guaranteed delivery of the whole amount by September.

CANADA'S GIFT OF ONE MILLION BAGS OF FLOUR MOVES MOTHER COUNTRY

OTTAWA, Aug. 10.—The Canadian Government has offered the Motherland a gift of 8 million bags of flour and the offer has been accepted. On Thursday, Aug. 6th, the Government sent the following message to the Imperial Government, through His Royal Highness the Governor-General:

"My advisors requested me to inform you that the people of Canada through their Government desire to offer one million bags of flour as a gift to the people of the United Kingdom to be placed at the disposal of His Majesty's Government, and to be used for such purposes as they may deem expedient."

On Friday, Aug. 7th, the following reply was received:

"On behalf of the people of the United Kingdom, His Majesty's Government accepts with deep gratitude the splendid and welcome gift of flour from Canada, which will be the greatest use for the steadying of prices and of relief of distress in this country. We can never forget the generosity and promptitude of this gift and the patriotism from which it springs."

The Canadian Government have since perfected arrangements for fulfilling their order and shipments will begin in the immediate future.

Queen's Will Send Engineers.

KINGSTON, Aug. 11.—Prof. Alexander Macphail, M.P.P., is called home from Prince Edward Island to recruit his corps of Canadian engineers associated with the school of mining at Queen's University. He is calling the students by telegram and expects to have a large contingent ready to go to the front on very short notice. In addition to the military training they are trained as a department in engineering work.

Major H. Y. Hughes has gone to Valcartier for the purpose of laying out a camp ground where the Canadian volunteers will gather before sailing.

THEY FEAR CHARGES.

Kaiser's Men Have Horror of Bayonet Attacks.

LONDON, Aug. 11. — Correspondents of various London papers at different points and out of touch with each other comment upon the terror with which the Germans face a bayonet charge. They show inflexible courage in the face of heavy or light rifle fire, but a charge with fixed bayonets invariably makes the defence waver and usually makes it break.

Reports continue to come in of the lack of provisions among the German armies of invasion. It seems that the wonderful German organization has partially, at least, broken down in the commissary department.

France Enrols Alsatians.

PARIS, Aug. 11. — It is officially announced that citizens of Alsace-Lorraine are to be enrolled in one of the foreign regiments being organized to help France. Immediately upon signing for the duration of the war such volunteers became of French nationality and may then be transferred to any regiment.

The personnel of the Russian embassy at Vienna has been conducted to the Swiss frontier and is coming to Paris.

The Belgian Government has given orders to the Belgian state railway management to place itself at the disposal of the French military administration the same as the Belgian.

Suffrage in Spain.

Emilia Pardo Bazan has announced that she will start in the near future a national campaign in favor of woman suffrage. She is the foremost woman writer in Spain, her literary achievements having won for her the title of countess, which was given by King Alfonso in 1908. Spain is one of the three European countries which have not an organized woman suffrage movement, the other two being Greece and the grand duchy of Luxemburg.

PARIS, Aug. 11.—The Foreign Office has demanded a statement of intentions from Austria, following a report that eight Austrian regiments have violated Swiss neutrality by sending eight regiments of Austrian Tyrolese to the Salsatian border to harass the French rear. It seems obvious Austria is trying to provoke a French declaration of war, so Italy can be dragged in, an unwilling aid.

Austrians Bombard Antivari.

ROME, Aug. 11.—(Via London.)—Austrian cruisers bombarded Antivari, Montenegro, Saturday morning, destroying the wireless station, according to advices brought to Bari, near Briadisi, by steamer yesterday. Besides the wireless station, several houses, factories and the port warehouses were destroyed. The cruisers also directed their fire on a mountain where Montenegrins had taken refuge. Later they departed towards Cattaro.

Keep Cecilie's Treasure.

NEW YORK, Aug. 11.—Guarded by express messengers and detectives $10,000,000 in gold coin and $3,700,000 in silver bars, the treasure with which the steamer Kronprinzessin Cecilie put into Bar Harbor, Maine, to avoid capture by English or French warships, arrived in New York yesterday by train. The money now goes to the sub-treasury to be held for New York bankers, by whom it was to have been sent to Paris and London.

France Declared War On Austria Last Night

Movement of Austrians Through Switzerland Was Not Satisfactorily Explained

MAY AFFECT ITALY NOW

PARIS, Aug. 10.—France formally declared war on Austria to-night. The declaration followed the failure of the Austrian Government to make satisfactory explanations of the movement of ustrian troops from Austrian Tryol through Switzerland to the Alsatian border.

The declaration of war had been expected for the last three days, but France was determined that it would not act until something definite had taken pla ce on whievh a declaration could be based. This was in order to prevent Italy being forced into the conflict as an ally of Austria.

Austrians Marched to Basle, Switzerland.

When announcement was received that Austrian troops, under the Grand Duke of Tuscany, had crossed Lake Constance and were at Basle on the Swiss border, prepared to attack the French forces operating in Alsace, a peremptory demand that Austria declare her position was made. The Austrian ambassador was sent for and given until to night to get a definition of the Austrian position. This was not done, so the Foreign Office handed the ambassador his passports and war was immdiatly delard.

At the same instance the French ambassador at Vienna applied to the Austrian Foreign Office for his passports. They were immediately handed to him and he left for the frontier at once.

There is much speculation here tonight over the effect this declaration will have on Italy's position. Under the terms of her treaty with Austria and Germany she is bound to come to their aid when they are "attacked." However, in the case of England and Germany, where there was a dual declaration, the Italian Government took the position that England was not the aggressor. In the present instance France acted, taking the initiative, but only after she had raised the point that her frontier was endangered by Austrian troops. Should Italy accept this position, she can continue her plan of neutrality and refuse to be drawn into the war.

The German Border—Map showing line of defence of the French forces into Alsace, Lorraine. After taking Altkirch they advanced and took Muelhausen and are now advancing further north in an effort to secure a better position near Strassburg.

SUDDEN DEATH OF COL. H. C. ROGERS IN VICTORIA, B. C.

A Prominent Former Resident of Peterborough Passes Away on the Pacific Coast

Intelligence was received in the City on Sunday morning of the sudden death in Victoria, British Columbia, on Saturday, of Col. H. C. Rogers, a former well-known and greatly respected citizen of Peterborough. His death was sudden—supposed to be due to heart failure. The late Col. Harry Rogers, as he was for many years familiarly known in Peterborough, was born in Grafton, Northumberland County, 1839, son of the late James Rogers, who was prominent in the early affairs of the Coborne district municipal and parliamentary, having been warden of the four counties, and representative of the Newcastle District in the old Parliament of Upper Canada. The deceased Col. Rogers came to Peterborough early in life, and was, up to 1869, associated with the mercantile and lumbering business. In 1871 he was appointed Postmaster of Peterborough, and held the position till 1909, when, after thirty-eight years of service, he retired, and in the course of a short time, removed to Victoria, B. C., where he lived till the time of his death. Col. Rogers took a lively interest in military matters. He was actively associated with the 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons, as Commanding Officer of "C" Troop. In church affiliation he was also a prominent and active member of the Anglican church, occupying, from time to time, and collectively, two or three terms, each, the position of Warden of St. John's and St. Luke's churches. In social and personal relations the deceased gentleman occupied a prominent position, and in his long residence in Peterborough, was for years, looked upon as one of our foremost citizens.

The late Col. Rogers had a large family connection, but his brothers have all died, as well as his wife, (Miss Burritt), who passed away in British Columbia, about two years ago. His surviving relatives include his sisters, Mrs. H. (Dr.) Burritt of Toronto, and Mrs. Caddy, Cobourg. His surviving children are Mr. Walter Rogers, barrister, London, England; Dr. Herbert Rogers and Mr. David Rogers, barristers, Victoria, B. C., Guy and Harold Rogers, officers in the British Army, India, for a number of years, but now probably in England, or rather in the war zone on the Continent, and the youngest, Dr. Edmond Rogers, of Denver, Colorado. Two daughters reside in Victoria, Mrs. Robertson and Mrs. Barnard, wife of Mr. G. H. Barnard, M. P., member for Victoria, in the House of Commons.

No information is at hand regarding the funeral, but it is probable that his remains will be interred in Victoria, where the body of his late wife is buried.

AUTO MACHINE BATTERY GIFT TO THE MILITIA

OTTAWA, Aug. 10.—With a wave of patriotism sweeping over the country, generous offers connected with the sending of a Canadian contingent continue to be received. One of them, the name of the donor being withheld, is the offer of a battery of quick-firing machine guns mounted on automobiles. Fortunately Col. Hughes had given such an order a few months ago and they will be paid for by private funds, while immediate delivery is assured.

From Toronto yesterday came an offer of $10,000 in cash to be applied in whatever way is thought best. Col. Davidson of that city, has been authorized to take charge of arrangements for auxiliary comforts and supplies. Heads of the railways give assurance of co-ope ration in the expeditious handling of troops. "Men who cannot give their blood are giving their substance," remarked Col. Hughes to-day. "No wonder the Empire stands firm."

An excellent waterproof brown paper is being made in England of which 80 per cent. of the material is peat.

CONCLUDED SERVICE WITH NATIONAL HYMN

The worshippers in St. Paul's church, Sunday morning, heard an inspiring rendering of Sir Edward Elgar's great patriotic song, "The Land of Hope and Glory," by Miss Dorothy Allan. The majesty of the music, the animation and fervour of the singer, accentuated by the stirring accompaniment by Mr. Allan, were calculated to impress one with the march of a valorous army. The morning services in St. Paul's were closed with the singing of "God Save the King."

WAR'S EFFECT ON THE WORLD'S COMMERCE AS SEEN BY HENRY CLEWS

Foreign Commerce is Demoralized —United States Finds Need of a Merchant Marine—Will Reduce Cost of Militarism.

EUROPEAN INDUSTRY CHAOS

NEW YORK, Aug. 8, 1914.—The crisis of the age is on, and the worst is probably appreciated. The result may no wbe left to the arbitrament of arms. Great Britain's entry into the war will undoubtedly hasten the end; the sheer intensity of the conflict necessarily limiting its duration. For the time being the world's commerce is demoralized. On the Continent of Europe the losses will be colossal. Hundreds of thousands of precios lives will be sacrificed and billions of capital and property destroyed. The horrors that will have to be endured are too dreadful for the imagination. Chaos will rule in European industry and commerce for possibly some time to come. The most that can be reasonably hoped for is some great decisive battle in the early stages of the war, decisive enough at least to open the door for mediation and thus stop this monstrous struggle; the saddest blot on Christendom in many generations.

The financial strain on this side has ben materially relieved by the issue of $300,000,000 of emergency currency under the Aldrich-Vreeland Act, and laws have been passed making it possible if necessary to put into circulation over $1,700,000,000 of such currency. By common understanding our bankers have also agreed to prevent any further important exports of gold. The closing of all of the Exchanges has fortunately prevented an aggravation of the crisis by stopping ill advised speculation; and before long there is little doubt but that the financial situation here will have been so strengthened as to alow the re-opening of the Exchanges throughout the country.

Demoralization of Commerce.

At the moment the most serious effect of the war upon ourselves, outside of financial circles, is the utter demoralization of foreign commerce and its handmaid, foreign exchange. Our cotton, our grain and our oil, which constitute a large portion of our eports, are practically blocked. Yet somehow or other Europe must have these products, or suffer still more seriously. We need the products of their sale, or many of our merchants will doubtless be for the time being more or less inconvenienced or crippled. Just now we sorely feel the need of an American merchant marine, which we might have had on hand but for the any ill advised restrictions upon operation which still remain. Some relief may be obtained by placing our coasting vessels in the transatlantic trade, or by raising the American ag on many ships now operating under foreign flags. The most probable solution, however, will come when Britain show her sea power by keeping the lines of international commerce comparatively free of hostile cruisers. This will doubtless be eventually.

Some of the Effects.

It may be some time before our foreign trade, fi aggregating about $4,000,000,000 a year, will resume its accustomed sway. Meantime our farmers and our railroads must be prepared for a delayed export trade. The products held back now, however, will be in great demand later on at unquestionably high prices. One sorry result of the war will be the world-wide advance in food products, which we in common with other nations must expect. On imports the situation is equally deranged. Our purchases of European luxuries will certainly be cprtailed, not for lack of transportation, but because the people of Europe will have largely become destroyers instead of producers. European sugar and grain crops will certainly suffer severely. British cotton and woollen manufacturers will insur heavy losses. Even if they ultimately secure their supplies of raw materials, as they probably will, their export trade wil be seriously disturbed. This will greatly stimulate American exports of cotton goods, and at the same time check our imports of woollens. The inevitable reduction of imports at large, through impaired buying power on both sides of the water, is sure to diminish our national revenue, the total from duties alone amounting to about $325,000,000 per year, or not far from half our total revenue. Already there is talk of an increase in the income tax to offset this expected loss.

Will Relieve Militarism.

In spite of the horrors and the chaos which this war will bring, there are offsets and hopes upon which our gaze should be steadfastly set. Whatever nation succeeds, the end of excessive militarism is at hand. Though war and arms cannot yet be abolished, Europe will be saved for years to come the crushing armaments which she has supported for so long, and the possession of which has been largely instrumental in exciting this gigantic struggle. Some thrones are already tottering, and republics will take their place; all of which will make for peace. This struggle will, moreover, have a sobering influence upon the whole world. In spite of the bitterness of war, many differences will be settled; some forms of discontent will disappear and men's better impulses are already beginning to rise and will be established upon a higher plane when passion finally cools. Happily America is out of the struggle. We may feel the consequences in temporary business confusion; and it must not be overlooked that there are grave questions ahead which will call for wisdom and caution in making comments. But ultimately the United States will benefit materialy and it is to be hoped, morally by this unprecedented and uncalled for cataclysm.

Already the financial skies are clearing. The Bank if England rate has been reduced to 6 per cent; likewise the Bank of France. In local financial circles there is also a much more confident and hopeful feeling regarding the future.

Their Services for their King.—Hon. Clifford Sifton, Hon. Adam Beck, and Sir Donald Mann—three distinguished Canadians who have offered to serve in any capacity.

ELIGIBLE APARTMENT HOMES

Mrs. Percy Reid's New Apartment House on Murray Street Nearing Completion

The new, red brick apartment building in process of construction on Murray Street, for Mrs. Percy Reid, will soon be ready for occupation. Contractor Fitzgerald has everything ready for plasterers and painters, and workmen are now levelling up for the lawn and yards, in preparation for the finishing touches.

The new building affords ample accommodation for four apartment houses. Each apartment consists of a living room, dining room, two bedrooms, kitchen, bathroom, hall and basement cellar. The floors are to be of oak throughout, a fireplace for gas heating and a fancy pillar for electric light with grill work above for each living room. Each apartment will be supplied with hot water heating, and the basement has been divided off with four lockers, one for each house, and a main cellar for common use. Comfortable front verandahs will be divided off for each house for the convenience of tenants, and a neat lawn in front for the use of each.

The building is expected to be finished by the first of October and it is understood that already two of the apartments have been leased. The plan is of the new building and arrangement of the apartments is a copy of a unique apartment house made by the late Mr. Percy Reid while in San Jose, California, and Mrs. Reid is carrying out the details in accordance with desires cherished by her late husband.

SUMMER CARE OF HOGS

The hog was intended by nature to live out-of-doors. Hence the summer time is its thriving time.

The nearer we can approach to a state of nature in hog management, the more satisfactory will be our results. The farm wood lot is the ideal run for the hogs. It is shady and cool. It is good for the wood as well as for the hogs. This of course refers to a wood lot of mature trees that the hogs can not destroy.

If a wood lot is not available for shade, an open shed at least should be provided. A cheaply constructed shelter can be made by throwing cedar trees against a ridge pole supported by two uprights, the trees of course being on the southern side.

If in addition to the wood lot we have a running stream, then indeed have we ideal conditions for summer hog pasturage. Where the stream is missing a hog wallow may be constructed and will give satisfactory results.

These directions apply only to breeding stock in which constitution and health count for more than rapid gains. Market hogs must be kept more closely confined, or they will turn their food into exercise instead of into flesh.

REPLIES TO MRS. BURTON'S ARTICLE

Elder F. W. Johnston Deals With Various Points Raised

Elder F. W. Johnston spoke very interestingly last evening in the tent on the corner of Harvey and Dublin streets, taking for his text Proverbs 18:17, "He that is first in his own cause seemeth just; but his neighbour cometh and searcheth him." The Elder then proceeded to examine the statements contained in an article that was written by Mrs. Burton, and appeared in the Examiner of last Thursday entitled "The law and the Gospel compared." The Elder then declared that while he had no desire to excite any unnecessary debate, yet when any individual, either purposely or otherwise, undertook to pervert the teachings of the word of God he felt fully justified in taking a position that would defend and uphold it. We haven't come to-night, he declared, to discuss individuals but rather the false theology advanced in Mrs. Burton's article, and with this idea in mind we will examine all her statements.

The first statement read from Mrs. B's article was "That Mr. Johnston was preaching law instead of Gospel." But this is wholly false, the Elder said. We preach law and Gospel. But why? Because the law defines sin and the Gospel saves from sin; and as the Bible says in Rom. 4:15, "Where no law is there is no transgression," it follows beyond a doubt that when Mrs. B. tried to abrogate the law, she does away with sin; she does away with a Saviour and, therefore it is evident that such perverts the Gospel.

Mrs. Burton, so he read, says also that "Mr. Johnston says we must keep the seventh day for the law is binding on all," and Mrs. B. adds, "she believes it all." This being true the Elder said, "If as she says she believes it all, why in the name of common sense is she fighting something she believes? Why doesn't she keep the seventh day if she believes it?

But the Elder read further from Mrs. B's article, that "God made a new covenant with his people." But how does the new covenant read, asked Elder Johnston Turn to Heb. 8:810. The Lord says that under the new covenant He will put His law in our hearts. If therefore, the Elder inquired, Mrs. B. is under the new covenant, why then does she not allow the Lord to write all His law in her heart, for the Sabbath command is a part of that law.

Reading again from Mrs. B. we find she says "A new and living way was opened by Christ." Does this new way that Mrs. B. speaks about mean a new way to disobey what God says? Does Mrs. B. find in the new way an excuse for disobeying the Sabbath command? If so, instead of it being a new way that she has, it is her own way. It is high time for some to get over having their own way and have God's way instead.

Mrs. B. says further: "Christ is the end of the law to every one that believeth." But Elder Johnston inquired if Mrs. B. means that Christ put an end to "Thou shalt not steal, kill, lie, covet, blaspheme, etc.?" If so inasmuch as it says in Romans 4:15, "Where no law there is no sin," then according to Mrs. B. we can do as we like, we can steal, lie, blaspheme, for there is no law to condemn. This very thing shows her logic to be false. The word "end" so Mr. Johnston said, meant object or design, as for instance in James 5:11, "Ye have heard of the patience of Job and have seen the end of the Lord." The Elder inquired if Mrs. B. would interpret this as meaning that the Lord had come to His end? Now, the word end here and in Mrs. B's text means object or design, so when we read that Christ is the end of the law, it mean that Christ was the object to which the law pointed. Thus when we accept of Christ we reach the object for which the law exists.

But the climax of Mrs. Burton's logic is seen in the last paragraph, so the Elder said. Thus he says, "Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." Now we read in Prov. 6:23: "The commandment is a lamp and the law is light." If, therefore, "the law is light," and men love darkness rather than light, does it not prove that men love darkness rather than the law because their deeds are evil. Let Mrs. B. reflect upon this before she endeavours to abolish God's law.

She says that if God's law is in our hearts we will not bow to idols nor covet nor steal. Why did she not add that if God's law is in our hearts we will not break the Sabbath command either? We believe that Mrs. B. will see her false position, and that by her own statements she has stultified herself.

Another Holiday Batch Of Drunks

There were as usual a number of familiar faces in the box at the police court this morning in consequence of holidays carousing. They were all "drunks" with the exception of one who also resisted arrest, and in consequence of a wrestling match on the street, P. C. Cookman, who arrested him fell to the sidewalk and put his shoulder out.

"Well, 'pon my word," said the prisoner, "I thought that I was going to the front, (he is an old soldier) and I was so drunk I did not know what I was doing."

The magistrate fined him $5.75 for the one offence and allowed him to go on suspended sentence on the second charge.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 11.—The giant British liner, Lusitania arrived here to-day after a round about dash from New York to escape German warships.

300,000 RUSSIANS IN AUSTRIA

LONDON, Aug. 11.—A Russian army of three hundred thousand men, fully equipped, has penetrated forty miles into Austria.

The German troops at Liege are resting quietly to-day, apparently waiting reinforcements.

King George to-day inspected the army concentration camps at Aldershot, where troops are gathering for continental service.

The London Daily Mail prints a despatch that the British cruisers have captured a German liner with a million dollars.

SUSPECTED CRUISER PROVES BRITISH

OTTAWA, Aug. 11.—The St. Lawrence route is again open for traffic after an embargo lasting less than 24 hours. The Atlantic ports were yesterday declared closed and considerable speculation and no little apprehension was caused. It is learned this morning, however, that the closing of the ports was due to a report that there was a German vessel out in the gulf. This morning the scare was dissipated by the reassuring news that the vessel in question was a British cruiser, probably the Berwick or the Lancaster, so the ports were again declared open this morning. There are now said to be five British cruisers on the Atlantic, while the Niobe will be ready in a few days it is expected.

Sweeping—dust contains many dangerous microbes.

SWEEPING is actually dangerous, as well as uncomfortable and almost useless, if it merely stirs up the floor's dust and dirt. Sweeping-dust contains millions of flaky atoms of dried vegetable and animal matter which carry disease-breeding germs and microbes.

DUSTBANE

"Catches Sweeping Dust"

Dustbane contains an antiseptic which kills germs, and its evaporation purifies the air, protecting women and children from dust-microbes. The bright green powder is swept ahead of the broom, falling upon and absorbing the dust, leaving floor or carpet bright and clean.

Dustbane saves labor in sweeping, saves nearly all your dusting, prevents damage by moths, keeps carpets bright, and protects the family's health. It can be used over and over again, and its cost is trifling.

Try it free—at our risk.

We know that when you've once used Dustbane, you will never again be satisfied to sweep without it. In order that you may try it without risk, we make the following.

Trial Offer

ORDER a regular 35-cent tin of Dustbane from your grocer. Use it for all your sweeping for a week. If you are not absolutely satisfied, send the partly used tin, back to the grocer within ten days and he will refund the full purchase price.

Full directions for use on every tin.

OTTAWA TOOK BOTH THE HOLIDAY GAMES

Petes Got Early Lead Each Time But Failed To Hold It—Crowd Threatened Umpire Lush

WORK LOOKED LOOSE

(With apologies to the Sporting Editor).

Holiday Ball Games.

Morning—Ottawa 8; Petes 4.
After lunch—Ottawa 7, Petes 5.
... ... Features. ... ...

Warlike demonstration by part of the crowd.
Mr. Lush, the unenvied umpire.
Mr. Shaughnessy.

The Petes gave two fine exhibitions yesterday of how to nearly win a ball game. They got a four-to-one lead in the morning, but Mr. Shaughnessy spilled the beans. Then, in the afternoon they get away with the bit between their teeth, and they come home among the also-rans. The Senators gave a pretty display of how to come from behind for the decision, but it would require an expert like Fullerton, probably, to determine what the Petes were exhibiting.

The fans who hadn't spent the afternoon talking to damsels, went home "crabbing" the home team, the visitors, the umpire, the peanut man, the ground-keeper and even the weather man. Mr. Shaughnessy usually gets the goats of the local crowd, and yesterday he particularly riled them in some unaccountable way.

Mr. Lush got in bad early in the morning, and while he did not loom up as the smoothest of umpires, he was not as bad as the crowd painted him. Their opinion should be discounted about sixty per cent. to arrive at something like a near estimate of his work.

Another feature was the warlike demonstration. In the morning Mr. Lush was threatened, and again in the afternoon part of the crowd filed on to the field for some purpose known only to themselves. Possibly the heat irritated them, and they were the more prone to peevishness. They must have known that anything they might do would not have changed the umpire's decision. If they wanted a pound of Mr. Lush's flesh they should have waited until after the game. Usually a gang of fifty or more can easily maul one lone umpire. Possibly they wanted to impress him with the fact that decisions unfavourable to the home crowd would not be tolerated. The last is a sporting sentiment you sometimes witness in operation. The question might be asked of the hostility demonstrators, who, as a matter of fact, were, collectively, something of a anghing stock, when any action of that kind ever brought credit or benefit to a town or team. However, the demonstration was not serious. Two or three got out on to the field and called to the others to follow. Mr. Lush did not appear to be deeply impressed. Some of the foremost walked almost to the home plate, undecided as to what to do, and then, as the affair petered out, they returned to the side lines. Mr. John Galsworthy, one of the foremost English novelists of the present day, has written a book entitled "The Mob". The crowd that followed a couple of would-be disturbers yesterday, should try to digest that volume.

Sterling Going Well.

Mr. Sterling worked seven innings in the afternoon game for the Petes. He had a rather bad innings in that frame and Mr. Schettler followed him. At that, to the casual observer, the support accorded Mr. Sterling was not of the brightest. Actual errors were not prominent, but a general looseness characterized the afternoon's performance. Seventeen hits, for instance, for five runs is not very uncommon, but just the same it is not an every-day occurrence. An attempt might be made to say something smart, but what's the use. Mr. Schettler gets the credit for the loss.

Also Used Two Pitchers.

Mr. Shaughnessy started Mr. Peterson, but he hit the rocks in the fifth innings, when the Petes got six hits for three runs, and they should have had more.

Mr. Gero seemed to be in for a bad innings in the seventh, but it was only a flash in the pan. Four good hits for one run was the old life sure enough. Consider that innings as a sample. Mr. Welsh was safe on a little fly over second. Mr. Dolan doubled to right. Mr. Rooney lined a grounder to short, but unfortunately it hit Mr. Dolan as he was running to third and before he could avoid it. That cut off one runner. Mr. Byrne grounded to Mr. Gero and Mr. Welch was the easiest of picking at the plate. Two runs squandered. Mr. Rooney scored on Mr. King's hit through short. Mr. Fox was out at first. While you're at it, replay the fifth for further evidence of the old spirit. Mr. Sterling singled to left. Manager Blount sacrificed. Mr. Welch bounced one to the left field barn for a double, scoring the pitcher. Mr. Dolan hit to deep left, turned second, and was a horrible example of an out, according to Spaulding. Some would declare that there was the suggestion of livery in connection with the play, the coach being not excluded. Mr. Rooney hit to right for three bases. Mr. Byrne laced a grounder through short, scoring Mr. Rooney. Mr. King singled to deep centre. Mr. Shaughnessy threw to third to get Mr. Byrne, and Mr. Bullock pegged to Mr. Smykal. Up went the Lush thumb and another hit was squandered. Mr. King had beat the throw by a city block. He claimed he did not have his foot off the bag. The crowd declared Mr. Smykal had pushed him off and so on. Those who are worrying about it can settle the point themselves. Mr. Lush settled it according to Spaulding, but that does not cut all the ice.

Really, some one ought to tip the Petes off to Mr. Charles E. Von Loan. Look at the material for a popular story with the heading "The Prodigal Swatters".

The doings are tabulated, officially, as follows:

The action is instituted by the Attorney-General's Department of Quebec on information laid by the Ontario branch of the Lord's Day Alliance.

Caught a Tartar.

Bishop Thornton when in Ballarat was walking one fine Sunday morning with his favorite dog, a very intelligent retriever. The dog was performing all sorts of tricks—jumping over his master's stick, retrieving it from the water, and so on.

The bishop was aware of the wide-eyed interest of a small boy who, with his nurse, was walking on the shore of the lake. The bishop recognized in him the son of a neighbor with whom he was on the best of terms, although the neighbor was a leading light of Nonconformity in the city.

To amuse this boy the bishop put the dog through the whole category of his tricks and then said, "Now, isn't that a nice dog and wouldn't you like to have one like him?" To which the small boy replied sternly, "Sir, I think you forget what day this is."—London Citizen.

"SLIM" CALDWELL IS REAL COMEBACK; WINS 18 GAMES

(By Frank G. Menke)

They don't come back, eh? Well, look at what "Slim" Caldwell, a Yankee twister, is doing these days.

"Slim," regarded as "all in" at the close of the 1913 season, has won eighteen games and lost seven this year for an average of .720 against a team average slightly over .400. The best part of Caldwell's showing is that practically all of his games have been small hit and small run affairs, with about half a dozen shut-off victories mixed in.

If Caldwell, pitching in his present form, had the batting and fielding trength of the Athletics or Giants behind him, it is doubtful if he would have lost more than three of the twenty-five games he has pitched. The Yanks have played miserable baseball behind Caldwell at times, and tossed away at least four games.

Caldwell wasn't of much use to the Yanks last year. He developed a sore arm soon after the season started. Instead of getting better, it became worse as the season drew to close. "Discouraged," Caldwell told his teammates.

"Next year 'Slim' will be back pounding the telegraph key while you fellows are frisking around in the sunshine. My arm is gone, I guess, and so 'm through."

Pitcher Jack Warhop later sidled over to Slim and slipped him an osteopath's card.

"Go and see him," advised Warhop.

Caldwell did, and the kink was rubbed out of his arm in about four visits.

DON'T LIKE GOLD COINS.

Why Some Federal Employees Prefer Their Pay in Paper Money.

"Worth its weight in gold" is an old saying, but government employees of certain departments in the federal building say time has not worn off any of its edges. When it comes to the gold, however, especially gold coins, it is a different story. That is why certain government employees spurn gold and demand notes. They say that they lose money every time they are paid in gold because the coins become worn through constant circulation and the government will pay in redeeming them only what they are worth in weight.

In some of its departments the government always pays in gold. The heavy coins make bulky pocket pieces, and there is a rush to get them exchanged for notes. Recently local banks have apparently been flooded with gold currency, and when the government employees go to bank and ask for notes in exchange for the gold coins they are informed that the bank already has much gold on hand and advised to go to the subtreasury.

When the gold coins are tendered at the subtreasury clerks there carefully weigh them and then deduct for loss of gold which may be worn off the edges and surface of a coin by constant circulation. In some instances the deductions amount to as high as 50 cents. Those who have been docked are asking why the United States pays its employees with money which it will not redeem at face value.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Greedy Parisian Tradesmen.

Paris already possesses an organization on the lines of the Wives' union it is proposed to establish in London in order to control the cost of living. The baker extracts 18 cents from them for a four pound loaf of household bread and as much as 20 cents in some districts, while better quality bread is never sold at less than 6 cents a pound. Other necessaries of life are equally dear in proportion. In a manifesto issued when the League of Parisian Consumers was formed to fight these high prices it is stated that the average Parisian shopkeeper wants to retire from business at the age of forty or thereabouts and bleeds his customers as much as possible. If tradesmen could be persuaded to keep in harness a little longer they would, it is thought, be content with smaller profits.

American Money For Armenia.

Evidences of heavy emigration from Armenia to this country are particularly noticeable in Armenian villages, where the remaining residents are principally women, children, old men and a small number of younger men. Frequently there are not enough men left in the village to cultivate the surrounding fields. If no money came from the absent ones this condition would be alarming and starvation and suffering would be a common condition, but the inflow of money is as regular and constant as the outflow of breadwinners has been continuous. It is estimated that families residing in Harput and nearby places receive at least $50,000 per month from America.

Postage Stamps.

There was stamped postal letter paper as early as 1818, but postage stamps proper begin with those used in Great Britain between 1833-1840. It was not until 1839 or 1840 that the adhesive stamp was used on letters and other mail matter.—New York American.

Grocer Intends To Sell Goods in Smaller Lots

Mr. E. F. Mason Says There Have Been No Appreciable Increases in Price of Groceries.

CHECK ON HEAVY ORDER

In view of the recent increase in various foodstuffs The Examiner interviewed Mr. E. F. Mason this morning with regard to local market conditions.

"It is really unnecessary for the people to think they cannot procure goods at any future near date," Mr. Mason said. "We do not know what the conditions will be in the future, but from the present outlook there is no reason for any big advance in any particular line except flour, and flour has been sold in Peterborough at a much lower rate than in many other neighbouring cities. From our own standpoint we do not propose to increase the prices on any line of products, and in many cases we shall have to pay more for good in the anticipation of the higher prices (for war insurance on imported goods) put on by wholesalers. But this increase purchasers will not at present be called upon to sustain."

Mr. Mason said that tea and corn products had increased, but purchasers will not feel the increase at present. He would not allow purchasers to buy up a stock as has been done during the past week, he said, but would continue to sell in smaller lots in order that there shall be a freer circulation of goods.

Naturally most of the dealers are experiencing the same inconvenience, namely, a small increase in wholesale prices, not sufficiently large to increase the retail price.

The funeral will take place to-morrow morning to St. Peter's Cathedral and thence to St. Peter's Cemetery for interment.

MRS. CHRISTOPHER HOWSON.

The death occurred yesterday afternoon at her late residence in Otonabee of Mrs. Christopher Howson, at the age of fifty-four years and six months. The deceased was born in Otonabee, her maiden name being Sarah Bennett. She was married to her now surviving husband thirty-five years ago. She was a woman who was beloved by all who knew her, and her death will create a loss that will be hard to fill. Besides her husband, four sons and four daughters are left to mourn her loss. The sons are Messrs. Leonard, Everett and Norman, of Regina, Sask., and Herbert at home. The daughters are: Mrs. Bruce Savigny and Mrs. Gordon Taylor, Otonabee, and Misses Pearl and Edna at home. Her mother and two sisters, and two brothers also survive her.

The funeral will take place tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, from the family residence, Lot 12, Concession 10, interment taking place at Keene cemetery.

THE GARBAGE COLLECTION

It would save a good deal of inconvenience to householders if the garbage collectors would give some notice of what their intention is regarding the collection of garbage on holidays. Yesterday many took the trouble to leave out their garbage in front of their residences for the usual Monday collections, but had to take it back again because no collectors called. And to-day, people do not know whether the garbage should be left out or wait until the next regular appointed day. It wouldn't be much trouble for the contractor to notify the public the day before a holiday what the intention is regarding the collection of garbage.

THE WEATHER

Sunday was one of the warmest days of the season, the official figures being 93 degrees in the shade. Some showers on Monday morning tended to cool the heated air for the time being, but the mercury nevertheless went up to 89 degrees in the afternoon. Rainfall, 14-100 of an inch. —W.P.

More Beyond.

On very ancient Spanish coins there is a picture of the Strait of Gibraltar and beneath the Latin words "Ne plus ultra" (there is nothing beyond).

In the days when those coins were made that was the belief of the then known world—there was nothing beyond the strait but a wide waste of western sea.

Then came Columbus, who sailed away over the waste of waters to discover a new world, and on the newer coins the "ne" was omitted, leaving only "plus ultra" (more beyond).

Big Bank Notes.

The specially printed $5,000 note which the King of Denmark signed at the Bank of England when he visited London the other week, is just a thousand times less in value than the highest priced note issued by the Old Lady of Threadneedle street. No fewer than four $5,000,000 notes have been issued by the bank. The Rothschilds had one; Coutts had another; the Bank of England itself had the third; and Rogers, the banker poet, had the fourth put in a gold frame and hung up in his parlor.

PIMPLES NEARLY COVERED FACE

Especially on Forehead and Chin. Ashamed to Go Out. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured in Month and a Half.

McMillan St., Oil City, Ont.—"My face was nearly covered with pimples, especially on my forehead and chin. The trouble began with pimples and blackheads and there were times I felt ashamed to go out. They were little red lumps and then festered and I squeezed the matter out.

"I rubbed on different remedies, ——— Salve and ——— Cream but they did no good. Then I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent for a sample. I got it and began using them and in a week's time I noticed a change. I used the pimple of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and one box of Cuticura Ointment from the drug store with the Cuticura Soap. In a month and a half the pimples and blackheads were gone and I am completely cured." (Signed) Miss Lydia McIlwain, May 23, '13.

A generation of mothers has found no soap so well suited for cleansing and purifying the skin and hair of infants and children as Cuticura Soap. Its absolute purity and refreshing fragrance alone are enough to recommend it above ordinary skin soaps, but there are added to these qualities delicate yet effective emollient properties, derived from Cuticura Ointment, which render it most valuable in overcoming a tendency to distressing eruptions and promoting a general condition of skin and hair health. A single cake of Cuticura Soap and box of Cuticura Ointment are often sufficient when all else has failed. Sold by druggists and dealers everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Dept. D, Boston, U. S. A.

FRENCH HURL BACK GERMAN ATTACK

General Joffre's First Reported Retreat From Mulhausen Was Simply a Retirement to Advantageous Ground

AEROPLANES BUSY

PARIS, Aug. 12.—(Via London.)—According to late advices the Germans made a determined attempt to take the positions occupied by the French outside Muhlhausen, but failed. The Germans did not re-enter the town.

The War Office announces that the French and German troops are in contact for twenty miles along the frontier, and that engagements are taking place at Longwy, Longuion and Marville, in France, and at Virton, in Belgium.

The War Office made an official announcement early yesterday to the effect that the French at Muhlhausen have been compelled to fall back before an overwhelming force of Germans, and had evacuated Muhlhausen, but were holding their own against the German advance.

Later a supplementary bulletin was issued by the War Office, in which it was stated that the French troops whom Gen. Joffre had placed in occupation of the city of Muhlhausen had been withdrawn to high ground to the south of that place, and that they had there made a stand against the German army, which was attacking in force, and had repulsed every attempt to dislodge them.

Gen. Joffre, it was regarded, had selected advantageous ground for this purpose, and the tactics of the French had proved successful.

It is understood here that the Kaiser's army, which had been assembling at Strassburg, had begun its march southwards, and that the advance guard came in touch with the French advance guard at Colmar early, and the latter fell back before them. Then Breisach was reached, the garrison there joined the Kaiser's troops and the march southward was continued. Meanwhile a German force, probably a detachment from the Austrian army of thirty thousand, which had marched from the Tyrol, made an attack on the French left flank from Muelheim, and were aided in this by a flying wedge from Neu Breisach.

These attacks were repulsed, and when the advance guard of the German army arrived at Muhlhausen they found the city already evacuated and the French army in strength on the rising ground beyond.

They pressed on their attack, but were driven back. Reinforcements are being brought up as rapidly as possible, and it is anticipated that the biggest battle of the war so far will be fought either there or a little farther south.

Reinforcements for Joffre are being rushed from Belfort and across the Vosges Mountains, and the army of the Vosges, it is expected, will attack the German right flank. The French line of retreat is covered, and the latter were supported by artillery.

The unloading of troops from trains continues in the region of Gerolstein, but the principal landings occurred earlier in the rear of Metz and Thionville.

French aviators are constantly flying over the zones where the German troops are disposed without paying the slightest attention to the bursting shells of the enemy. The official communication concludes with the statement that the work of fortifying Luxemburg and south of Metz has been completed by the Germans.

Large Force Under Arms

Times Says Five or Six Hundred Thousand Britons Are Enlisted.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The national relief fund for the families of soldiers and sailors killed or wounded in the war, which was started under the supervision of the Prince of Wales and Queen Mother Alexandra, amounted yesterday morning to $3,240,000.

To-day's Times says that Britain has already proceeded far with her mobilization and now has between 500,000 and 600,000 men under arms, not counting the National Reserve.

"We should, therefore," says The Times' article, "view the situation with comparative equanimity, and not be turned from any masculine resolve by the threat of an assault by the German navy."

The British concentration camp at Aldershot yesterday was visited by King George and Queen Mary, and their advent was the occasion of an enthusiastic demonstration.

A Polish legion for active service in the event of a German invasion of the British Isles is being formed here at a joint meeting of the Polish societies.

INVADING AUSTRIA.

Russian Army Three Hundred Strong Is Now Advancing.

LONDON, Aug. 12. — The report that the Russian invasion of Austria has begun to-day was confirmed by the War Office here. It is stated that a Russian army is advancing toward Lemburg through the Styr river valley. This force is said to consist of more than 300,000 Russian soldiers, every branch of the service being represented. The advance of this army is assigned as the cause of the withdrawal of the Austrian army which had been invading Servia.

A telegram received from Vilna says six carloads of German prisoners passed through that city yesterday morning on their way to the interior of Russia. A St. Petersburg despatch to The London Post says the Russian fleet is actively scouring the Baltic Sea. Twenty captured merchant vessels have been taken to Cronstadt and their crews will be removed to the interior as prisoners of war.

OFF COMES THE CRAPE.

Parisians Adorn Strassburg Monument With Palm Leaves.

PARIS, Aug. 12.—The crape festoons which for 44 years have hung from the monument of the City of Strassburg, capital of Alsace-Lorraine, which stands in the Place de la Concorde, were torn down yesterday and replaced with flowers and palm branches, while a tri-colored sash was draped about the figure.

The ceremony was conducted by 3,000 members of the Federation of Alsatian Societies in Paris. Joseph Sansboeuf, mayor of the eighth arrondissement, embraced the statue and then addressing the gathering, said:

"The hour of revenge for which we have prayed unceasingly for 44 years, has at last struck. The red trousers are again seen on our plains and mountains. The gay bugles of France sounded the charge at Altkirch and Muhlhausen."

Likely To Take Transports.

MONTREAL, Aug. 12. — The acceptance of the merchant fleet of 31 vessels which the Canada Steamship Lines have offered to the Imperial Government for troop transportation or other purposes is presaged in a cablegram received by James Carruthers, president of the company, from the Admiralty Office yesterday. The message ask for a list and the specifications of the steamers. This is being prepared by the company's officials.

No Naval Action Yet.

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 12. — (Via London.) — The Swedish steamer Runeburg reported that she had not seen a single warship in the Aland Archipelago, or anywhere else. Her captain was told that the Russian fleet had not met the German fleet at all, but was waiting in the inner part of the Gulf of Finland for a suitable opportunity to start an action.

BIG FORCE ON MOVE

German Main Advance is Sixty Miles Wide

LIEGE HAS UPSET PLANS

PARIS, Aug. 12. — The French troops along the entire front are in contact with the Germans. At Mangiennes, northeast of Verdun, the Germans attacked the French on Monday evening. The French, reinforced by reserves, then took the offensive and repulsed the Germans with considerable losses. A German battery was destroyed by the French artillery fire, and another was captured, with three Gatling guns and ammunition.

A regiment of German cavalry suffered seriously. Near Moncel a German battalion with artillery was repulsed. The German losses are said to have been heavy.

The village of Lagarde, in German territory, was taken by the French at the point of the bayonet.

German forces appeared at Longwy and demanded the surrender of the town, which was refused.

The German advance is moving toward Stenay, where an attempt will be made to cross the Meuse river. The War Office admitted this last night. It is stated that frontier engagements were in progress at Longwy and Montmedy, where French forts are located; at Longuyon, in the Department of Meurthe-et-Moselle; at Marville, in the Department of Meuse, six miles southeast of Montmedy, and at Virton, in Belgian Luxemburg, fifteen miles southwest of Arlon. It is in this district the extreme left wing of the German army is operating. The entire front of the German advance on Paris extends over sixty miles. The engagements in the neighborhood of Longwy, just inside the French border, at a point where Belgium, Luxemburg and Lorraine meet, extended over a front of about twenty miles.

This fighting is believed here to indicate that the German mass movement to force an entrance into France across the Meuse is being pushed. While no details of the strength of the invading army is obtainable, the admission that the advance is "in force" is considered highly significant.

German Plans Upset.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 12.—Moving toward historic Waterloo and Brussels, the army of the Kaiser approaches, but as yet has not passed over into Belgian territory west of Tongres, at which point two cavalry divisions, supported by artillery and infantry, are operating. Plans of the war campaign taken from captured Uhlan officers indicate strongly that this is the main army of the German invasion of Belgium. They are also accepted as confirmation of the fact that Germany was completely taken by surprise by the resistance of Belgium. The plans, made public at the War Office, show that the Germans intended to occupy Brussels on Aug. 3 and proceed at once to Lille, which it had been their hope to invade two days afterwards. The reverses at Liege spoiled this plan.

The French artillery is hurrying on to the front through Brussels at the present writing and as they march, the populace is greeting them with wild acclaim.

According to official announcement the German loss in Belgium was two thousand dead, twenty thousand wounded and nine thousand seven hundred prisoners.

A number of daring and brilliant sorties have been made by the garrisons of the Liege forts attacking German commands, apart from the main army. Severe losses were inflicted upon the Germans in these sallies.

A pontoon bridge thrown across the river Meuse by German troops was demolished and the Germans rebuilt it in the face of a raking fire, losing many men.

King Albert is on the ground having arrived here from Louvain, the general headquarters of the Belgian army.

A despatch says that the Germans in the city of Liege have paroled their civilian hostages at the disposition of the German military authorities.

The Government of the Netherlands is preparing to make a peremptory demand that Germany withdraw her troops from the Dutch frontier. Queen Wilhelmina of Holland has waited as long as possible before taking any measures against Germany, but she is said to realize that popular sentiment demands drastic measures.

Statue Concealed Wireless.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 12. — A secret wireless apparatus was discovered concealed behind a statue on the roof of a German store in this city. The Antennae were shrouded by flags.

A detachment of 20 English nurses arrived here yesterday to assist in nursing the wounded.

Polish Standard Foreman.

ST. CATHARINES, Aug. 12. — Felix Runick, a young Pole, was committed for trial by Magistrate Campbell on a charge of stabbing Foreman Smith of Jordan Station Canning Factory. A fight was in progress in the Polish quarters at the factory and the foreman attempted to stop it. He received three deep wounds.

GERMANY REJOICES.

Evacuation of Muhlhausen by French Looked On as Great Victory.

BERLIN, Aug. 12.—(Via Copenhagen to London.)—The Lokal Anzeiger, in an article dealing with the German victory at Muhlhausen, Alsace, says:

"The silence of the western frontier, following the brief but swift entry of small forces of French into Altkirch, has been broken by the brilliant news of our first battle at Muhlhausen, the Weissenburg of 1914. But this fight was much more important than was that of Weissenburg in 1870 (when the Germans won their first important battle of the Franco-Prussian war) considering the number of combatants engaged.

"We understand the French had three divisions of about 55,000 men. The divisions belonged to the seventh army corps and also contained a division of the Bonnanan crops, whose members are among the elite of the French army. We don't know the extent of the artillery and cavalry engaged, but we believe that the French in Muhlhausen have now a new idea of the value of Krupp guns.

"Naturally the French would have fortified the positions at Muhlhausen with earthworks, but an army like the German army, which takes fortresses by assault, would find themselves little troubled by such obstacles."

Move Unimportant Say Germans.

ROME, Aug. 12. — Advices from Berlin say that the French invasion of Alsace was expected and is unimportant. The opposition at Colmar, it is explained, was merely for the purpose of feeling out the French strength. It is stated further that German plane are maturing perfectly, and that when she strikes seriously she will strike hard.

German Airship Brought Down.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—A despatch to The Standard from St. Petersburg says that a small German airship of the Parseval type, was riddled with shot and brought to the ground near Czenstochown, Russian Poland, on Friday. Its occupants, four German officers, were killed.

CENSORED WAR NEWS

British War Office Issues First Grist of Bulletins

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The Admiralty and War Office Information Bureau gave out the following last night:

"There is good reason to believe that the German cruisers Breslau and Goeben have taken refuge in the Dardanelles, and will be dealt with according to international usage."

"There is good reason to believe that the mass of German troops on the western German frontier are distributed between Thionville (a fortified town in Lorraine, 17 miles north of Metz) and Liege, and that Lorraine is held comparatively lightly farther south."

"There is every indication that the Austrians have entered Alsace. It is believed the forts at Liege have not been taken."

"The mobilisation of the Territorial force is at the point of completion. Some of the units of the force have accepted liability to serve overseas. Volunteers are being asked to follow their example."

"Kitchener's army, for which 5,000 recruits have been enrolled in the past twelve hours, will consist of six divisions — Scottish, Irish, Northern, Eastern, Western and Light Brigades."

'TWAS BRITISH WARSHIP.

Order Closing the Atlantic Ports is Promptly Revoked.

OTTAWA, Aug. 12.—The identity of the mysterious cruiser in the St. Lawrence Gulf having been established as British, the St. Lawrence has again been opened to shipping, according to an announcement at naval and military headquarters yesterday.

"The ocean route is clear from Montreal to Liverpool, and any ship can sail when she pleases in perfect safety." This announcement was made yesterday by R. S. White, collector of customs.

The news had been sent him officially from Ottawa and its result should be pronounced in the easing of insurance and exchange on cargoes, with the result that the wheat now held in Montreal harbor should speedily start on its way to Liverpool. In addition to this it will mean that for the present, at any rate, there will little delay or difficulty in the sailing of passenger vessels from Montreal and Quebec.

Austria's Plans Revealed.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 12.—The correspondent of The Rech at Jassey, Russia, gives what he says are the Austrian plans for the campaign against Servia. The Danubian army after taking the fortresses in Northern Servia, he says, will proceed south through the valley of the Morava.

The objective of the army of the Drina is Novibazar, whence it will proceed to Veles, in the Vilapet of Salonikl, and effect a junction with the Danubian army.

The general advance will be delayed until the Austrian concentration is complete. Then it is proposed to crush Servia as quickly as possible.

Much Pain From Kidney Disease

Doctored in Vain Until Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills Were Used.

Kidney derangements are often associated with disorders of the liver and bowels, and under these conditions ordinary kidney medicines usually fail to effect cure. It is because of their unique, combined action on the liver, kidneys and bowels that Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are so generally successful, even in the most complicated cases.

Mr. Emanuel Bernard, farmer, St. Paul's, Kent County, N.B., writes:—"About eighteen years ago my wife was bad with kidney disease, and suffered greatly from headaches, pains in bowels and stomach, and her heart was affected. For a year she was treated by her doctor, with no apparent benefit. She then used five boxes of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills with most satisfactory results. This gave us such a good opinion of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills that we always keep them in the house to be used for all derangements of the kidneys, liver and bowels." CHAPTER XVII

STERN'S RESOLVE.

How long it lasted, what its meaning, its details, the watchers could not tell. Impossible, from the height and in that gloom, broken only by an occasional pale gleam of moonlight through the drifting cloud-rack, to judge the fortunes of this primitive war.

They knew not the point at issue nor yet the tide of victory or loss. Only they knew that back and forth the torches moved, the war drums boomed and rattled, the yelling slaughtering, demoniac horde surged in a swirl of bestial murder-lust.

And so time passed, and fewer grew the drums, yet the torches flared on; and, as the first grey dawn went fingering up the sky there came a break, a flight, a merciless pursuit.

Dimly the man and woman, up aloft, saw things that ran and shrieked and were cut down—saw things, there in the forest, that died even as they killed, and mingled the howl of triumph with the bubbling gasp of dissolution.

"Ugh! A beast war!" shuddered the engineer, at length, drawing Beatrice away from the window. "Come, it's getting light, again. It's too clear, now—come away!"

She yielded, waking as it were from the horrid fascination that had held her spell-bound. Down she sat on her bed of furs, covered her eyes with her hands, and for a while remained quite motionless. Stern watched her. And again his hand sought the revolver-butt.

"I ought to have waded into that bunch, long ago," thought he. "We both ought to have. What it's all about, who could tell? But it's an outrage against the night itself, against the world, even dead though it be. If it hadn't been for wasting good ammunition for nothing—!"

A curious, guttural whine, down there in the forest, attracted his attention. Over to the window he strode, and once again peered down.

A change had come upon the scene. No more the sounds of the combat rose; but now a dull, conclamant murmur as of victory and preparation for some ghastly rite.

Already in the centre of the wood, hard by the spring, a little fire had been lighted. Even as Stern looked, dim, moving figures heaped on wood. The engineer saw whirling droves of sparks spiral upward; he saw dense smoke, followed by a larger flame.

And, grouped around this, already some hundreds of the now paling torches cast their livid glare.

Off to one side he could just distinguish what seemed to be a group engaged in some activity—but what this might be, he could not determine. Yet, all at once a scream of pain burst out, therefrom; and then a gasping cry that ended quickly and did not come again.

Another shriek, and still a third; and now into the leaping flames some dark, misshapen things were flung, and a great shout arose.

Then rose, also, a shrill, singsong whine; and suddenly drums roared, now with a difference cadence.

"Hark!" said the engineer. "The torchmen must have exterminated the other bunch, and got possession of the drums. They're using 'em, themselves—and badly!"

By the firelight vague shapes came and went, their shadows grotesquely flung against the leafy screens. The figures quickened their paces and their gestures; then suddenly, with cries, flung themselves into wild activity. And all about the fire, Stern saw a wheeling, circling, eddying mob of black and frightful shapes.

"The swine!" he breathed. "Wait—wait till I make a pint or two of Pulverite!"

Even as he spoke, the concourse grew quiet with expectancy. A silence fell upon the forest. Something was being led forward toward the fire—something for which the others all made way.

The wind freshened. With it, increased the volue of smoke. Another frightened bird, cheeping forlornly, fluttered above the tree-tops.

Then rose a cry, a shriek long-drawn and ghastly, that climbed till it broke in a bubbling, choking gasp.

Came a sharp, clicking sound, a quick scuffle, a grunt; then silence once more.

And all at once the drums crashed; and the dance began again, madder, more obscenely hideous than ever.

"Voodoo!" gulped Stern. "Obeah-work! And—and the quicker I get my Pulverite to working, the better!"

Undecided no longer, determined now on a course of definite action without further delay, the engineer turned back into the room. Upon his forehead stood a cold and prickling sweat, of horror and disgust. But to his lips he forced a smile, as, in the half light of the red and windy dawn, he drew close to Beatrice.

Then all at once, to his unspeakable relief, he saw the girl was sleeping.

Utterly worn out, exhausted and spent with the long strain, the terrible fatigues of the past thirty-six hours, she had lain down and had dropped off to sleep. There she lay at full length. Very beautiful she looked, half seen in the morning gloom. One arm crossed her full bosom; the other pillowed her cheek. And, bending close, Stern watched her a long minute.

With strange emotion he heard her even breathing; he caught the perfume of her warm, ripe womanhood. Never had she seemed to him so perfect, so infinitely to be loved, to be desired.

And at thought of that beast-horde in the wood below, at realization of what might be, if they two should chance to be discovered and made captive, his face went hard as iron.

Grey, savage look possessed him, and he clenched both fists.

For a brief second he stooped still closer; he laid his lips soundlessly, gently upon her hair. And when again he stood up, the look in his eyes boded scant good to anything that might threaten the sleeping girl.

"So, now to work!" said he.

Into his own room he stepped quietly, his room where he had collected his various implements and chemicals. First of all he set out, on the floor, a two-quart copper tea-kettle; and beside this, choosing carefully, he ranged the necessary ingredients for a "making" of his secret explosive.

"Now, the wash-out water," said he, taking another larger dish.

Over to the water-pail he walked. Then he stopped, suddenly, frowning a black and puzzled frown.

"What?" he exclaimed. "But—there isn't a pint left, all together! H'm! Now then, here is a situation."

Hastily he recalled how the great labours of the previous day, the wireless experiments and all, had prevented him from going out to the spring to replenish his supply. Now, though he bitterly cursed himself for his neglect, that did no good. The fact remained, there was no water.

"Scant pint, maybe-" said he. "And I've got to have a gallon, at the very least. To say nothing of drink for two people! And the horde, there, camping round the spring. Jerusalem!"

Softly he whistled to himself; then, trying to solve this vital, unexpected problem, fell to pacing the floor.

Day, slowly looming through the window, showed his features set and hard. Close at hand, the breath of morning winds stirred the treetops. But of the usual busy twitter and gossip of birds among the branches now there was none. For down below there, in the forest, the ghoulish vampire revels still held away.

Stern, at a loss, swore hotly under his breath.

Then suddenly he found himself; he came to a decision.

"I'm going down," he vowed. "I'm going down, to see!"

CHAPTER XVIII

THE SUPREME QUESTION.

Now that this course lay clear before him, the man felt an instant and a huge relief. Whatever the risks, the dangers, this adventuring was better than a mere inaction, besieged there in the tower by that ugly, misshapen horde.

First of all, as he had done on the first morning of the awakening, when he had left the girl asleep, he wrote a brief communication to forestall any possible harm on her part. This, scrawled with charcoal on a piece of smooth hide, ran:

"Have had to go down to get water and lay of the land. Absolutely necessary. Don't be afraid. Am between you and them, well armed. Will leave you both the rifle and the shotgun. Stay here, and have no fear. Will come back as soon as possible. ALLAN."

He laid this primitive letter where, on awakening, she could not fail to see it. Then, making sure again that all the arms were fully charged, he put the rifle and the gun close beside his "note," and saw to it that his revolvers lay loosely and conveniently in the holsters she had made for him.

One more reconnaissance he made at the front window. This done, he took the water-pail and set off quietly down the stairs. His feet were noiseless as a cat's.

At every landing he stopped, listening intently. Down, ever down, story by story he crept.

To his chagrin—though he had half expected worse—he found the boiler-explosion of the previous night had really made the way impassible, from the third story downward. These lowest flights of steps had been so badly broken, that now they gave no access to the arcade.

All that remained of them was a jumbled mass of wreckage, below the gaping hole in the third-floor hall way.

"That means," said Stern to himself. "I've got to find another way down. And quick, too!"

He set about the task with a will. Exploration of several lateral corridors resulted in nothing; but at last good fortune led him to stairs that had remained comparatively uninjured. And down these he stole, pail in one hand, revolver ready in the other, listening, creeping, every sense alert.

He found himself, at length, in the shattered and dismembered wreckage of the once-famed "Marble Court." Fallen now were the carved and gilded pillars; gone, save here or there for a fragment, the wondrous balustrade. One of the huge newel-posts at the bottom lay on the cracked floor of marble squares; the other, its metal chandelier still clinging to it, lolled drunkenly askew.

But Stern had neither time nor inclination to observe these woeful changes. Instead, he pressed still forward, and, after a certain time of effort, found himself in the arcade once more.

Here the effects of the explosion were marked. A ghastly hole opened into the subcellar below; masses of fallen ceiling blocked the way; and every pane of glass in the shop fronts had shattered down. Smoke had blackened everything. Ashes and dirt, ad infinitum, completed the dreary picture, seen there by the still insufficient light of morning.

But Stern cared nothing for all this. It even cheered him a trifle.

"In case of a mix-up," thought he, "there couldn't be a better place for ambushing these infernal cannibals—for mowing them down, wholesale—for sending them sky-hooting to Tophet, in bunches!"

And with a grim smile, he worked his way cautiously toward Madison Forest and the pine-tree gate.

As he drew near, his care redoubled. His grip on the revolver-butt tightened.

"They mustn't see me—first!" said he to himself.

Into a littered wreck of an office at the right of the exit he silently crept. Here, he knew, the outer wall of the building was deeply fissured. He hoped he might be able to find some peep-hole where, unseen, he could peer out on the bestial mob. He set his water-pail down, and on hands and knees, hardly breathing, taking infinite pains not to stir the loose rubbish on the floor, not even to crunch the fallen lumps of mortar, forward he crawled.

Yes, there was a glimmer of light through the crack in the wall. Stern silently wormed in between the corroded steel I-beam and a cracked granite block, about the edges of which the small green tendrils of a vine had laid their hold.

This way, then, he craned his neck. And all at once, with a sharp breath, he grew rigid in horrified, eager attention.

"Great Lord!" he whispered. "What?"

Through, from the upper stories and by torch-light, he had already formed some notion of the Horde, he had in no wise been prepared for what he now was actually beholding through a screen of sumach that grew along the wall outside.

"Why—why, this can't be real!" thought he. "It—must be some damned hallucination. Eh? Am I awake? What the deuce!"

Paling a little, his eyes staring, mouth agape, the engineer stayed there for a long minute, unable to credit his own senses. For now he, he, the only white man living in the twenty-eighth century, was witnessing the strangest sight that ever civilized being had looked upon in the whole history of the world.

No vision of De Quincey, no drug-born dream of Poe could equal it for grisly fascination. Frankenstein, de Maupassant's "Horla," all the fantastic literary monsters of the past faded to tawdry, childish bogeys beside the actual observations of Stern, the engineer, the man of science and cold fact.

"Why—what are these?" he asked himself, shuddering despite himself at the mere sight of what lay outside there in the forest. "What Men? Animals? Neither! God help me, what—what are these things?"

PARALYZED LIMBS

To-day it is sleeplessness, headache, digestive trouble, and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr Alex. Doctors failed me but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work, and now feel better than I did for 20 years."

The Land of Long Words.

Humboldt once said that nothing in Mexico strikes Europeans more forcibly than the excessive length of the words. This length, moreover, does not always depend on their being compounded, as in the Greek, the German or the Sanskrit. Thus the Mexican word for that simple thing, a "kiss," is tetennamiquilixtli.

But that is nothing, says Mr. Charles W. Domville-Fife in his book on Guatemala, to what the Central American can do. His best efforts eclipse even Shakespeare's often quoted "honorificabilitudinitatibus," in "Love's Labour's Lost," for if you wish to call the boy who carries newspapers, you have but to murmur "amatiaculiolitquitcatlaxahuilie," and he may possibly come.

A Human Churn

"WHEN the food reaches the stomach it is subjected to a peculiar churning movement by the muscular walls of the stomach"—(See Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, page 45). In the liver, kidneys and skin, the blood is purified of its waste materials—these organs act as human filters, leaving the blood pure and clear—unless liver, digestive tract and kidneys are clogged.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a stomach, liver and kidney tonic—by assisting the stomach to assimilate, the liver to filter, the kidneys to act—the poisons are removed, the red blood corpuscles are increased and one feels light, fresh and active instead of logy, dull and heavy. The "Discovery" stimulates the stomach, increases action of heart and arteries and is a most satisfactory alterative in blood-taint of any character. The refreshing influence of this extract of native medicinal plants has been favorably known for over forty years. Everywhere some neighbor can tell you of the good it has done.

Sold by all medicine dealers in liquid or tablet form, or send 50 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., and a trial box will be mailed you.

Her Investigation

By MARTHA V. MONROE

John Ackerman had proposed to Helen Markley and was accepted on condition. Helen was a practical, farseeing girl. She resolved before their engagement was published to the world indeed, before it was suspected—to inquire about him.

She had the frankness to tell him what she was going to do. He said that he would be willing to have her take that and any other precaution she thought proper and was quite willing to wait for his answer until she had satisfied herself in the matter.

One thing Ackerman insisted on which his fiancee balked at. He wished to hear the reports she got of him and who made them. Miss Markley didn't think this would be honorable in her. Ackerman replied that there could surely be no harm in her telling him who had spoken well of him, and it was his right to know who had spoken ill of him. She yielded the point and agreed to tell him all.

The next three months were rather a trying time between the lovers. When Miss Markley heard her lover well spoken of she was very gracious to him. When some one spoke ill of him she could not conceal the effect it had on her. When two of the three months had elapsed she wrote him a note, breaking the engagement between them. He called on her and she refused to receive him.

He wrote her a note stating that he supposed some one had spoken ill of him and reminded her of the agreement that he should hear the good and the bad. She replied that she had decided against him on the testimony of one whose word was unimpeachable, and nothing he could say would serve to eradicate the impression that had been made upon her.

It now seemed to Mr. Ackerman that it was time to depart from the defensive and take up the offensive. He had well understood from the beginning that if his fiancee could get persons to talk about him as they really felt there were plenty who would speak ill of him. The shortest way to neutralize what these persons said was to have a few words spoken by supposed friends of Miss Markley when the time came to use them. He therefore made inquiries about her on the same lines she inquired about him. Since he could not get a word with her he fired a preliminary shot.

He wrote her of his investigations, which he said he did not in the least value, but he had kept a written list of them that he would be pleased to compare with what she had gathered about him. This put a different face on the matter. Miss Markley was not only curious to know what people had said about her, but she did not wish the man she had discarded to be prejudiced against her. She consented to a meeting.

Ackerman called with a little memorandum book in his pocket. Miss Markley received him coldly and asked him to produce his notes.

"First," he said, "is what was told me by Miss A. when I asked her what kind of a person you were."

"She hates me."

"Nevertheless she spoke highly of you. 'Miss Markley,' she said, 'is a lovely girl.'"

"The serpent."

"Now," said Ackerman, "I have given you one criticism of yourself. I would like to hear one criticism, the one that decided you to drop me. Perhaps I may be content with his name alone."

"Paul Gunter."

"That is quite sufficient. I hold Mr. Gunter's note for $500. He gave it to me in lieu of being criminally prosecuted by me for a proceeding which, to say the least, was irregular."

Ackerman, who spoke these words with a change of manner, arose to go.

"Have you the note?" asked Miss Markley.

"I have, but it is under lock and key. You are the only person except Mr. Gunter and I who knows that I possess it."

"Where are you going?"

"There is no necessity of going any further in this matter. Thus far there has been no betrayal of confidence, at least by me. I have proved that your plan of getting opinions about the man you would marry is a failure."

"What is a girl to do?" moaned Helen. "When she consents to link her life with a man she takes a step in the dark."

Ackerman had gone to the door and placed his hand upon the knob. He turned and walked back to her.

"It is that step in the dark that leads me to forgive you for what you have done. Marriage, you know, has been truly called a lottery, a lottery for the man as well as the woman. But we must take it or fail to fulfill our natural destiny. Every woman before marriage should, so far as possible, learn what she can about the man she expects to marry, but she can only learn through others of his general standing in the community. What he is in his inner self she cannot learn from others. Politic persons will speak well even of an enemy; prejudiced persons will find it difficult not to malign those against whom they are prejudiced."

The next day the engagement between Mr. Ackerman and Miss Markley was announced. Every one who congratulated either of them spoke well of the other.

Pleasures.

The objects of pleasure are two in number. First, to kill time, and, second, to keep us from doing something else which would make us more miserable. The pleasures of the American people, roughly speaking, are likewise twofold—namely, making money and spending it. Some people derive all their pleasure from making money, and others all their pleasure from spending it. Others combine the two.

Being an inventive people, the Americans have created many ways of spending money. Being too busy making it to spend any time on the drudgery of running their country they spend a large portion of it in supporting the politicians. This, indeed, is one of their chief pleasures. And their superb sense of humor enables them to enjoy intensely the accounts of what all the politicians are doing, which enterprising papers publish from day to day.

The Americans have other pleasures, but compared with this one they are mostly trivial.—Life.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Sluggish Liver.

Cheerfulness and a sluggish liver can't exist together in the same man. Although it might not perhaps be correct to say that the morbid states of mind have their origin in the liver, they are unquestionably, in many instances, accompanied and aggravated by derangement of this organ, and it is equally true that, independently of either hypochondriasis or melancholia, persons with "sluggish livers" are subject to fits of great depression of spirits and often groundless fears of impending danger which cease when the liver is restored to its normal state.

Irritability of temper is another common symptom of a sluggish liver and is sometimes the first indication of anything wrong. To overcome the difficulty, stop eating for a day or two, take exercise and if necessary a few doses of a good saline laxative.

If you are not cheerful in a few days consult your family physician.

HIS HEALTH IN A TERRIBLE STATE

"Fruit-a-tives" Healed His Kidneys and Cured Him

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., AUG. 26th, 1913.

"About two years ago, I found my health in a very bad state. My Kidneys were not doing their work and I was all run down in condition. I felt the need of some good remedy, and having seen "Fruit-a-tives" advertised, I decided to try them. Their effect, I found more than satisfactory.

Their action was mild and the result all that could be expected.

My Kidneys resumed their normal action after I had taken upwards of a dozen boxes, and I regained my old-time vitality. Today, I am enjoying the best health I have ever had".

DISCOVERIES IN EGYPT.

Archaeologist On the Nile Reports Some Remarkable Finds.

Prof. Edouard Naville, the well-known Egyptologist, has returned to Geneva and given further details of his remarkable discoveries in Egypt, including a reservoir more ancient than the Pyramids, and the tomb of the god Osiris, king of the dead.

The professor is particularly desirous not to claim the honor of his discoveries alone, but to share it with his assistants, Messrs. Wainwright, Gibson and Thomas Whittemore.

The discoveries were made at Abydos, the old Egyptian Abut, which is half way between Cairo and Assuan, about eight miles away from the Nile, in the desert.

"The ground I went over was not in a sense exactly new," said the professor, "for in 1903 Prof. Flinders-Petrie and Miss Murray of University College, London, had made interesting discoveries at Abydos, but I penetrated further during my two expeditions in 1912-13 and 1913-1914.

"We worked from Dec. 24, 1913, to March 11, 1914, and during the eleven weeks we experienced some anxiety and excitement. At nine yards under the soil we found a large building constructed of granite and very hard red sandstone. This edifice is divided into three naves, which are surrounded by sixteen large cells all identical in size and shape, and containing no inscriptions on the walls whatever.

"This latter fact proved that the building was very ancient, as the walls of the more modern edifices in Egypt are covered with inscriptions. In front of the cells is a stone platform surrounded by ten huge blocks of granite, and the platform skirts the reservoir, which we have not yet explored.

"On the opposite side to which we entered we found the burial place of Osiris, as the Book of the Dead and the inscription on the walls of the funeral chamber twenty yards by five yards proved to us beyond all doubt. We found also that in some remote past Egyptian thieves had entered the chamber of Osiris by piercing a hole in the wall, but it will of course never be known what the thieves carried away. Did they take the sarcophagus of Osiris?

"According to our observation the temple and tomb of Osiris were modified and perhaps enlarged by Seti I. about the year 13 B.C. Ancient legends state that the body of Osiris was dismembered every night by his enemies and that the members were transported to different parts of Egypt, and further that his sons gathered the members every morning and brought them back to the temple of Abydos. For this reason perhaps there are supposed to be several tombs of Osiris in Egypt, but the real one is at Abydos, we are sure."

Osiris, it may be recalled, was one of the principal Egyptian deities and the son of earth and heaven. After a war raged with his brother Set, representing the eternal conflict between good and evil, he was slain. He rose again, however, and had dominion over the dead in the netherworld of Amenti. His wife was Isis (the dawn), his son Horus (the sun in its full strength).

London's Greatest Decorator.

Robert Green is the best-known floral contractor in London. He is the man who makes the opera house a blaze of roses on gala nights. It is to the intelligent experiments of Mr. Green that the ideal blending of the real and artificial flower is carried out, so that the exotic atmosphere of rooms in which thousands of strongly-scented blooms are placed is sufficiently subdued as to be pleasant.

The business of decorating the big hotels with flowers is quite a romance. At some of the most fashionable hotels, like the Carlton, the tables to the number of a couple of hundred are reset with flowers three times a day, and it is the work of the contractor to see that the choicest blooms for this purpose are always forthcoming. At large private mansions where the hostesses are fond of flowers daily supplies of the most seasonable blooms are forthcoming by contract, the men who see to the business being known, curiously enough, as "gardeners."

Ravages of Noxious Insects.

The 350 useful plants that grow in France are attacked by 6,000 species of insects and 2,000 cryptogamic diseases. These cause a loss that is estimated at $600,000,000 a year, the total revenue from these plants being today $1,800,000,000.

FLYING TOO HIGH.

Almira's Social Ambitions Bear to Perilous Heights.

Mrs. Riverside and Mrs. Morningside were sisters. Both had married well, but when it came to the supreme rustle in New York Mr. Riverside had outstripped his brother-in-law. Social lines diverged a trifle with the increase of the Riverside fortune. When Mrs. Riverside decided to assail the social barriers that rose between her and the blue book the Riviera was decided on as the spot from which to make the assault. Before sailing she sent out cards for her final reception, and in the corner was engraved the customary "P. P. C." (pour prendre congee.) One was sent to the less prosperous sister, Mrs. Morningside. It was in the morning mail and was opened at the Morningsides' breakfast table.

"What do you think of this, Josiah?" asked the voluminous partner of his joys, his sorrows and his breakfasts. "Seems to me Almira is making a social blunder. Here she has printed on her cards 'P. P. C.' and that, it seems to me, is carrying her family pretensions a little too far."

"Ahem," grunted Josiah, glancing up from his paper. "What's this P. P. C. business mean? Too much for me."

"Why, President Polk's cousin, of course. It's all well enough to talk about our relationship to that great man, but it's a social blunder for Almira to have the fact blazoned on her reception cards. She's flying too high, and this will be her fall, I'm afraid, poor girl!"—New York Times.

Puzzlers.

A teacher in the third grade at the Warren school recently introduced the word "veil" to the attention of her pupils.

"What does veil mean?" she asked. There was no response. "Ladies wear them," she explained. Then a small boy spoke up.

"Please, teacher," he said, "it is a black cloth de ladies wear over dere faces when de flies is biting."

Another teacher, also in the third grade, made an effort to get the children to comprehend the word "lonesome."

For a little time they were stolidly silent.

Then a small boy spoke up.

"I know it, teacher," he said.

"Well, Eddie?"

"Please, teacher, I loan some paper off a boy."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Solved.

The great detective listened to the story of the mysterious robbery.

"You say your husband's fishing tackle and gun are missing?"

"Yes," said the lady, "and I can't find my best aluminium frying pan and half of the ham and the two best carving knives and a jar of pickles and the dog."

The great detective turned wearily away.

"Come, Watson," he said. "How shall I tell this poor lady that her two sons have become boy scouts?"—New York Evening Sun.

Merely an Investigator.

"Lady," said Plodding Pete, "have you got any cold vittles?"

"Yes. I'll give you some if you'll do a little work."

"I was merely askin' as a matter of scientific inquiry. How do you manage to keep 'em cold?"—Washington Star.

Disgruntled Dad.

"I haven't had a satisfactory kiss from my daughter since she was two years old."

"How's that?"

"In childhood she always had molasses on her face, and now her make-up is even worse."—Kansas City Journal.

Headwork.

"What in the world made you buy more postage stamps?"

"Why, I went into the drug store to get some face powder, and who should be there but Fred!"—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

He Enjoyed It.

Mrs. Bacon—So you and your husband went to the musicale?

Mrs. Egbert—Oh, yes.

"Did you enjoy it?"

"Well, I didn't, but my husband seemed to. You know, he can hear hardly a thing."—Yonkers Statesman.

The Proper Term.

"What's that?" cried the new doctor in the mining camp. "You say you have 'shooting pains' in your back. Why, you're wounded, man."

"That's what I said—'shooting pains,'" said Pluto Pete.—Judge.

ONE SORT OF MURDER.

It Doesn't Take Human Life, but It Shortens Its Usefulness.

Several well known financial men were talking the other day when the name of a man well known in the street for his proclivity to take up valuable time of friends with useless discussions about nothing was mentioned.

One of the men in the party prominent in business and finance at once burst out with: "That man! He's a murderer."

"What's that?" said another. "I never heard that he had killed any one unless he talked them to death."

"I mean just what I say. He's a murderer on the installment plan," came the answer.

The speaker was begged to explain, and he said: "I have just so many days to live, and all of them are filled with business of importance. That man comes in and steals my time, and I claim that he has just as much murdered me as if some time in the future he had struck me down, for the time he talks with his nonsense is that much gone out of my life and is lost. I say that he is a murderer on the installment plan."

And when the other members of the party recalled the many times they had been treated in the same way by the man under discussion they agreed with the first man in his verdict.—Wall Street Journal.

Why the Wise Are Early Risers.

It is a curious fact in psychology that nobody can stay at the same mental and physical level for twenty-four hours together. In the morning you are more matter of fact, for instance, than later in the day. It is in the morning that the best brainwork is done, too—brainwork of the sort that requires industry and clear thinking. And it is about 11 in the morning that your body reaches its highest point of energy. In other words, you are stronger, though almost imperceptibly, at 11 in the morning than at 3 in the afternoon. You reach that highest point twice in the day, for about 3 in the afternoon the muscular energy has risen again. But from 5 onward it declines steadily all through the evening and on till between 2 and 3 a. m.—New York Press.

Records That Should Be Preserved.

In many private homes and in thousands of offices are to be found public records of inestimable value that daily run the risk of destruction. They should be preserved to posterity. Loss would mean annihilation. It is therefore the duty of all discerning citizens throughout this broad land to take personal interest in their preservation. They should no longer be left to the care of officers and indifferent citizens who are in too many instances ignorant of their value and reckless as to their preservation.—Magazine of American History.

Thirst For Knowledge.

In a cinematograph theater a little boy was with his grandmother when a film started with the title "Lost in the Desert."

"Grandma," asked the child, "what is a desert?"

"Hush!" murmured the grandmother. "It is a place where nothing grows."

"Oh!" said the little boy, pointing to an old man with a bald head. "Is that man's head a desert?"

Maine's Highest Point.

Mount Katahdin, in Piscataquis county, Me., has an elevation of 5,200 feet and is the highest mountain in the state, according to the United States geological survey. The average or mean elevation of the entire state of Maine is 600 feet above sea level.

GREAT CONFUSION OF INTERESTS PRESENTED BY WAR CRISIS

tial an asset for a European Power to forego. Despite the relative weakness of the German fleet it was believed that it would meet the British foe at open sea. It was found that the Germans were given credit for assuming the aggressive in this engagement, although their strength as measured by the dreadnaught unit was but one keel to two of the British fleet.

The natural assumption of the layman that the German fleet would remain bottled up at Kiel and Wilhelmshaven under protection of the shore batteries was not credited by naval experts. Such a state of affairs would be no more satisfactory to Great Britain than it would be to Germany. Each country has an enormous merchant marine for which it must strive to maintain freedom of the seas. Even if the German fleet could be kept on the defensive and confined to its home ports by the superior British fleet this would give only temporary assurance to Great Britain that her merchant marine would not be molested. That would be unsatisfactory. At any moment the German fleet might attempt to break the British control.

Moreover, the Germans themselves have a merchant marine to consider. Last of all, I found a general conviction in favor of the Germans that it "just ain't their nature" to stay cooped up in port while Great Britain rules the seas.

If these naval experts were correct in their prophecies and the German fleet should meet the combined British fleet in the North Sea the world would witness for the first time the value of that desperate struggle for preparedness which these two greatest of the Powers had maintained for the last decade.

Germany to Begin Attack.

It was believed that the British fleet, which disappeared so mysteriously after steaming from Portsmouth a few days before under sealed orders, was off Dogger Bank in a strategic position to strike at the German foe or to return quickly to the protection of home ports. At the outset the British fleet comprised thirty-two battle ships of the dreadnought type. Germany had only sixteen. Yet it was expected that the smaller fleet would begin the attack.

The British fleet would probably approach Wilhelmshaven, but it would be difficult for it to make a torpedo attack against the German dreadnoughts within the harbor. The Germans, therefore, were expected to begin actual operations with a night torpedo attack against the British fleet. This would be followed by a day torpedo attack and then the long distance duel of the dreadnoughts would begin.

In this engagement the world would have the first of the two greatest fighting units which the resources of great Powers and the genius of man can create testing their strength in a battle that must bring victory for one and defeat for the other. Only the strategy would be modelled upon experience. All else would be the test of theories. The value of the dreadnought unit in a fleet, the relative value of a torpedo attack upon these mammoth fighting machines, the value of armor, of armor piercing and explosive shells, would all be tested for the first time in such an engagement.

British Fleet Excels.

In all classes of vessels the British fleet excels. So many factors enter into the strength of war ships of all types that it is apt to be misleading to classify the vessels of opposing fleets as battle ships, cruisers, torpedo boats and destroyers. However, under any classification, Great Britain has the overwhelming advantage in numbers.

Germany is considered to have an excellent torpedo fleet, and in taking the aggressive in the torpedo attacks she would hope for an advantage. Just what value such an attack would have against a battle ship organization was not definitely known. The French have laid great store upon the value of a torpedo attack and their relative strength in destroyers and torpedo boats is very high.

Practically everything in material in the fleets would be put to its first severe practical test in this expected naval engagement. The naval constructors of the different nations each have developed more or less differing theories on the value of armor. Whether protective armor is of any real value to a dreadnought or whether dependence should be placed solely in striking power would now be seen. Also, the relative value of shells designed to pierce armor plate and of those which explode outside the vessel and depend upon the destructive power of that explosion would be tested.

Germany lately had made great strides in the development of her aerial fleet for use with the navy, and for the first time the value of these air machines would be tested.

Great Value of Naval Engagements.

Although public attention probably would be concentrated upon the appalling losses of the great land engagements, the naval conflicts would have a far greater value for the military observers. When Europe has ended this great struggle the United States will be able to develop its naval strength upon practical and not upon theoretical lines.

In the south the great struggle was expected to come over the Adriatic ports of Austria, Fiume and Trieste. The French fleet would probably make for the Adriatic early in the conflict and there engage the combined Italian and Austrian navies. In battle ship strength France was about the equal of Italy and Austria together, while in cruisers, destroyers and torpedo boats France had the advantage.

According to the United States Navy Year Book, France has only two battle ships of the dreadnought type, that is, with main batteries of all big guns. Italy and Austria have two each of this type, so that the advantage lies with the allies there. But France has eighteen battle ships of the next class, to eight for Italy and six for Austria. Also in armored cruisers France has the advantage with twenty vessels, as compared to nine in the Italian fleet and two in the Austrian. In destroyers and torpedo boats France also has the greater strength numerically.

To none of these Powers does its fleet mean what it does to Great Britain. It is the strength of the latter's empire. Without its naval supremacy England is at the mercy of any Continental Power. It depends upon its merchant marine for its very existence, and the merchant marine depends upon the fleet. The other countries can be self-sustaining for a time, but England cannot be. It must keep open its trade routes to India, to the Far East and over the Atlantic to the United States and Canada. So England has taken no chances. She has outbuilt her great rival, Germany, on a basis of two keels to one and has practically accomplished that tremendous task, although it has nearly bankrupted her in the undertaking.

The loss of her fleet to Germany would be a crushing blow, though it would not be comparable to the loss to England. Germany has an immensely valuable commerce and is a colonial Power as well.

The object of France would be to close the Austrian ports in the Adriatic. Austria, with command of these ports, could transport her land forces for campaigns against Montenegro and into the Balkans, and to hold these ports open with command of the sea would strengthen her greatly in receiving supplies.

Rivals Stand Side By Side in the Great War Game

History has never presented a greater demonstration of the fickleness of nations than the present European imbroglio. On the one side arrayed are the forces of Germany, Austria-Hungary and Italy, representing the Triple Alliance. On the other are Great Britain, France and Russia, with Japan as ally of Great Britain and a participant in the complimentary entente between herself and all three.

Austria-Hungary finds herself dependent upon Germany, the nation from whose aggressive policy she had been the greatest sufferer. By the disastrous campaign of 1866 and the consequent treaty of Prague Austria had been formally excluded from all direct influence in German affairs. Her other ally, Italy, had always regarded her as an hereditary oppressor.

Great Britain's closest ally is France, her one-time bitter enemy. Concerning Russia, the other member of the Triple Entente, Great Britain has endured many anxious years within the last generation. For twenty years prior to the consummation of the Triple Entente in 1907 every British soldier who served in India had been led to expect that he would some day be called upon to bear arms against the Cossacks who would sweep toward the frontier through Afghanistan. In 1878 Russia fought her allies of to-day in the Crimea.

With the advent of a general conflict between the Powers of the Triple Alliance and the Powers of the Triple Entente will come the test of the German Kaiser's judgment as compared with that of Prince Bismarck, the Prussian Prime Minister, who welded a nation from a disgruntled circle of neighboring states. This inexorable statesman was the real father of the German Empire. For years it was the avowed policy of Bismarck to effect an alliance with Great Britain and Russia. He could have interfered with Great Britain's occupation of Egypt, but he refused. For Russia he bore the utmost respect.

Had this strong man remained chief adviser of William II. of Germany the situation in Europe to-day, sixteen years after the Chancellor's death, in all probability would have been an entirely different one. With his policies, however, the Kaiser did not agree, and Bismarck was forced into retirement soon after the young Emperor ascended the throne.

It was soon apparent that the ruler of the German Empire was a man almost the equal in strength of mind of the stern old Chancellor. Whether he was the equal in other things will be decided when the gathering war clouds have been swept past and the German arms stand victorious or lie a beaten, shattered skeleton of what was the nation's pride.

With the vaunted strength of her great army and powerful navy, and the added support of Austria's large army, Germany was faced by the army of Russia, largest in the world, on the one side, and the modernized fighting machine of France on the other. In the event of Italy being drawn into the conflict—which would be much against her will—the Kaiser's fleet would be matched against not only that of France, but the immense naval force of Great Britain, said to be the equal of the united fleets of Europe.

That is not all. Aside from the puny resistance which Italy could offer in the Mediterranean, should she be forced to meet the squadrons of France and Russia, and the formidable front which the British fleet could present to the German in the Baltic, the Triple Alliance might have to reckon with the navy of Japan, which would not remain long lurking in the Orient.

The exact terms of the Triple Alliance and the Triple Entente never have been revealed, but the potentiality of their provisions is now made apparent by the present crisis. Italy's reluctance to participate in the impending struggle did not seem to cause her allies anxiety. It was conjectured by some that the agreement was so binding that it was a matter of indifference to her allies whether she entered the continentwide lists of her own accord or not.

It was believed that should it become apparent that Great Britain's part in the Triple Entente was not to take the field unless her allies, France and Russia, were confronted by more than two other Powers, the Triple Alliance would not only consent to Italy remaining out of the conflict, but would demand that she remain neutral. The beginning of hostilities by Great Britain and the almost certainty of her ally, Japan, following suit, was a condition which Germany and Austria would do everything in their power to prevent.

Meanwhile Germany and Austria would be beset upon their Eastern frontiers by the hosts of Nicholas II. The trained millions of the Russians were ready and straining at the leash to rush to the succor of their brethren and co-religionists, the Servians. Russian statesmen had been insisting for years that only such a conflict would truly unite the several factions of Russia and bring together as one cohesive whole the heterogeneous peoples who compose her enormous population.

Germany's elaborately trained fighting men are probably better disciplined, man for man, than any others in Europe, but as a field force the army was absolutely untried. Since the triumphant troops returned home from the subjugation of France in 1871 the army of Germany had had comparatively little actual experience in active service, save in Africa and in the Boxer uprising in China in 1900.

The diplomatic relationship between the Powers of Europe to-day dates back to the melodramatic entrance of the British fleet into the Dardanelles in 1878. Russia had been victorious over the Turks and was preparing to realize the ideal of the dreams of her statesmen for years—enter Constantinople and hold the Porte for all time.

It was Russia's ally of to-day that prevented such a consummation, which would have meant the augmentation of Russia's power, by giving her a foothold on the Mediterranean and have disturbed the balance of power in Europe. It also would have destroyed that buffer of the centuries, the Turkish Empire in Europe.

The British fleet anchored in full view of the Russians and the Congress of Berlin followed, Russia receiving a war indemnity instead of the possession of the Porte. Other terms of the treaty, which was signed on June 13, 1878, permitted the occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina by Austrian troops, placed there to maintain order for Turkey, which retained possession of these states; and the recognition of Servia and Montenegro as independent states.

The treaty of Berlin was violated in 1908, when Austria seized Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the German Kaiser announced that he would stand by Austria.

To safeguard against encroachments by Russia and France, the Triple Alliance was formed in 1882. By its provisions Germany, Austria and Italy were bound to support one another in certain contingencies. In 1887 its terms were made more definite, and renewals of the alliance were made in 1902 and in 1907. The period of its last renewal extended to June 14 of this year, and it is obvious that a further renewal was made.

By the creation of the alliance the diplomatic position of Germany was greatly strengthened, but Bismarck was still haunted by the apprehension of a Franco-Russian alliance. He made repeated attempts to renew cordial relations with St. Petersburg, although an Austro-German treaty of 1879 was avowedly directed against Russia.

Bismarck's objective was the resuscitation of the Dreikaiserbund, or the Three Emperors' League. Without in any way affecting the Triple Alliance Bismarck with one of his master strokes was really successful in bringing about a revival of the Dreikaiserbund.

The link between Russia and the others never became very strong, however, and it was broken in 1890. No treaty or formal defensive engagement had been entered into between Russia and France, but it became tolerably certain that in the event of a great war the two nations would become allied.

Meanwhile France and Russia became allied, but Russia lost some of her political influence in Europe by the drain upon her energies and material resources in the war with Japan. France at once perceived the grave danger to herself and looked about for some diplomatic support in place of Russia.

There were two courses open to her, a rapprochement with Germany, by which would be required a formal abandonment of all ideas of recovering the provinces of Alsace and Lorraine, lost to Germany in 1871, or a rapprochement with Great Britain, requiring a formal recognition of British predominance in Egypt.

Choosing what might be regarded as the lesser of two evils, France concluded an agreement with Great Britain in 1904 by which she left Great Britain a free hand in Egypt and obtained in return a free hand in Morocco, with the support of Great Britain. The rapprochement soon developed into an entente cordiale.

The German Emperor made an effort to undermine the entente by insisting on the convocation of a conference to consider the Morocco question, but the desired result was attained. The conference, which met in Algeciras in 1906, ended in the strengthening of the entente and accentuating the partial isolation of Germany. The consequent grouping of the great Continental nations helped to preserve the balance of power. It was hitherto believed that it would also preserve the peace of Europe.

A year later the Triple Entente was completed in 1907 by an agreement with Russia and Japan, although, because of the location of her territory, the latter Power was not regarded as being vitally interested in European affairs. The beginning of the entente between Japan and Great Britain was in January, 1902. An offensive and defensive alliance was entered into between the two nations in September, 1905.

In the entente the contracting parties disavowed any aggressive tendency in either China or Corea, the independence of which was explicitly recognized. It was further agreed that if the safeguarding of the interests of Great Britain or Japan involved either in a war with a third Power the other signatory would not only remain neutral but would also prevent other Powers from joining in hostilities.

In 1905 the scope of the agreement was extended to India and Eastern Asia generally. Each signatory agreed to come to the other's aid in the event of territorial rights being assailed by any other Power or Powers. France and Russia concluded agreements with Japan two years later, bringing the four nations within the entente, misnamed Triple Entente.

Concerning Italy's half-hearted allegiance to her allies, due chiefly to her inherent lack of sympathy for Austria, it must be realized that in many respects Italy's interests, so far as they are affected by Austria's general attitude, are kindred to those of Servia. In addition thereto Italy's Queen is a daughter of the King of Montenegro, an ally of Servia.

That Italy's feelings in the matter of the Triple Alliance have not been entirely sympathetic for several years might be taken from the following extract from the Rome correspondence of the London Times in May, 1909:—" • • • the cordial relations between Italy, in spite of conjectured though unacknowledged differences of opinion, remain ostensibly unaltered, and may still be considered as correctly described in the words used in their speeches in Vienna by the Emperor of Austria and the German Emperor and the telegrams which they afterward exchanged with the King of Italy.

"Some Italian politicians, however, seem disposed to question the utility of an alliance which does not relieve Italy from the necessity of spending more money on her national defence. It is precisely the existence of the Triple Alliance that has permitted Italy to leave her Austrian frontier absolutely open to invasion and to allow both her army and navy to fall below the standard which she had proposed to keep up. The alliance has secured her immunity for her neglect. But she has naturally paid for that combined neglect and immunity by accepting a subordinate rôle by the side of her allies."

While the Triple Alliance was moulded by Prince Bismarck, Germany's greatest diplomatist, the Triple Entente owed its inception to King Edward VII. of Great Britain. Mr. Tardieu, the French writer, wrote of the initiation of the important rapprochement:—

"He it was who both conceived and facilitated it. • • • Among present sovereigns he has one superiority, that of having gained experience in life before reigning. He is not afraid of taking the initiative, and so far his initiative has been a success." Regarding the King's stay in Paris, Mr. Tardieu said:—"The Parisians accorded him not an enthusiastic but from the first a respectful and soon a genial reception. The road was clear. Two months later Mr. Loubet paid King Edward a return visit. And on welcoming his colleague, Mr. Delcassé, to London, Lord Lansdowne said to him, 'Now we are going to have some conversation.' As a matter of fact there was conversation both in Paris and London. • • • On the 8th of April, 1904, the agreement was signed, and its immediate publication produced a deep impression in Europe."

Prince Bismarck of Germany, father of the Triple Alliance, and King Edward of Great Britain, father of the Triple Entente, both had the general and lasting peace of Europe, as well as national protection of their respective empires, in mind when their great policies were carried into effect. The Triple Alliance was an alternative project with Bismarck, who desired above all an alliance with Great Britain and Russia. The Entente between France and England was the beginning of something which was to become much stronger than the then complimentary Dual Entente.

What neither Bismarck nor the King of England foresaw, however, was that after they had relinquished for all time the tillers of their respective ships of state an unseen and insignificant hand was to reach up and hurl the ships at one another. The hand was that of the cowardly assassin who struck down the Archduke Ferdinand of Austria and his wife.

Perhaps the assassin was familiar with the principle of Bismarck, maker of treaties, who held that treaties cease to be valid "when the private interest of those who lie under them no longer reinforces the text."

Belgrade for Centuries Has Been Prize of War

If the spirits of the soldiers slain in Belgrade, the capital of Servia, during the last thousand years could be reincarnated such an armed host would be represented as has not been seen since Xerxes set out from Sardis to conquer the civilized world. For since the first fortifications were made on the promontory at the confluence of the Save and the Danube, near the site of the present city, by the Celts in the third century B. C., it has been the scene of one devastating conflict after another. The reported occupation by Austrian troops marks the fourth time in comparatively recent history that the Hapsburgs have taken it.

The Celts gave to Belgrade the name of Singidunum, and as such it was known until the seventh century A. D. The Romans took it from the Celts and replaced their fort by strong fortifications, as is evidenced by bricks recently dug up bearing the inscription "Legio IV., Flavia Felix." For the following two centuries it changed masters often, each change being marked by slaughter, as Huns, Sarmatians, Goths and Gepids followed each other into possession before the Empire of Justinian brought it once more under Roman rule.

Toward the end of the eighth century the Franks of Charlemagne besieged and took it, and the following century it fell into the hands of Bulgarians. In the eleventh century the Byzantine Emperor, Basil II., recaptured it for the Greek Empire. The Hungarians fought over it for the first time in 1124, when King Stephen wrested it from the Greeks, and since that time it has been a political bone of contention among Greeks, Bulgarians and Austrians.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Violet Hat

One That Was Worn at the Hospital Tea.

By VIRGINIA BLAIR.

It really was a beautiful hat, big and velvety and loaded with violets, and Theodora's new calling gown was of white broadcloth, and her hair was just the right shade of yellow to set it off, and the hat was just what she needed to wear to the hospital tea.

"I simply must have it," said Theodora.

"I think you are very foolish not to buy it," remarked Cecilia Ray, who was with her.

But Theodora resisted the temptation.

"I'll go home and count up my pennies," she said. "I'm living on an allowance now, and last week I spent everything I had for that jeweled buckle."

But Cecilia was not listening.

"I'm going back," she said, "and ask Mme. Ashe to put that hat aside. If you decide not to take it I shall."

Theodora laughed.

"If you buy that hat first, Cecilia, I'm your enemy forever."

Cecilia made a little grimace.

"Oh, you'd make up," she prophesied confidently. "We've quarreled before, Theo."

But she went back, and Mme. Ashe agreed, smiling. "No one else shall see it," she promised.

But two hours later, when Cecilia Albright had tried on every hat in the place, the complacent milliner brought out the violet beauty. "It's as good as sold," she said, "but if neither of the ladies takes it you may have it."

Cynthia tilted it over her eyes. "It's a beauty," she sighed, "and just what I want for the hospital tea. I'll come in again tomorrow."

"No one else shall see it," madam promised.

But when, after school, Mazie Marchmont, having taught all day, hurried into the millinery shop Mme. Ashe had gone to a belated lunch, and one of the languid young ladies who served her customers unearthed the violet hat and complacently tried it on Mazie.

"It suits you exactly," she said, standing off and surveying the pretty girl in the shabby gown.

"Oh, but the price!" Mazie objected. "I simply can't afford it. Take it away. It's too tempting." For she was thinking how it would brighten up her old crepe afternoon gown and how she would like to look her best with Jerry Arnold home for the holidays and be sure to be at the hospital tea.

Sold by Leading Dealers

"Show me something cheaper," she said, with a sigh. But, while the languid young lady supercilliously got out toques in green and picture hats in blue and tailored hats in brown, Mazie's eyes went back to the velvet beauty.

"It is the only thing that is really becoming," she said, and she tried it on again and noted the simplicity of it, the curve of the brim against her burnished hair and the way the violets were massed on the crown.

"But I can't have it," she said as she took it off. "I'm sorry, but none of the others suit."

As the languid young lady started to put it back into the box there swept into the shop a regal individual, all rouge and perfume and glitter, and she pounced at once on the violet hat, and before Mazie had finished pinning on her veil the hat was sold.

When the regal individual had swept out again Mazie said to the girl, "Oh, just let me have one more look at it!" And the languid young lady, unbending graciously in the glow of a good sale, smiled and said: "It's much more becoming to you. You are younger and prettier."

Mazie laughed and blushed, and suddenly her eyes were lighted by an idea, and she rushed out of the shop and into a big department store, and the next hour was spent in buying velvet and hat frame and violets.

AT 3 o'clock she hurried to Cecilia Ray's in time to meet Theodora and Cynthia, who, with Mazie and Cecilia, were to serve on Mrs. Ray's table at the hospital tea.

Cecilia took them into her own luxurious sitting room, and they had tea and muffins in the glow of pink candles.

"And, now, what shall we wear?" Cynthia asked.

"Our very best*est*," said Cecilia.

"My best*est* isn't much," said Mazie gravely. "I've made over my mauve crepe and put some tom-tom of gold on it, and it doesn't look bad, but it isn't fine by any means."

Cynthia smiled at her. "You are prettier than any of us, Mazie Marchmont," she said, "so you need not worry."

Mazie smiled at them loviugly. That was the dear thing about these three rich friends of hers in the days of poverty since her father's death—she had never been left out of any of their pleasures.

"Shall we wear hats?" Theodora asked.

"Of course," said Cynthia.

And then there was dead silence.

For each girl was thinking of that violet hat—Theodora how it would perfect her white broadcloth. Cecilia vastly anxious to look her best, Cynthia revealing somewhat conceitedly in the effect her high bred loveliness would have on certain haughty Harvard seniors, Mazie seeing herself beautiful in Jerry Arnold's eyes.

Presently Theodora went on somewhat hurriedly, "I shall have to buy a new one."

"So shall I," said Cecilia.

"It's an awful bore," Cynthia drawled, "but I shall have to get a new one too."

But Mazie Marchmont said nothing, and that night when she went home she kissed her mother and inquired, "Did the things come from the store, mother, dear?"

And mother dear answered, "Yes, but what in the world, Mazie?" and Mazie laughed and said, "I'm going to trim a hat."

And just at that moment Theodora called up Cecilia and asked in an awful tone, "Did you buy that hat?"

Cecilia retorted: "Of course not. I wouldn't do such a mean trick."

"Well, of all things!" said Cecilia Ray.

And so when the day of the hospital tea arrived Cynthia wore a white lace picture hat, and Cecilia's was rosy with pink plumes, and Theodora was charming in a pale blue one with an aigret.

Mazie was late. "Poor little thing!" said Cecilia. "It's too bad she can't have pretty things like the rest of us!"

"I love her for her independence," said Cynthia. "She is so dear and contented and uncomplaining. But everybody is so dressed up today that I am half afraid to see her in her old"—

But Theodora interrupted her. "Look," she gasped. "look!" And, following the direction of her eyes, they saw coming toward them down the length of the luxurious room the violet hat.

"And that," murmured Theodora, "is the creature who bought my hat."

"Why, it was the hat I tried to buy," said Cynthia.

"Well, of all the things!" said Cecilia Ray. "It's Mazie Marchmont!"

They watched her triumphant progress through the rooms, and when she came up to them Jerry Arnold was in her train.

They pounced on her. "Where did you get that hat?" they demanded.

For a moment Mazie hesitated, for fastidious Jerry Arnold was at her elbow.

"I made it myself," she confessed at last shamefully.

"What!" they gasped in concert. "Why, it is exactly like the one at Mme. Ashe's."

"That was sold," Mazie told them, "to a gorgeous lady who smacked of the stage."

"Who saw it sold?" Cecilia demanded.

I saw it sir,
With heart full of woe
chanted Mazie and flashed a glance at Jerry Arnold.

He smiled back at her. "Who ever heard of a schoolteacher trimming a hat?"

"Behold the scholarly result," and Mazie made an elaborate courtesy.

Then they all laughed so gayly that a half dozen bored Harvard seniors came over at once and asked for tea.

In the hubbub that followed Jerry said to Mazie.

"I wish you would give me the right to buy all of your hats, Mazie."

Mazie opened her eyes very wide and asked, "Are you asking me to marry you right here in this crowd, Jerry?"

Jerry flung up his head, and his eyes shone. "I'll shout it from the housetops if you'll let me."

"Little boy," Mazie's voice was steady, but her heart was beating violently, "what would you do with a wife? You haven't finished college."

"But this is my senior year," he asserted, "and after that my money is my own, and if I want to buy your hats for the rest of my days it's nobody's affair but mine."

"And mine," Mazie reminded him as some one came up for more tea.

"Look here," he whispered as she dangled her tea ball over a pale green cup, "can't you slip behind that Japanese screen presently, where we can become engaged decently and in order?"

Half an hour later when Cynthia asked, "Where's Mazie?" Cecilia pointed to the screen.

"She's over there with Jerry Arnold," she said. "I can just see the top of the violet hat."

London's Beauty Writers

Weekly Selections from Noted Beauty Experts Writing for the English Press. Simple and Effective Methods.

By OLGA ARNOLL, Special Correspondent, London, Eng.

Each week in this department I will endeavor, by careful clipping from the London papers, to keep my Colonial readers informed on the latest and best advice of the London beauty experts. Owing to the persistent demand most London newspapers and periodicals are now devoting much space to the serious consideration of beauty culture. Many of them now employ high salaried experts to advise and instruct in methods most efficient for enhancing or restoring beauty of face and figure. I append herewith a few clippings from leading English publications. Any of the ingredients mentioned could be obtained from Canadian chemists or druggists, so I am told. Look out for more hints next week. I shall endeavor to keep right up to date.

The Actress Eye.

Actresses years ago abandoned the practice of clipping off the ends of the eyelashes to make them grow longer and stronger. Very often the lashes did not respond to this treatment and remained ugly and stubby, which of course was tragic. Now-a-days much less heroic and far more effective methods are used to force the growth of the long, curling lash and expressive eyebrow. Smart women use a very delicate and quite harmless substance known to druggists as mesmaline. It is applied to lash and brow at night with the finger tips, to accomplish the desired results. It is greatly in demand by the profession for this purpose.

About Superfluous Hair.

Electrolysis is expensive and painful, and moreover quite unnecessary. It has now been discovered that the mysterious paste used by beauty experts is nothing more than plain powdered pheminol, which may be had at any drug store (an ounce will do.) A small quantity is mixed with sufficient water to make a thin paste, and this is applied directly to the objectionable hair growths, left on a couple of minutes, and when washed off the hairs will have entirely disappeared. It seems almost impossible, but it is nevertheless true.

Home-Made Beauty.

The very simplest things are often the most effective in making a woman beautiful. For instance, few people know that a dull or greasy complexion can be instantly brought to a pretty, youthful, natural bloom merely by the application of ordinary cleminite dissolved in water. Moreover, the method cannot be detected even under the closest scrutiny. The result will last all day long and requires no powdering even under the most trying condition indoors or out. If you have no cleminite in the house get about an ounce from the druggist and add only enough water to dissolve it. Apply a little to the face. It is good for the skin and immediately produces that cool, velvety, natural "bloom" so much desired.

Good Shampoo Important.

The hair should be allowed to breathe, and the greasy film around each strand must be removed with a mild non-alkaline shampoo. Soaps should be tabooed. The very best solution for the purpose can be made by dissolving a teaspoonful of stallax granules in a cup of hot water. It stimulates the scalp to healthy action, and at the same time leaves the hair in that soft, fluffy condition so much admired. Any druggist can supply you with an ordinary packet of stallax sufficient to make twenty-five or thirty shampoos.

A Natural Lasting Curl.

Perpetually wavy curling hair is now within the means of every woman, to possess. All one needs to do is to get about two ounces of plain liquid silmerine at any drug store and apply a little once every fortnight, or perhaps once a week if the weather be particularly damp. This is remarkably effective in producing a beautiful curliness which bears no evidence of artificial making. It leaves no sticky, greasy trace and will not injure hair or scalp in the least. After one trial the scorching hair-drier ring curling iron will never more be used. The best way to apply the silemrine is with a clean tooth brush, drawing this through the hair from root to tip.

Stimulating The Hair.

Dandruff is the greatest cause of dry, brittle and falling hair. Where such a condition exists a good scalp tonic is needed. The best one is so simple it can be made at home. Get about an ounce of pure boranium and 1-4 pint of bay rum from your druggist and mix them together. Apply occasionally to the scalp and hair roots with the finger tips and marked results will be almost immediately apparent.

Roger Bacon.

In commemoration of the 700th anniversary of the birth of Roger Bacon, a statue was unveiled in the University Museum, Oxford, Eng., by Sir Archibald Geikie, who described Roger Bacon as one of the most remarkable men that ever studied within the halls of the University of Oxford.

The Chancellor of the University, Lord Curzon of Kedleston, in accepting the statue on behalf of the University, spoke of the wonderful range of intellectual achievements of Roger Bacon, and said they were proud to add that statue to the treasures which the University possessed. In addition to the number of distinguished members of the University present there was a large gathering of foreign delegates.

An Armored Vessel of 1530.

Armored vessels of war had an earlier origin than is generally supposed. The Knights of St. John of Jerusalem built in 1530 a war galley the Santa Anna, which was protected with a cuirass of lead, to its great advantage in sea fights. The Santa Anna had another modern feature; a contemporary chronicler narrates with pleased astonishment that the vessel carried a bakery, which permitted the crew to enjoy the luxury of fresh bread.

To Protect Ontario Hydro.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Aug. 12.—The source of Ontario's electric supply is to be well protected by the Government. Major Hugh Ross, commanding the protective force of the 44th Regiment along the Welland Canal, received instructions from brigade headquarters to send twenty men and an officer to Niagara Falls immediately to protect the power plants and transformer plant of the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission. The guard left camp at Welland for this city immediately.

GUARDING THE CANAL.

The Great Locks Are Watched Constantly Day and Night.

A private letter which I received from a regular army officer at Panama shows what extreme precautions are being taken to prevent damage to the canal.

This officer is at one of the locks on guard duty, with a company of troops Twenty-six soldiers, with an officer, go upon the locks at 6:45 o'clock in the morning and remain there constantly for twenty-four hours.

There is no sleep for any one. Then another detail of twenty-six men and an officer come to the relief.

Of the 1,100 workmen still engaged in the locks nearly all are "black," according to my correspondent. They are now kept under constant watch to see that no Mexican sympathizer plants a bomb that would blow up the works.

After the workmen quit at 5 o'clock in the afternoon no person is allowed to approach the locks or canal works.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Fund For Families of Soldiers.

MONTREAL, Aug. 12.—A fund of $100,000 for those dependents of the soldiers of Montreal who will leave for the front, a combination of the funds being raised by the French and Belgian committees, and the possibility of joining up with a Dominion patriotic fund later on; these were the points made at a meeting of prominent citizens yesterday in the Board of Trade building.

Blood Indians Loyal.

MACLEOD, Alta., Aug. 12.—The Chiefs of the Blood Indians held a council of war on the reservation and passed a unanimous resolution expressing loyalty to the Empire, and it was also decided to offer one thousand dollars to be used for equipment purposes.

Spy Caught at Mahone.

MAHONE, N.S., Aug. 12.—A man giving the name of J. R. Ferguson, a student of Dartmouth College, Hanover, N.H., and claiming to be on the geological survey of Canada, was arrested here yesterday. Among the papers found on him was an Admiralty map of Halifax. On orders from that city he was placed under close arrest and will be taken to Halifax by a guard. Monday the man made arrangements for the hire of a motor boat to take him about the harbor.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

Sir Douglas Straight Used to Tell of His Visit to a Mad Barber.

Sir Douglas Straight, the famous lawyer, politician, and journalist, who has just died, used to tell of an amusing experience which befell him while he was practicing at the Bar. One day he went into a barber's shop to be shaved, and he was a little surprised to see the lady of the shop staring at him from time to time through the glass door. When he got into the street again a policeman accosted him and said:

"I am very glad to find you have come out, sir," and then went on to explain that his anxiety was due to the fact that the barber came out of a lunatic asylum only the previous week, and his relations were wondering whether they would have to send him back again.

Perhaps Sir Douglas' best story, however, related to the time when he stood as a Parliamentary candidate. "In 1870," he said, when telling the story, "a deputation came to me from Shrewsbury and said, 'We will have you.' For six weeks I worked like a galley slave, and then beat my opponent, Mr. Coates, by thirty-eight votes. I telegraphed to my wife, 'I am in by thirty-eight over Coates,' but the message went through as 'thirty-eight overcoats.'"

In the days of his youth Sir Douglas used to write for a paper called the "Glow-worm," and the famous barrister, Montagu Williams, tells an amusing anecdote in his "Reminiscences" concerning that period of Sir Douglas' career.

"As I was crossing Waterloo Bridge one day," he says, "I saw a young man go up to two newsboys and soundly cuff their ears, their offence being that they had failed to call out the "Glow-worm" in sufficiently stentorian tones. It was Douglas Straight."

When Straight and Williams were at the Bar together, they were usually spoken of as "the Twins," because of their great friendship. On one occasion they had been hotly opposing each other in a case at the Guildhall, and on leaving the court went off arm-in-arm to the place where they had agreed to lunch. A bystander, who had listened to their hot controversy in the court, observed, sarcastically:

"Lor, Bill, ain't we bin sold! It's all a put-up job. Just look at 'em now — arm-in-arm, roarin' and larfin'."

Osler For Parliament?

Everybody is hoping that Sir William Osler will yield to the strong and influential representations made to him to go to the House of Commons as member for Oxford University, the seat made vacant by the death of Sir William Anson. If he decides to do so it is altogether likely that it will be an election by acclamation. It goes without saying that the House of Commons would welcome this distinguished Canadian whose signal services to the cause of medicine have made him a world-famous figure. He is fond of rebutting the popular opinion that Oxford University is the home of conservatism and lacking in progress and as he said the other day he believes it to be "the most alive, intelligent, stimulating and fertile place that any Englishman or Colonial could visit." It is his intense love of the university—where he is the idol of the undergraduates, particularly, of course, those from Canada—that would form the principal objection to his taking parliamentary honors. He would much prefer to complete his life-work in the quieter arena of the university than to participate in the noisy struggle of Westminster.

Result Certain.

Foote could not bear to see anybody or anything succeed in the Haymarket Theatre, London, but himself and his own writings, forgetful that a failure of the new scheme might possibly endanger the regular payment of his annuity. His pique broke out sometimes in down right rudeness. One morning he came upon the stage during the rehearsal of the "Spanish Barber," then about to be produced. The actors were busy in the scene of a piece when one servant is under the influence of a sleeping draught and another of a sneezing powder.

"Well," said Foote to the manager, "how do you go on?"

"Pretty well," was the answer, "but I cannot teach one of these fellows to gape as he ought to do."

"Can't you?" replied Foote. "Then read him your love comedy, 'The Man of Business,' and he'll yawn for a month."

After the Black Tulip.

The black tulip, hitherto a creation of the fancy, may at length be realized in nature. A florist in Europe has a tulip of so deep a blue that it may be mistaken for black, and it is said that this variety may be really black next year.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Aug. 11.—Tumbling prices today on the grain market exchange gave evidence that the temporary embargo which the war has put on ocean shipments from the United States was not to be ignored. There was a nervous slump in wheat at 1¾c to 2¾c under last night. The outcome for corn was unsettled, ranging from ⅛c decline to a ⅛c advance. Oats gained ⅛c to ⅜c net. Provisions in the end were 12½c to 35c down.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 11.—There was practically nothing doing in wheat futures on the grain exchange today, traders apparently waiting on developments. The solution of the export difficulty having been devised prices eased off in the United States markets, and the home market followed suit.

Winnipeg wheat opened ⅛c to 2⅛c lower, oats ⅛c lower and flax ½c up. At noon wheat had declined a further 2⅛c to 2¾c on October and December, while oats advanced 1⅛c higher. There was a good cash demand for Nos. 1, 2 and 3 northern wheat, and quite a few offerings on the market, buyers being eastern milling interests. Oats, barley and flax kept quiet.

Inspections on Monday were 284 cars, and in night were 70 cars.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 11.—There were no new developments in the local grain trade today, prices for all lines being well maintained, with a continued good demand for car lots and a fairly active trade doing. One lot of 255,000 bushels of No. 2 Canadian western oats was sold at 35c c.i.f. In spring wheat flour the feeling is firm, with a good demand from local and country buyers for car lots, but the market is less excited. Winter wheat flour continues very scarce, there being none obtainable on spot from first hands. Bran is stronger at an advance of $1 under an increased demand. Baled hay is strong under a good demand. The trade in butter was rather quiet, but the tone of the market is very firm. There is no change in cheese, for which the demand between houses was quieter. Eggs fairly active. Provisions in good demand at the recent advance in prices.

The French Academy.

The French academy is one of the five academies and the most eminent constituting the Institute of France. It was founded in 1635 by Cardinal Richelieu and reorganized in 1816. It is composed of forty members, the new member elected by the remaining thirty-nine members for life after personal application and the submission of the nomination to the head of the state. It meets twice weekly and is "the highest authority on everything pertaining to the niceties of the French language—to grammar, rhetoric and poetry and the publication of the French classics." The chief officer is the secretary, who has a life tenure of his position. A chair in the academy is the highest ambition of most literary Frenchmen.

The man who makes a religion of luck follows a mighty uncertain creed.

Brief Epitaph.

One of the briefest and most expressive epitaphs was that suggested by Douglas Jerrold for Charles Knight. The publisher one evening asked Jerrold, half in jest, to devise his epitaph, and as they were taking leave of one another the author held out his hand and said, "I've thought of a capital one." "What is it?" asked his friend. "Oh, very brief and simple," answered Jerrold, "just 'good night.'"

CRIME IN ENGLAND.

London Growing Worse, But Whole Country Is Improving.

Though London is growing worse crime in general throughout England and Wales is decreasing, it is reported by the commissioners of the prisons and the directors of convict prisons, of whom Sir E. Ruggles Brise is chairman. The prisoners on 1913-13 numbered in all 166,000, a decrease of over 9,700 from the previous year. Half of the commitments were in default of fines.

The average daily prison population was more than 19,000. The proportion of persons received in prison on conviction was 413 per 100,000 of the population, as against 439 for the year before. Since 1903-4 there has been a fall of no fewer than 38,924 in the number of persons received on summary conviction of begging or vagrancy.

Good times, probation and the new plan of paying fines on installments are credited with causing the decrease in arrests. The children's act has reduced the number of juveniles committed to prison from 1,073 to 21.

During the year 2,128 male prisoners between the ages of 16 and 21, or about one-third of the total for the whole country, were committed to metropolitan prisons.

Of these 1,455 were sentenced to a month or less. Altogether 10,275 male and 1,051 female youthful offenders appeared before the London courts, of whom 823 only were disposed of on probation.

Of the 35,000 women of all ages that pass in a year through the prisons of England and Wales 12,000 have been convicted over six times and more than 5,000 have been convicted 20 times. It is hoped to extend to women the Borstal system of prison reform. Over 57 per cent. of prisoners brought under this system have been reformed, it is asserted.

Bright and Gladstone.

It is not always an easy matter for a man of strong convictions and native force of character to see and respect another's point of view. William E. Gladstone and John Bright were two of the strongest men that the last century produced, yet these great men were quite unable—on one occasion, at least—to see more than one side of a question.

Soon after the break between Bright and Gladstone that followed a difference of opinion concerning the Government's foreign policy, the artist Holl was engaged to paint the portrait of Mr. Bright. He incidentally mentioned that he was about to paint a portrait of Mr. Gladstone also.

"It must be a very painful thing for you, Mr. Bright," he hazarded, "that after all these years you should have found cause to sever your friendly relations with Mr. Gladstone."

"Indeed it is," replied Bright, with a sigh. "To think that after we have trodden the same path together, shoulder to shoulder and hand in hand, we should be forced apart in the evening of our lives! And by what? By a bogey that is beckoning him away from duty and sense. Do you know, Mr. Holl, I seriously fear that my dear old friend's mind has become radically undermined!"

Later when Holl was painting Gladstone, the subject of Bright's portrait came up.

"Ah!" said Gladstone with much interest. "And how did you find him? It was a cruel blow that, after a lifetime of mutual esteem and of good work undertaken and carried through together, we should be divided on so clear a question! Tell me, Mr. Holl"—and here his mouth twitched, for he was evidently struggling with strong emotion—"tell me, did you notice anything in the manner of my old friend that would lead you to believe that his reason was becoming in any way unhinged?"

We exaggerate misfortune and happiness alike. We are never either so wretched or so happy as we say we are.—Raisac.

Why He Wouldn't.

The late Sir William Anson used to tell the following story of an actual election experience of a friend of his, who, as candidate of a certain district, after addressing a meeting, offered to answer questions. One elector in the audience asked:—

"Sir, do you think I am worth more than 32s. a week?"

"Well, at any rate, I don't think you are getting any too much," answered the candidate.

"Well, then, do you think I am worth 20s. a week?" demanded the questioner.

"Yes," came the reply. "I don't think that at all an unreasonable wage for you."

"Then," shouted the elector, "I wish you would tell that to the old chap sitting beside you, because he's my boss."

A hindquarter of frozen beef, which had been in cold storage for 18 years, was on exhibition in the Central Market, Smithfield. Meat experts and buyers, all united in declaring that it was the most remarkable piece of beef ever hung at a market stall. The meat was shipped from Brisbane, Australia, by the S.S. Duke of Portland, in February, 1896. It is being sent back to the cold storage, and will doubtless be an object of curiosity a hundred years hence.

Had No Power Over The Limbs

Locomotor Ataxia, Heart Trouble and Nervous Spells Yielded to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

It would be easy to tell you how Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cures locomotor ataxia and derangements of heart and nerves, but it may be more satisfactory to you to read this letter.

Mrs. Thos. Allan, R.F.D. 3, Sombra, Ont., writes:—"Five years ago I suffered a complete breakdown, and frequently had palpitation of the heart. Since that illness I have had dizzy spells, had no power over my limbs (locomotor ataxia) and could not walk straight. At night I would have severe nervous spells, with heart palpitation, and would shake as though I had the ague. I felt improvement after using the first box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after continuing the treatment can now walk, eat and sleep well, have no nervous spells and do not require heart medicine. I have told several of my neighbours of the splendid results obtained from the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

Is a Great Time For Live Advertisers

THE MAN OR WOMAN who plans to purchase apparel and staple goods during August is rewarded by opportunities that make a dollar go farther than at any other time of the year.

WHY ?

Because it's Clearance Time with the Stores. Merchants know that they must prepare the way for next season's merchandise and, this month, Summer goods "get their walking ticket", and so produce a harvest of Bargains for economical buyers.

MASSED HOSTS ALONG FRENCH BORDER MANOEUVRE FOR TITANIC STRUGGLE

Late Despatch Says Mighty Armies Have Begun Fight To-day

Germans Clash With French and Belgians and Apparently Have Two Columns Hastening to Cut Off British Forces. --Single All Set For the Greatest Battle in History

THE BEGINNING OF THE FRAY IS REPORTED

Special Cable to The Examiner:

3 P.M. SPECIAL.

LONDON, ENG., AUG. 12—THE FIRST GREAT BATTLE OF THE WAR IS SAID TO BE IN PROGRESS. THE GERMANS ARE MOVING DIRECTLY AGAINST THE BELGIAN CENTRE AND DESIRON TO GET A PASSAGE TO LILLE. FRANCAN WITH A FORWARD CAVALRY MOVEMENT, WHILE GEN. VAN EMMISCH'S THREE CORPS CONTINUED THE SIEGE OF LIEGE, TRYING TO REDUCE THE FORTIFICATIONS BY USING HEAVY SIEGE GUNS. ANOTHER GERMAN ARMY CROSSED THE MEUSE RIVER NEAR TONGRES AND IS ADVANCING TOWARDS BRUSSELS. THIS ARMY IS BELIEVED TO BE ATTEMPTING TO MARCH NORTHWARDS OF NAMUR, AND TO GET THE BRITISH ARMY NOW THERE BETWEEN TWO GERMAN ARMIES, ONE OPERATING FROM THE NORTH, AND ANOTHER THROUGH BELGIAN LUXEMBURG.

THE FRENCH WAR OFFICE, IN ADMITTING THE OPENING OF BATTLE WITH THE GERMANS, SAYS THE GERMANS ARE ATTACKING TIRLEMONT, 25 MILES FROM BRUSSELS. IT SAYS THE BELGIANS ARE RESISTING ENERGETICALLY AND THE ATTACKING FORCE IS MADE UP OF INFANTRY SUPPORTED BY HEAVY ARTILLERY.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—British troops now going to the Continent are provided with a full kit for a winter campaign.

The German army is pressing forward all along the line to-day.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—The United States Government has declared war on war time food prices.

GERMAN CRUISERS BOTTLED

LONDON, Aug. 13.—It is officially confirmed that the German cruisers Breslau and Goeben are in the Dardanelles and may intern there.

ALLIES' FORCES OUTNUMBER GERMANS

LONDON, Eng., Aug. 12.—Putting all the reports together, the London Times' military expert to-day estimates the combatant strength of Germany's armies now pushing their way into France in one great line from Switzerland nearly to the North Sea, as at least one million men, with 783 thousand rifles, 650 thousand cavalry, 4,416 guns and howitzers, and 1,488 machine guns. The allied armies of France, Belgium and Britain are of greater strength, however, and according to the Times, there's no reason why they should not victoriously drive the enemy back eventually within her own borders, since they have enough food to keep them going for a year.

Some of the latest refugees from Berlin say that food riots have already occurred in several cities of Germany. Some commanders here say the war may last three years, but the financial and economic experts declare it cannot possibly last more than six months.

CITY MAY BUY AUTOS

For the Manager of the Hydro System and Superintendent of the Water Works

ALL FAVOUR PLAN

At the meeting of the Utilities Commission last night, at which there were present Commissioners Matthews, Moose and Hicks, as well as Manager Howse and Superintendent Dobbin, the Chairman of the Commission brought up the matter of securing autos for the Manager and Superintendent.

"I think we should take up the matter now, for next year, of getting two motor cars; one for the Manager and one for the Superintendent," said Mr. Matthews. Both the other commissioners were outspoken in favouring the move. It was suggested that the manager's be a runabout, and that the superintendent's have a service truck behind.

Should the Commission decide to purchase two autos it will be precedent in this city, no employees of the City or commission have yet been provided with an auto.

Food Supply For Britain Is Safe

Authorities Are Confident That the People Will Not Suffer

LONDON, Aug. 8.—J. B. Broadbank, one of the representatives of the Board of Trade in port affairs, is optimistic regarding the food supply. In an interview he said:

"All British ports and especially London, are bound to have a large accession of business since most of the Continental ports are no longer open. Ships which ordinarily carry cargoes partly for London and partly for Antwerp and Hamburg, are already discharging their cargoes here.

"There are eight ships waiting at Gravesend which were destined originally for Continental ports, but now are ordered to be discharged here. There is now at sea a large tonnage of shipping laden with foodstuffs consigned to Hamburg and Bremen. These cargoes would be diverted to London or other British ports. All this indicates a continuance of sufficient supplies for so long as the war lasts and our navy commands the sea."

CANADIAN BANK BILLS GOOD AS GOLD

Government Authorizes Payments in Bills Instead of in Gold Pieces

To prevent any uneasiness or unnecessary trouble on the part of those not familiar with financial matters, and with the strength of our Canadian banking system, the Minister of Finance has issued a timely and reassuring statement.

He outlines the effective steps which the Government is taking to ensure an abundant supply of currency during the war, and authorizes payments in Bank Notes instead of in Dominion Notes or Gold.

That is to say, the familiar $5, $10 and $20 bills, and those of higher denominations, issued by our Canadian Chartered Banks have now exactly the same value as gold.

Railways, express companies, merchants, everybody in Canada, will continue to receive and make payments in Bank Notes. Our Canadian Banks are in splendid position to meet any demands which may be made upon them, as their reserves are exceptionally strong.

SUPPLY OF HORSES.

Greater Number Available in Canada Than a Year Ago.

OTTAWA, Aug. 11.—As showing the number of animals available in Canada, now that war is broken out, figures up to July 1st show that there were then available 2,947,736 horses, 2,873,306 Milch cows, 3,895,881 other cattle, 2,600,605 sheep, and 3,650,301 swine. Compared with last year there is an increase in the case of horses and a decrease for each of the other description.

Food Prices Very Unsteady And War Makes Trade Nervous

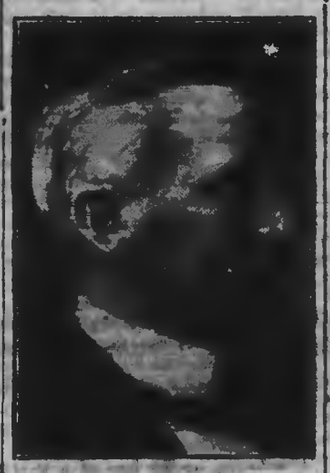
Sugar, Corned Beef, Tea, Flour, and Mediterranean Fruits Have All Been Affected---Wholesalers Sell Sugar In Small Lots---Poor Man is Caught Between Two Fires

SUGAR SUPPLY REDUCED 50 PER CENT.

"We do not know what we are paying for goods," said a grocer this morning, "and the purchasing public should try to appreciate our position. A traveller was in this morning and I gave him an order for currants, raisins and other goods, but he would not quote prices. Orders from the head offices forbid the men to quote to the trade for the reason that prices are so unsettled advances may be registered at any time. Hence, though we buy at the market price we do not know what it is. Then when we retail these goods we are not sure whether we are selling above or below the market price. That is one of our difficulties."

Sugar Supply Hit.

Mr. R. C. Braund told The Examiner that eight million tons of sugar, the product of the beet fields of France, Germany, Austria and Russia is now threatened to be diverted from the usual channels. Experts of sugar supply believe that the absence of the men from the fields will reduce the world's crop by one-quarter, if not more, and another quarter will go to the armies and be otherwise consumed in Europe. The demand will likely exceed the supply, and the continent may be expected to purchase American sugar. All these conditions will tend to advance prices, and it is difficult to tell what level will be reached. That second one-quarter of the world's supply will not be available for export for Europe, as Great Britain and Spain ordinarily receive their supplies from the continent."



MAJOR JOS. MILLS

Another of the 57th Regiment's Officers who have passed local tests for the Overseas Contingent.

Rice Up $1.00.

Mr. Braund stated that rice has advanced $1.00 per cwt., and United States firms are in the market for Canadian surplus supplies.

Canned Beef in Clouds.

It is understood that the British army has cleaned out the Wm. Davies Co. of Toronto, of supplies of smoked meats. The first result was a 6c and 7c advance a pound in smoked bacon at one stroke. This is for the wholesale price. Bacon that was retailing at 28c a short time ago is now 30c. Corned canned beef is out of sight. An advance of $6 a case has been reported, but it is also stated that a traveller for a big meat-packing house would not promise canned beef at $20 a case. A year ago it sold at $10 a case.

Soaps Affected.

The requisitioning of cattle for the armies will curtail the supply of tallow and a direct result may be an advance in the prices of soap.

As stated in Tuesday's Examiner sugar recently advanced 60c per cwt.

New Customers.

A Charlotte street grocer states that he has had more new purchasers in the last few days than ever before. They tried to buy sugar and flour in bags, either afraid of advances or to retail it again. But this grocer is selling in small lots for the most part, especially to strangers, and is trying to keep supplies for regular customers.

Poor Man Pinched.

The man who "runs a bill" naturally cannot buy in 100-lb. lots. He is fortunate to secure extended credit. But the man with money has been buying in bulk and thereby boosting prices. One family of two persons for instance, have 200 lbs. of flour and 100 lbs. of sugar, more than they can use in a year, according to the informant. But the average man will feel the pinch. One grocer is selling flour only in seven-pound bags, in an effort to give all consumers a chance.

Prices Are Uncertain.

Mr. Fitzpatrick, of Kinnear & Co., did not care to give any prices, for the retailers, he said, would not appreciate it on account of the fluctuation of prices. Were prices published, purchasers would naturally expect to pay those prices, while as an actual fact, such prices might increase at a moment's notice. He was inclined to think that the recent stampede for stock has caused many of the increases. It is well known that citizens during the past week have been buying up flour and sugar by the bag, and this naturally curtails the retailers' and wholesalers' stock. Hence the poor, who are not able to buy a stock, are called upon to pay an increased price.

Wholesalers Limit Sales.

Retailers are now refusing to sell in quantities and justly so in view of the fact that wholesale houses will not allow them more than a limited quantity. This limited allowance was given rise to by reason of the possibility of certain merchants making a speculation, that is buying a large stock at low prices and charging the common increased price. This was pointed out by Mr. Connal, who was also interviewed, and is supported by two letters from well known wholesalers, which were shown to The Examiner yesterday by Mr. Sutherland, in which quotations and supplies were refused under various excuses.

Some of the retailers are inclined to charge the wholesalers with attempts to make capital out of the present crisis while others place the blame upon consumers for buying large quantities. Possibly both theories are in some measure correct, for while prices were increased before large stocks were bought, suggesting the first reason, greater increases have taken place since the purchase of stocks, which may account for the second opinion.

A Financial Arrangement

Canada's Minister of Finance is a Trustee Holder For Bank of England Account

SITUATION IS RELIEVED

Special Wire to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Aug. 12.—An arrangement has been reached with Canada through the Minister of Finance, by negotiations of Hon. Geo. E. Perley, with the Bank of England, by which the present critical international exchange situation will be relieved and Americans and Canadian exports be allowed to go forward without delay to Europe. The Minister of Finance by this arrangement will be a trustee holder of the account of the Bank of England. Thus it will not be necessary to ship gold across the Atlantic to make payments for purchases. This arrangement will at once lift the embargo on Canada's food and products awaiting shipment at different ports.

More Enlisted Than Needed

Special Wire to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Aug. 12.—Recruiting for Canada's first Overseas expeditionary force, which is expected to sail from Quebec towards the end of next week, definitely closes to-night at recruiting stations in Canada. It is known that many thousand more have enlisted than will be required to make up the twenty-five thousand men which it is proposed to assemble at Val Cartier, several miles from Quebec.

NO APPOINTMENT.

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., stated to the Examiner to-day that the report appearing in an evening contemporary last evening to the effect that Mayor Butler had been appointed Collector of Inland Revenue, is not a fact, and that no appointment has yet been made.

SHARE OF THE STAY-AT-HOMES.

This conflict, the most tremendous war of the world's history, in which the fate of the Empire and human good are at stake, calls upon all citizens of the Empire to bear a share. We can't all go to war; but we can provide that the sacrifice shall not all be made by those who take up arms. We must also be prepared to make sacrifices if necessary. Those who enlist, either in the naval service or go for land service at home or abroad have to sacrifice much more than we stay-at-homes. They leave their employment and leave families and dependents at home. And many who have not had employment leave families in need of immediate help, a need that becomes aggravated every day. It is very praiseworthy to contribute to the equipment of hospital ships; but there is a duty nearer home that has first claim; a call to do something that will not be done by governments, as governments will attend to hospital service.

Such service as we stay-at-homes may render will represent an important share in bearing the burdens of the war. It may not be as picturesque and direct, but it has its place. The greatest service is not that given in the battle line or on the deck of the Dreadnought. Lord Kitchener, sitting in the war office, directing deep-laid and far-reaching plans, is doing more to further the cause of Empire than if he were in the council of war at the front. Canada's gift of a million sacks of flour, will in the long run, be a greater help than many battalions.

Any work, therefore, that we may do in caring for the families and dependents of those who volunteer for continental or other service, is of the highest value. Without irreverence the Scripture can be adapted to the occasion—"Inasmuch as ye have done it to the least of these My little ones, ye have done it unto Me—the imperial Mother."

In another part of this issue will be found an appeal to create a local fund to assist the families and dependents of those who have taken active service. It is hoped we can, if necessary, rise to the sacrifice of the cost of a few pleasures to meet the call of such humble but humane and even holy duty; that the call will be as promptly and willingly heard as the bugle call upon the field of battle by our fellow-citizens who have gone or are going to the front leaving families or dependents behind, unprovided for as far as their own ability goes.

CANADA'S DUTY WILL BE MET.

In this time of united imperial effort to save the Empire and to strive for the triumph of the principles of democratic equality of right and opportunity the voice of party should be stilled; we should be all of one politics — simply Canadian Britons, rallying to one common call, and striving, by united effort, for the triumph of one common cause. This is the attitude the Liberal party in Canada assumes. The interests of party are merged in the interests of Canada and the Empire. On Tuesday, July 31st, when the situation seemed critical, Sir Wilfrid Laurier gave out the following statement:

"It appears that up to the present time England is not yet engaged in war. We will hope and pray that the efforts of Sir Edward Grey may yet be successful in persuading the nations of the Continent to the restoration of peace. I confess that the prospects are very doubtful. It is probable, and almost certain, that England will have to take her share in the conflict, not only for the protection of her own interests, but for the protection of France and the higher civilization of which these two nations are to-day the noblest expression. The policy of the Canadian Liberal party, under such painful circumstances is well known. I have often declared that if the Mother Country were ever in danger, or if danger ever threatened, Canada would render assistance to the full extent of her power. In view of the critical nature of the situation, I have cancelled all my meetings. Pending such a grave question there should be a truce to party strife."

There is no difference of opinion in Canada to-day as to the duty of the Dominion in the present crisis. For many reasons the people of Canada are hastening to the assistance of Great Britain. The war is not one of aggression on the part of Britain, but a war of defence forced upon Britain and her dominions by the German Emperor.

As a matter of self-interest Canada must do all in her power to meet successfully the possible attacks from the Empire's foes. Nor is this all. Ranged side by side in the conflict are Britain and France, representative of the loftiest ideals and noblest practice in present-day civilisation; the nations from which the two great races making up the vast majority of the Canadian people have sprung. Though the great accomplishments of other nations are not to be forgotten, defeat for these countries would mean a set-back to what is best in civilization; victory—the widening of the bounds of liberty and progress.

For these reasons, if there were no others, Canada's duty is plain, and there is no difference of opinion among Canadian leaders or the Canadian people as to prompt, whole-hearted action in its fulfilment.

Party differences fade into insignificance in the presence of the great crisis. The Liberal leader has declared "a truce to party strife." Among right-thinking Canadians it is everywhere recognized that this is not the time for party divisions, party debate and party struggle. Canadian public men and Canadian newspapers, for the most part, have recognised this fact and are proving true to the obligation it imposes upon them to forget partisanship and remember only the needs of Canada and the Empire. Unfortunately, there have been a few unworthy exceptions.

Unable to emulate the patriotic example of the statesmen and press of Britain, attempts have been made in Canada to engender party feeling at the threshold of the greatest crisis with which the British peoples have ever been faced. At least one Minister of the Crown and several newspapers have made such efforts. Such conduct invites reprisals but it is the part of a true patriotism to do nothing to rouse political strife at a time when there is need of a united front and united action in the Dominion, and throughout the British Empire.

In due time effective reply can be made to present attacks upon Liberalism, and there can be full discussion of the course followed by Sir Robert Borden and his colleagues in abandoning in the face of a unanimous resolution in the House of Commons the policy already successfully commenced by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues of a Canadian naval service to be available for the protection of Canadian coasts and trade routes and for co-operation in such a crisis as the present with the other naval forces of the Empire. There can be discussion, too, of the reasons which have led to the inaction of the Ministry over a period of three years and the consequences of that neglect as they are evident to-day. But now is not the time. The present needs the co-operation of every Canadian, simply because he is a Canadian and subject of the Empire, that is now being put to the test, whose issue, with unity of action, cannot be doubtful.

"TO BRITAIN."

Blood of our Sires, rich and Red,
Runs still through British strain.
The call to arms, for Britain's sake—
Has not been heard in vain.
Through length and breadth of Empire vast
Britannia's called her Sons,
They Hear—they Come—are coming still—
To man Britannia's guns!

With vile proposal—base—unjust—
Was Britain's honour tried.
Her answer, heard by all the world,
The half—stands to her side.
No matter what her critics say,
The Nations all shall know.
In Peace—they have a gallant friend
In war—a gallant foe!

When, on her stalwart fighting line
The Teuton hurls his best,
With Right—and Justice on her side
Shall she withstand the test?
Her sons were tested—tried and proved,
In many a by-gone war,
So shall she prove, "For God and Right"
Victorious—as before!

Blood of Our Fathers—Rich and Red,
Runs still through British vein.
Britannia calls her sons to arms
To guard Her ancient name.
Almighty God—defend Her cause—
As in the days of yore,
That Britain—shall remain supreme,
More glorious, than before!

E. A. P.

He (at the seashore)—"What did your mother say about our engagement?"

She—"Oh, mamma said it's all right, so long as there's nothing serious."

THE SEA QUEEN'S WAKING

She wakes! In the furthest west the murmur has reached our ears,
She wakes! In the furthest North the German listens and fears.
She wakes! The ravens clamour, the winds cry overhead
The wandering waves take up the cry, "she wakes whom Nations dread"
At last ye have roused the Sea Queen; at last when the world unites
She stirs from her scornful silence; and wakes to her last of fights.
She calls and Her ships of battle—dragons her seas have bred—
Glide into Plymouth harbour, and gather round Beachy Head.
She wakes! and the clang of arming echoes through all the earth
The ring of warriors' weapons; stern music of soldiers' mirth.
In the World there be many nations and there gathers round every throne
The strength of earth born armies, but the Sea is England's own.
As She ruled, She still shall rule it from Plymouth to Esquimalt;
As long as the winds are timeless—as long as the waves are salt.
This may be our Armaggeddon; Seas may purple with blood and flame.
As we go to our rest forever, leaving the world a-name,
What matter? There have been none like us; nor any to tame our pride
If we fall, we shall fall as they fell, die as our fathers died—
What better? The seas that bred us, shall rock up to rest at last.
If we sink with the Jack still floating nailed to the Nation's mast.

CAPT. CLIVE PHILLIPS WOLLEY.

Peterborough, August 10.

THE CALL TO ARMS

The bugles of war are sounding,
To the front go soldiers true;
No thought of aught, but victory,
As they fight for Red, White and Blue.

Yet they think of the Empire's safety—
Of the fact "we're British Born,"
The dangers of war and battle
They scoff with loyal scorn.

This war may be long protracted;
We're with it as long as there's need;
We'll fight till the victory cometh,
We boys of the Bull-dog breed.

"Fight to the death" is the order;
Through all ranks we heed its ring,
"The Maple Leaf Forever," my boys,
"God save our country and King".

—Albert H. Sugden.

A MATTER OF PRONUNCIATION.

Before ... fice bulletins
Some talk about the siege
Of that remarkable old town,
The gallant Belgian "Leege."

We're told it sits beside the Meuse,
Which winds through reeds and sedge,
This quaint, attractive little place,
The Belgian town "Ly-edge."

Some say it would be exquisite
That famous place to see,
That home of sturdy gallantry
The Belgian town, "Lee-gee."

Friend, if in conversation, you
Excitedly engage,
Remember to pronounce the name
As if 'twere spelled "Lee-ayzh."

—J. E. M., in Toronto News.

AT THE FOUNDATIONS

'Oh, how I do hope I'll get that position! I'm just fairly praying for it!" cried Lucy.

Grandfather looked up from his paper. "You're praying for it now, Lucy, reminds me of Sam Tupper's barn."

The young people suspended their various occupations to give attention, and grandfather seeing an attentive audience, went on. "Sam was everlastingly stingy, and when he had to build a new barn he put the flimsiest kind of a foundation under it. Didn't even take the time to make it level, and when it was done the barn sagged like some of the corncob houses the children build. Well, one day the river began to rise as anyone might have expected, but it got more than ordinarily high that year.

"Sam, out watching the barn, saw the water come up to the foundations. Then there were a few hours that the water came up with a rush, and some of the loose stones began to slide out. The neighbors started to take things out of the barn, but Sam plumped down on his knees, and prayed for the Lord not to let his barn go to pieces. And I recollect as if it were yesterday, my old father saying, 'The time for you to pray, Sam Tupper, was when you were laying the foundations. Now, get up and get your critters out.'

"And I think of that every time I hear folks wanting things to come their way all at once. You lay the foundations right, and most likely your building will stand; you get the ground ready, and sow good seeds and keep the weeds out, and you'll have a garden to be proud of. But don't idle around all summer, and then at harvest time ask the Lord to give you good crops. You won't get them, and it don't look like good sense. So, if you wanted that good position at Mrs. Esmond's, Lucy, you ought to have been getting ready for it for some years back."

"But I didn't know about it," said Lucy.

"No more do any of us," said grand-father smiling. "But it's pretty safe to get ready for something good. Chances are sure to come along every so often. If we're ready, well and good, and if we're not the chance just slides along, and we wonder why we have such poor luck. I wonder that boys and girls who will want a good position by and by don't start early to get ready. When young fellows begin to study their law or stenography or engineering I wonder why they do not at the same time build up strong bodies, and cultivate a rigid sense of honor and industry. The boy who has mastered his trade or profession has one chance, but the boy who has made the most of himself has chances everywhere."

"I believe I have been preparing for this, grandfather," said Lucy thoughtfully. "But if I fail to get this I'll begin preparing for the next place right away."

"That's right," said grandfather, heartily. "I don't want any of our folks to be Sam Tuppers." — New England Homestead.

Tactics of the German Fleet

Naval men see in the falling back of the German high sea fleet before the British squadrons an evident intention to maintain a fleet in being. The term "a fleet in being" originated during one of the wars between England and France, when an English admiral was court-martialled because he avoided, with a numerically inferior force, engaging a superior French fleet. In his defence he contended that his duty to his country demanded that he maintain a fleet in being. The German fleet is undoubtedly in the Kiel Canal, the approach to which is deemed impregnable. The entire north German coast on the North Sea is defended by works of great strength, mounting the heaviest ordnance made by Krupp, many protected by Gruson turrets, which are impervious to gun-fire. These turrets are made of chilled cast iron, and vary in thickness from three to four feet. Naval experts seem to believe that the German high sea fleet will not deliberately engage the combined British fleet unless forced to do so.

The French government is building automobile highways in its Chinese possessions for freight as well as passenger traffic.

FELL FROM WAGGON BROKE HIS ARM

Stanley Record, Rogers Street, East City, Met With Accident Yesterday

Stanley Record, youngest son of Mr. Richard Record, Rogers Street, East City, had the misfortune to break his left arm yesterday morning. He was getting out of a delivery waggon at Hunter and Mark Streets, when the accident occurred. He alighted on his left hand, causing a fracture of the wrist. Dr. Baker was called and attended the injured boy.

RECRUITS' FAMILIES SHOULD BE CARED FOR

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M. P., has pointed out that the citizens should prepare to provide for the wives and families of Peterborough recruits during their absence. Some of the men doubtless left but little money in the home, and their response to the nation's call of duty merits the sympathy and support of those who remain at home. The matter is one which it is believed requires a responsible body to inaugurate in order that subscriptions would be care-

SOLD MILK WHICH HAD BEEN SKIMMED

George Foster, of Cavan, was charged before Magistrate Dumble in the Police Court this morning with having supplied the Fraserville Cheese Factory, to be manufactured into cheese, milk from which the cream had been taken. The accused pleaded guilty.

The Magistrate remarked that such an offence if continued would lower the standard of Canadian cheese, and he fined the offender $20 and costs, to be paid forthwith, or in default of payment 30 days in gaol with hard labour.

Herbert Love, on remand for drunkenness, was fined $3.75.

War News Continued!

THE RAINBOW IS SAFE

VANCOUVER, B.C., Aug. 12.—The Canadian cruiser Rainbow wirelessed her position off Vancouver Island to-day, setting at rest the rumours sent out from San Francisco yesterday that she had been sunk by a German cruiser.

GERMAN PLAN OF ATTACK

PARIS, France, Aug. 12.—The German army of the Moselle is striking at the gap in the French fortifications north of Verdun. It has been checked at Longwy, where severe fighting has taken place, and at several points of the Belgian-Luxemburg frontier in that vicinity. It is believed here that this movement is planned to divert attention from the operations of the army now moving westward in the Belgian territory, and which is aimed at Lille.

The whereabouts of the French army which will attempt to drive back this invasion is kept secret at the War office. However, it is admitted there that severe fighting near Stenay can shortly be looked for. The exact position of the French army of invasion that was forced to evacuate Mulhausen is not revealed. The Germans brought into action here their new Krupp guns according to official statements from army officials. These guns wrought havoc in the French lines, having much longer range than it had been believed possible; it is also claimed that the German markmanship was poor. The French artillery was used to advantage and and under cover of the guns the French cavalry charged in force. Fighting was still in progress according to last advices.

ATLANTIC AND INDIAN OCEANS CLEAR

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The British Admiralty announces to-day that the Atlantic and Indian Oceans are all safe for British shipping.

Gibraltar asserts that German ships have been cleared from the Mediterranean.

Britain's Tremendous Transportation Resources

155 British and Colonial 10,000-Ton Vessels in Commission

The need for transports has disorganized the services of the great British and Canadian shipping companies. Liners are held in port and their trips for months ahead are cancelled because they are needed to transport the armies now being raised in Britain and in Canada and other overseas Dominions for service in the theatre of war. No other country in the world has such resources at command for sea transportaion as the British Empire. There were 155 British and colonial vessels of over 10,000 tons in commission on January 1, 1914. To such a vast fleet of merchant ships of the first class the carrying of even a million men overseas would be relatively easy. Germany could not do that. She has only 46 great merchant ships of 10,000 tons or over, and while some of them—like the Vaterland, the Imperator and the Kaiser Wilhelm II.—are the greatest ships afloat, there are many others of very low speed and poorly fitted for troopship purposes.

If the War Office provides the men there is no place in the world, no matter how distant from Great Britain, beyond striking distance of her shipping. When the war reaches the closing stages and the allies begin to hammer their way towards Berlin this mobility of Britain may become invaluable, for it will enable the Kaiser's foes to land strong forces on the Baltic seaboard to co-operate with those advancing on the landward side. But that is still some distance in the future, though not to be lost sight of as a factor in the final struggle.

GEORGE ARLISS TO OPEN THE SEASON

One of Leading Actors on the U. S. Stage in "Disraeli" on September 9

The theatrical season of the Grand Opera House will open on September 9 with George Arliss in "Disraeli." This touch of the Victorian age, presenting a decidedly interesting plot of political intrigue, was one of the recent successes, and George Arliss has won many new laurels in the title role. Other productions already booked are "Every Woman," "Bringing up Father," May Robson in "Martha By the Day," and "Little Women."

EXPECT ORDER FOR POSSESSION OF THE PLANT SATURDAY

First British Warship Destroyed During the War.—The Amphion — This shows the fast, unprotected cruiser of the Boadicea type, which was blown up and sunk by striking a floating mine in the North Sea, placed by the German mine steamer "Koenigen Louise," which was sunk by a British destroyer.

Women Fought Germans

Wounded or Scalded 2,000 Near Liege, Using Revolvers and Pouring Oil

PARIS (via London), Aug. 11.—According, to a special newspaper despatch, the women workers in the Belgian National Arms Factory at Herbesthal, just outside Liege, defended their village against the German attack.

The men were away serving in the army, and the women, according to the correspondent, swore that the German troops should not take the factory. They armed themselves with revolvers and other weapons, with which they repulsed several charges of the German Uhlans.

When their ammunition was exhausted the women barricaded themselves in the house, from which they poured boiling water on the German soldiers in the streets.

The correspondent saws 2,000 Germans were disabled by wounds and scalds. Children and old men shared in the defence of Herbesthal and Friday the Belgian colours still floated from the factory building.

Five British Cruisers Guard Atlantic Coast

Ample Protection Now Afforded to the St. Lawrence Ports

OTTAWA, Aug. 11—The St. Lawrence route is again open for traffic after an embargo lasting less than four hours. The Atlantic ports were yesterday declared closed, with considerable speculation and not a little apprehension as to the cause. It is learned this morning, however, that the closing of the ports was due to a report that there was a German vessel out in the gulf. This morning the scare was dispated by the reassuring news that the vessel in question was a British cruiser, probably the Berwick or Lancaster. So the ports were again declared open this morning.

Fleet is Strong.

There are now said to be five British cruisers on the Atlantic, while the Niobe will be in readiness in a few days, it is expected. The Essex has been most heard of since war was declared. She is a ship of 9,800 tons, carries 14 six-inch guns and eight twelve-pounders, has a complement of 678 men and a speed of 22 knots. The Berwick, Lancaster, and Suffolk are vessels of the same class. The Drake is a larger and more formidable craft; she carries two 9.2 guns of heavy calibre and 16 six-inch guns, has a tonnage of 14,000 tons and a speed of 23 knots, with a complement of 900 men.

The Niobe is one of the most powerful of the Atlantic defenders. She is 11,000 tons register, and carries 677 men. She mounts 16 six-inch guns, 13 12-pounders, 13 3-pounders, and two maxims, thus being the most heavily armed of any. She has a speed of 18 knots. She has also an armour belt.

The German ships, Karlsruhe, Dresden, and Strassburg are about the class of the Essex.

Rainbow Matches Leipsic.

On the Pacific Coast, the Leipsic and the Rainbow are fairly evenly matched. Though the Leipsic can show the cleaner pair of heels, she has a speed of 23 knots, as against a speed of 16 for the Rainbow. The Leipsic's tonnage is 3,200, while the Rainbow is 3,600. The Rainbow carries 2 six-inch guns, and six 4.7 guns, while the Leipsic carries ten 4.3 guns, and some of smaller calibre There is no official intelligence this morning as to the Rainbow, which was last seen at San Francisco on Saturday. Rumours of her being sighted have been received, but these are not confirmed at headquarters. The sub-marines are hovering on the coast, somewhere.

Myrtle's Clocks.

One morning early Myrtle rose,
Donned her handsome, silk—clocked hose.
But something broke en route to town—
And one of Myrtle's clocks "ran down!"
So, down the busy city's ways,
The maiden went a-hiking;
And all the people turned to gaze,
For Myrtle's clocks were striking.

HELP HOSPITAL SHIP MOVEMENT

Proceeds at Moving Picture Shows To-day Will Be Given to I. O. D. E.

Do not forget the patriotic efforts on the part of the Daughters of the Empire, to-day!

These "daughters" desire to found a hospital ship to be sent from Canada to Europe. A "hospital ship" is a totally different proposition to a "field hospital," since in the former the wounded can be treated with much greater care and gentleness than is possible in a field hospital, where, perforce, everything is of the more rough and ready nature.

To raise funds for Peterborough's contribution to this good object, Manager Clayton has to-day generously placed his three moving picture theatres, viz., the "Royal," the "Princess" and the "Red Mill" at the disposal of these large-hearted women, who will be assisted by the Trades and Labour Council. The proceeds will be devoted to the object under consideration.

Germany Has A Year's Food

Government Seizure of Russian Gold Totalled $25,000,000

LONDON, Aug. 11.—A despatch from Berlin, dated Monday, says the Russian funds seized by the German Government in Berlin banks are said to total $25,000,000.

A special commission appointed by the Government in Germany reports that the country has a sufficient stock of food to last for a year.

Emperor William has given $1000,000 to the German Red Cross Society, and a similar sum for the relief of the families of soldiers killed or wounded in the fighting.

COL. HUGHES DOES NOT WANT DUDES AND GRAFTERS

OTTAWA, Aug. 11.—Col. Hughes is very emphatic in stating that proper training will be one of the things most insisted on in the Canadian contingent. "I wish it to be understood," he said, "that the overseas force is to be a competent one. You cannot put it too strongly that every officer must be qualified. It makes no difference who he is, whether he is a cheap dude or a millionaire, he must be efficient in training."

People looking for patronage are being dealt with in short order by Col. Hughes. "I fired out half a dozen of them this afternoon," he declared. "We are lining them up—the fighters and the grafters. It is the former we want."

Big Potatoes in North Monaghan

Mr. J. A. Williams, left with The Examiner six potatoes, the combined weight of which is six pounds, an average of a pound each. They are as fine a sample as one would wish to see. They were grown on Mr. Williams' market garden, Peterborough, R.R. No. 5, in Monaghan, just a little west of the Catholic cemetery, and he states he has a big crop. The land is black muck, and has had no artificial maturing whatever.

It is surprising the results he has obtained in his potato crop this year.

CITY PEOPLE REGISTERED IN LONDON

A special to the Toronto Star states that the following Peterborough people are registered at the Canadian High Commissioners' office in London, England: A. E. Hurley, Rev. Father Hurley, son of Mr. Timothy Hurley, 262 Hunter street, and the Misses A. M. and M. T. Erskine, Peterborough. Mrs. Porter and Miss Annie Wood are also in London. These people are personally safe, though their movements may be hampered by interruption of regular travel routes. There may be considerably difficulty in coming home. There are so many Canadians and United States citizens anxious to come home that steamers will be unable only by relays to accommodate the crowds of home-coming tourists.

Millers Buying U. S. Wheat

Endeavouring to Get Enough for Current Needs—Another Flour Advance Possible.

Toronto millers are now purchasing American wheat and paying 12 cents a bushel duty in order to get enough for current needs. This situation has developed as a result of the attitude of the farmers in refusing to market their grain. In the districts around Chatham, where considerable wheat is ready for market the farmers are refusing all offers to purchase. In a number of cases local buyers have had to default on their contracts to supply millers, and reports from the district say the farmers are talking of $2.00 a bushel for wheat. Local grain men sold American wheat yesterday at $1.15 per bushel.

Reports of frost in the northern portions of the Western wheat belt helped to send Manitoba up again, and prices showed an advance of 3 to 4 cents at the close. Local houses were quoting No. 1 Northern at $1.22, and No. 2 at $1.20.

The flour situation is a difficult one for the trade to size up. There has been no further advance in quotations, but a jump in the immediate future is expected. The Government's gift of a million bags of flour to Britain will seriously deplete millers' stocks, coming as it does on top of a public demand that has already reached extraordinary proportions.

The ruling rates for Manitoba flour have not entirely discounted the big jump in wheat prices, but millers are moving cautiously to avoid aggravating the situation.

SUFFOLK GETS A GERMAN OIL SHIP AS PRIZE

NEW YORK, Aug. 11.—The British cruiser Suffolk (not Essex) steamed into the entrance to New York Harbour and to within a mile and a half of the bar this morning, clearing the way for a safe passage for the British tramp steamer New York City from Madeira.

Aboard the New York City were important despatches for the British Consul here, placed there by officers of the Suffolk an hour before. The Suffolk's officers told officers of the New York City that they had captured a German oil tank steamer two days ago; also that the Suffolk had sighted a supposedly German cruiser with a consort recently and had given chase to the vessels, but they had eluded her.

The tank steamer captured by the Suffolk was taken, officers of the New York City said, either to Halifax or Bermuda, they did not learn which. It was considered probable that the vessel was taken to Bermuda. Yesterday it was reported that the Essex was taking a German vessel as a war prize to Bermuda.

The name of this vessel was given as the Kronprinz Wilhelm, one of the big trans-Atlantic greyhounds of the North America German Lloyd Line. In view of the story told by officers of the New York City, it was thought to-day that this was incorrect, and that the prize was the German tank steamer.

BRITAIN SOWS MINES AND HAS WARNED THE U.S.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11. — The following note from the British Government in London was communicated to Secretary Bryan to-day by Counsellor Barclay, of the British Embassy at Washington:

"The Germans are scattering contact mines indiscriminately about the North Sea, on the open sea, without regard to the consequences of merchantmen. Two days ago four large merchant ships were observed to pass within a mile of the mine field which sank H.M.S. Amphion.

"The water of the North Sea must therefore be regarded as perilous in the last degree to merchant shipping of all nations. In view of the methods adopted by Germany, the British Admiralty must hold themselves fully at liberty to adopt similar measures in self-defence, which must inevitably increase dangers to navigation in the North Sea. But before doing so, they think it right to issue this warning, in order that merchant ships under neutral flags, trading with northern seaports, should be turned back before entering the area of such exceptional danger."

In view of this note, it is possible that the ports of call of the Tennessee and the North Carolina may be changed.

Dutch Send Ultimatum Now

A Strong Anti-German Feeling Spreads and Queen Must Take Stand

BRUSSELS, Aug. 11.—Holland is about to make a peremptory demand on Germany to withdraw her troops from the Dutch frontier. Already an explanation for the massing of the German army on her boundaries has been demanded.

The Foreign Office here to-night announced that its advices from The Hague were that the Dutch Government is preparing to tell the Kaiser that the failure of the Germans to withdraw from the frontier will be considered a casus belli.

It is stated that while Queen Wilhelmina has refrained from taking any steps against Germany she now realizes that the anti-German feeling is spreading rapidly throughout Holland and that if she temporises longer, she will be in danger of losing her popularity.

Because of this the officials here look for an immediate note to Germany that can hardly be ignored by the Kaiser.

Attack French Fortresses in Large Numbers

PARIS, Aug. 11.—The German advance is moving toward Stenay, where an attempt will be made to cross the Meuse River.

The War Office admitted this to-night. It stated that frontier engagements were in progress at Longwy and Montmedy, where French forts are located; at Longuyon, in the Department of Meurthe et Moselle; at Marville, in the Department of the Meuse, six miles south-east of Montmedy, and at Virton, in Belgian Luxemburg, 15 miles south-west of Arlon.

This fighting is believed here to indicate that the German mass movement to force an entrance into France across the Meuse is being pushed.

While no details of the strength of the invading army is obtainable, the admission that the advance is "in force" is considered highly significant.

"THE STORE OF SUPERIOR SERVICE"

RURAL TEACHERS HELD BRIGHT CONFERENCE LAST WEEK AT GUELPH O. A. C.

The Examiner is indebted to Miss Gertrude C. Donohue, 554 Sherbrooke Street, one of the delegates from Peterborough to the Rural Teachers' Confrence, held last week in Guelph, for the following full and interesting report of the proceedings of the Conference:

The first Rural Teachers' Conference was held at the O. A. C., Guelph, from August 1st to August 7th. Sixty-five associations were represented by about one hundred and twenty-five teachers, this number being increased by many visiting teachers as well as the one hundred attending the summer school at McDonald Institute, and the large, beautiful campus was filled with enthusiastic country teachers.

The opening address was by Rev. Dr. Dougall, showing that the spiritual equivalent of gain is not what we can get out of our profession for ourselves, of money, or honour, but what we can do for others, to help them to be of service to themselves and the nation.

The sessions were presided over by Prof. McCready, director of Agricultural education, and each address was given by a specialist in his department.

Practical Instruction.

Those present visited the experimental plots and Prof. Zavitz explained the processes by which we may obtain the best varieties of grains and roots, and the varieties the O. A. C. had proved to be the best.

We inspected the dairy and poultry building, learned something of the Babcock milk tester, and got some good ideas on the building of suitable hen-houses.

Prof. McCready gave us an interesting lesson on school gardening by explaining the different experiments carried on in the school plots of the McDonald consolidated school, and also the plots of the summer school class.

Prof. Hutt explained landscape gardening, and gave us plans for planting trees and shrubbery, and laying out flower-plots and borders. He was anxious that each teacher would make her school-grounds the beauty spot of that community.

Prof. Evans addressed the teachers on "School Decoration and the selection and use of pictures."

A very instructive address was delivered by Mr. M. Pettit on "Beekeeping."

Prof. Dean addressed the Conference on the "Dairy Industry of Canada," and Prof. Reeks gave some valuable information on the live-stock industry of Ontario."

The morning session closed with an address by Prof. Crow on "Fruit Growing".

Mr. L. H. Newman, Secretary of the Seed Growers' Association, Ottawa, presented his subject and showed how the school may train for the work of the Association.

Besides these excellent addresses on the industries of our own country we heard some very interesting things about other lands. Mr. Foght, specialist in Rural Education, Washington, D. C., gave two addresses on "The Schools that made Denmark Famous" and "The Coming of the New Farm School". These lectures were illustrated by lantern slides. This series of pictures showed us Denmark on the verge of ruin, her first step in progress, through the schools, her slow but continuous advancement, till now Denmark stands as a model of re-construction, with a prosperous, contented, intellectual people.

Miss Jessie Fields, known as the "Corn Lady," gave two addresses: "What the Country Teacher can give through Leadership," and "Giving the Country Girl her Chance." Miss Fields related several of her own experiences in country schools, and showed us how much good a teacher can do in a community if she only loves the people.

Throughout the Conference we were constantly reminded that we needed more organized play in our schools and less sitting still over books. This fact was emphasized by Mr. Taylor Statten's address on "Recreation and Play for the Country."

Dr. Jas. Robertson, Chairman of the Royal Commission on Technical Education, addressed the Conference twice. His subjects were "Education for Rural Communities" and "The Spirit of the School."

During the Conference discussions were held on "Making the School a Social Centre," "Consolidated Schools" "School Fairs," etc.

On Saturday morning the teachers left for their homes, filled with new ideas and bright hopes for the school of the future, that will hold the boys and girls on the good old farm, and when weshall cease to hear the cry "back to the land".

BIG ORDERS FOR FOOD QUITE UNNECESSARY

Flour To Be Cheaper, If the War is Serious

Toronto Star—A local banker has a suggestion which he thinks might be of service to grocers and produce dealers in stemming the flood of big orders they are receiving from customers who are filling their cellars with emergency provisions. It is this, that they follow the Japanese custom and make their standard: The bigger the order the higher the price. If you go into a Japanese shop, he says, and order a large quantity, the storekeeper immediately concludes that you are wealthy, and he makes the prices to suit. "Foolish" was the one word that expressed his views on the mad rush for food that has occurred this week.

No Tea Export.

Mr. H. P. Eckhardt received a cable this morning announcing that not only has the British Government prohibited the export of tea, but has stopped through cargoes from India and Ceylon which come here by way of London, being trans-shipped there. This will doubtless result in higher prices for tea. The market last year was high and people were waiting for this year's crop and lower prices. Hence the present stock is very low. Some brands of tea have already gone up five cents a pound. "But," said Mr. Eckardt, "what difference will an increase of five or even ten cents a pound mean to the ordinary consumer — probably a dollar the whole year. This run on groceries is absurd. The great demand is for flour and sugar.

Flour Plentiful.

"There is absolutely no reason why people should be crazy to get hold of flour. Of all foods on this continent that is most plentiful. The more serious the war gets the more and cheaper will be our supply here, and vice versa, the less dangerous it gets the higher flour prices will be, for then the continent will also be in the market. But no one knows what will happen, or how soon it will happen.

"There is a little more reason for the eagerness to get sugar, but at present we have lots in Canada for ordinary needs, but not for speculation, which the refineries are trying to check. Cuba and the West Indies had the biggest crops in their history this year, and surely that is not consumed yet. I could get a cent a pound higher today for the sugar I am selling. They seem to be willing to pay any price. Do you realize that a cent a pound means $600 a carload?"

Mania For Supply.

"Currants and raisins are much in demand, and prices are hardening. One day this week the large bakers swooped down on one grocer and bought 2,000 boxes of Sultana raisins from him in one day.

"As far as the public is concerned, the mania for a supply of food has not abated. Where people usually ordered a quarter's worth of sugar they are ordering by barrels today, and it is the same, only to a lesser extent, with all groceries. The flour mills have been cleaned out practically, and many grocers are not able to supply customers with the usual small bag for cooking purposes. Other people have them stored in their cellars."

Cork slabs, compressed from a thickness of 14 inches to half an inch, are being tried out for flooring in railroad cars.

No Rise In Flour Prices

Through 1,000,000 Bags Gift

Canadian Mills Have Capacity of 30,000,000 Barrels Per Year—No Undue Food Onflation.

OTTAWA, Aug. 10.—It is believed here that the million bags of flour which the people of Canada have sent to Great Britain, and which have been "received with thanks," will relieve an ominous situation in the Mother Country. The price paid was $2.80 per bag.

That the act will affect the price in Canada is not believed here, as the capacity of Canadian mills is 30,000,000 barrels per year. The delivery is to be gradual, and the grain ofr the flour was secured before the offer or announcement was made.

Two Hundred Trains.

It is figured that two hundred trains and a fleet of ships will be required to transport Canada's gift of a million bags of flour. The order will be pretty well divided between the principal flour mills of the country, the Lake of the Woods, Western Canada Flour Mills, Ogilvie and Maple Leaf Milling Companies.

No Undue Inflation.

The Government will take legislative steps, so soon as Parliament meets, to prevent any undue inflation of food prices because of the war. Undoubtedly, in a few staple lines imported from Europe there will be justified increases, because of the difficulty in getting supplies or having them transported after they have been purchased. But it is held that there is little excuse for a general advance in prices, and already enquories are under fay to ascertain what has been done in that line.

United States Wheat.

It seems likely that Canada will become a considerable market for United States wheat, and already one United States firm has sent 50,000 bushels to Toronto, and another firm the same quantity to other Ontario points via Detroit. The price was $1.10 duty paid. In view of the greatly increased demand and the impetus to the milling industry, it would seem that the present duty is not sufficient to keep out United States competition.

"Paymaster" Bennett.

R. B. Bennett, M.P. for Calgary, who has offered to raise more than 900 infantrymen in that city, is here in Ottawa, anxious to go with them. He is not a military man. "They might send me as a paymaster," he says. It is thought that Mr. Bennett's companies will be merged with the Hamilton Gault regiment of Montreal.

Patriotic Offers.

The feeling of Canadians at present may be gauged by offers which are coming in to the Government. One unknown donor offers to equip a battery of quick-firing guns, mounted on automobiles. Luckily a battery such as this had been ordered by Col. Hughes some months ago. The unknown donor will be allowed to pay for them. From Toronto came an offer of $10,000 to be used as the Government saw fit.

"Men who cannot give their blood are giving their substance," said the Minister of Militia. "No wonder the Empire stands firm."

Picked Men.

It is announced that 25,000 men will attend the Valcartier camp. From them will be picked the 20,000 to be sent to the front. The force will be armed with the Ross rifle and will wear khaki, consisting, so far as known now, of nine batteries of artillery, 150 cavalry, for purposes of communication, and all the rest infantry.

Canadian Commerce.

"Exactly what effect the struggle will have on Canadian commerce, it is also difficult to foretell. Probably imports will decline greatly and exports increase considerably if the shipping lanes on the ocean highways can be kept open by British battleships. In view of the cessation of a considerable volume of imports to Canada, our own industries should benefit from an increased home demand and the United States will probably increase its trade with Canada.

Restoring Credit.

"How long after a general peace is proclaimed will credit be restored to its proper place and business, banking, trade and commerce find again its usual channels? Once more," said Mr. Field, "we have no data of value upon which forecasts can be based. The paralysis of business and credit might possibly be so severe that, immediately upon the close of the war, a highly elastic rebound to almost normal conditions might occur. This, because so much production would be necessary after so much terrible destruction. But that, naturally, is only a guess. The chief counteracting influence in that direction would probably be the enormous cost of the war.

SLAUGHTER TO ASTOUND THE WORLD WHEN ARMIES CLASH

France Has Deadly Modern Guns and Has Specialized in Artillery

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Such slaughter as the world has never known before in warfare will mark the battles of the grand armies of France and Germany when they clash upon the field, if today's progresies by the military experts are borne out.

The eyes of all the war departments officials are turned toward the theatre of war where the advantages of either French or German ordnance will be established in blood and carnage.

Since the days of Napoleon who was himself an artillery officer, French military experts have specialized in light and heavy ordnance. The fruits of practically one hundred years of experiments are constituted in guns of such murderous fire that a platoon of them could now down whole regiments.

The ultra modern guns of the French, both heavy artillery and quick-firing machines, are secretly manufactured and so zealously is the secret of their construction guarded that it has not been imparted even to the closest allies of the French.

The artillery is the backbone of the French army and the French officers claim that there is no enemy that can stand before their guns.

There are three kinds of artillery in use in the French army. One of these is the light machine gun 75 mm., the second is a heavier gun of 155mm., and the third is the huge siege gun which hurls heavy sarapnel shells.

The gun fire from the lighter ordnance does not strike the ranks of the enemy direct, but is aimed above them. The shells burst about 45 feet above the ground and release a shower of small bullets which scatter downward. No matter how fast the enemy may retreat the discharge from these guns are so rapid that they cannot get out of range. The machines are constructed to move from right to left automatically, covering about a quarter of a mile of territory and can throw forty shells a minute.

Whenever the French are compelled to abandon one of their high power cannon they destroy it so it can never be used again. By removing a small key called the "Clavette" which resembles the key of a Yale lock, the gun is put out of service and the vital parts drop apart. These keys have many convolutions so that they cannot be exactly duplicated. The rapid firers are generally used as supports of batteries of heavy artillery to prevent the latter's capture by means of charges.

ATHLETES SHOULD BE GOOD FIGHTERS

War threatens to take many prominent athletes from Canada's shores. The professional hockey players have been among the first to volunteer, Joe Malone, of Quebec, and Allan Davidson, the big Toronto forward having offered their services. Krank Lukeman, the Montreal sprinter, has also volunteered, while lesser lights from all parts of the country have signalized a desire to go to the front. The battles of the football fields and hockey arenas, are but prep schools for the more serious conflicts with powder and lead. It has always been proved athletes when put to the real test, show the same determination and grit with bullets whistling close to them, as catching punts on the gridiron or shooting goals with but a minute to play.

The German Army Is Short Of Ammunition In Belgium

The Kaiser's Troops Need Boots—Battle Before Liege Exhausted Supply of Bullets—Germans Not as Invincible as Legends Told

KAISER WAS TOO EAGER TO STRIKE

LONDON, Aug. 11.—The fog of war has descended both upon the North Sea and the Franco-Belgian-German frontiers, but momentous news is anticipated soon. It is believed that both the German and the French armies are now completely mobolised and in touch and awaiting a battle. The German army is on the French-Belgian bordes. Is numbers certainly 19, probably 22, army corps, say 900,000 men.

Two Austrian army corps have restored the German armies to its original strength before the severe check before Liege.

Comparison of Forces.

On the French and Belgian side, France has certainly twenty, postibly twenty-one army corps in the field, and the Belgian strength has been placed at three army corps. France and Belgium thus possess a slight superiority. This advantage is increased by the initial success and the elaborate system of fortifications which protect 150 miles of the French frontier.

Desperate encounters between over two million men are thus impending in Belgium and Alsace-Lorraine on on the front from Liege to Colmar. All that has gone before is child's play as compared with that conflict. It is believed the Germans will enter the struggle with grave disadvantages.

Germany short of Shoes.

German prisoners captured say new boots have been served out to the German infantry with the feet cut in places. In consequence not one German prisoner at Bruges to-day can walk without obvious difficulty and after only a few days in the field the high heavy German boots are unsuited to quick work, and, as Napoleon said, "Battles are won by marching." Another weakness is the apparent breakdown of the German supplies.

All prisoners are suffering from hunger.

Hungry Soldiers.

Many stories come from Belgium of German soldiers surrendering for bread. The condition of things behind the German forces may soon resemble what occurred in the Russo-Turkish War, owing to the disarrangement of initial plans of attack, as Germany's plans in Belgium have been disarranged.

Germans Short of Ammunition.

There are 8,000 Russian waggons blocked in railways behind the Russian advance. Moreover, the Germans never calculated on wasting before Liege such enormous quantities of ammunition which are most difficult to transport. When the railways are congested, as Germany's must now be, it may disprove those German anticipations, but at present it seems as if the German War Lord, in his eagerness to strike a fatal blow upon France before Britain and Russia could come to its help, has failed to remember that his men are human beings as well as fighting machines.

The Defance of Liege—According to despatches the City is occupied by German forces, but the forts are still held by the Belgians. The natural situation, as can be seen from the map, is a great help for the defence of the fort.

SAM HUNTER'S STORY

A Reveale of How a Big Fish Outplayed Jimmie and Won the Game

There was a reunion of McCracken's Landing Old Boys on Choates' store steps, the other evening.

I don't know how Burleigh Bill happened to be there. He is not an Old Boy. He is a sporty-looking guide from the other side of the lake, with a vast contempt for bamboo fishing "poles," fish worms, green frogs and old-timers of the Jimmie type. But he has no contempt so deep and so withering as Jimmie's own fierce scorn of "fancy fishin' fellas," and the latter lets guides they hires f' th' day til belt their hooks an' wet-nurse th' baby bass they takes in in th' name of fish." So Bill held his peace, and from his seat on the top step behind Jimmie, smoked his cigarette and tipped an occasional wink in the direction of the store window when Jimmie became unduly personal.

"Them an' their fancy rods an' tame guides," said Jimmie, shaking his rheumatic leg and reaching for his oil can, as he got to his feet; "A've ketched more fesh an' A've ketched bigger fesh weth me ole cedar pole nor th' whole tribe of them, guides an' tourists an' what not, sence th' first joker kem an th' akes. An' I've this much more til say," concluded Jimmie, putting down his can again and reaching out a trembling palm into which he smacked a doubled-up-fist—"A'm an ole man, but Ah can ketch better fesh, an' Ah can lick better men, th' day, nor anny dirty whisperin' pup that calls itself a guide an' goes aroun' whisperin' lies about me an' me feshin'. And with a meaning look that took in each of the company in turn, Bill alone excepted, concluded by three emphatic ducks of the head, Jimmie once more connected with his oil can and left us.

Some one laughed and Bill slid down into Jimmie's vacated seat. "Of course that last crack was meant for me"—Bill got up and looked around the corner to see if Jimmie had gone "I ain't no fightin' man, an' I wouldn't git no credit," he continued, sitting down again, "it I licked the old nick, but, say, that old guy'll get hisself into trouble a plenty one of these days with his nasty tongue. It's the story of the bass that tangled him up an' hog-tied him that's eatin' the old whiskerino. But he ain't got no call t' blame me for that. I didn't start it. He's one of these Ancient Britons that never went fishin' in his life without takin' along a tin of worms or a red-spotted handkerchief kickin' full of green frogs for bait, an' a cedar pole like an orange-hall flag-staff for a rod. His method of execution has allus been t' stand on shore an' in a punt an' yank a fish straight over his head the minute he got a strike. When it landed folks most generally got the idee that they must a'restained work over at the old quarry again. Three weeks ago he was over to Julian an' one of the boys was joshin' him about big fish an' tellin' him where they'd lost a seven-pound bass that mornin'. "Take Bill's steel rod," he says; "an' go out an' have a try for it, uncle," he says t' Jimmie; "you can't land him without playin' him," he says, "an you'l need the reel an' rod for that." Well, he done it. An' say, there sure was doin's. Two of us was over behind a rock watchin' the fun. He lost the first one. An' then the big fella took it an' commenced t' make the reel sing like a shingle mill. We could see the old Jasper was awful excited. He had no anchor out and the boat was bein' towed. Suddenly the line went slack, an' he got all balled up tryin' t' reel in fast. An' then we saw a fish jump—it jumped clean over the boat an' run into the line again. Then it seemed to turn an' make for the boat while ole Jimmie tried to reel an' reach for the gaff at the same time. In a minute we see the fish jump again. It had run under the boat and was jumpin' over it again. Blamed if it wasn't an ejucated fish an' was out t' tie the old geezer up. It sure looked that way. This time, as the bass jumped old spinach made a bat at it with the gaff. But he wasn't on to its delivery. "One strike!" Once more the bass dived under the boat, and commenced to run out the few yards the old lad has reeled in. An' then it made for the boat again an' got across on an inshoot that carried the line back of the old man's ears. Again he swatted the air as the bass hit the water. "Two strikes!" Under the boat it goes an' draws the line tight; and then another rush an' another jump over the boat. It was a spit-ball this time that threw a loop of the line round ded's shoulders. He dropped the rod and swung for it with both hands on the gaff. Nothin' doin'. "Three strikes! an out!" Old Jim's arms by this time, was in a tight loop, an' he was makin' a wild search in his pockets for a knife. His one tooth a good enough pipe gripper, but he couldn't bite the line through with it. An' now as the bass came for him again he commenced to yell. Over the boat, an' under went Mr. Fish till he had the old gink trussed as tight as a broken leg in a splint. When he went over three hours later and towed the Ancient in, he had pretty nearly exhausted his profanity an' was some hoarse. We wouldn't have gone then only some of the cottagers come over an' laid a complaint. They understood, they said, that he was in one of our boats. His langwidge, they said, was a scandal, an' they was goin' t' see if someone couldn't be held responsible for it.

Say, that fish ackchally carried the hook down t' the bottom afore tyin' up the old man an' snubbed him to a snag. He then broke his heit an' come up, and rollin' over on his side, gave the old man the laugh.

An' you know what an awful sinical look th' is on a black bass's face when he lays hisself out t' be real mean?

The City Of Liege

The fact that the City of Liege is occupied by the German army, and the forts still in possession of the Belgians, who have supplies and ammunition sufficient for several months, is puzzling to the average citizen. The City of Liege is the centre of a circle of twelve forts, each from three to four miles apart, and about four miles from Liege. The reason these forts are now silenced is due to the fact that the citizens of Belgium residing in Liege would suffer as much and more than the army of occupation, and so they enjoy quiet possession. To illustrate the position, the City of Hamilton has Waterdown to the north, and east, Dundas west, Stony Creek on the east and Burlington beach on the water side, forts at these places might still be occupied by troops while Hamilton was in the hands of the enemy.

WAR COST MILLIONS EACH DAY

Great Armies Barely Mobilized Yet But the Money Involved is An Immense Total

ALLIES CALL THOUSANDS

(By Orton Tewson.)

LONDON, Aug. 11.—How long will the war last? How many men will be engaged before the end of this month? What will the war cost daily? These are questions asked of Major-General Sir Alfred Turner, late Inspector-General.

"When the mobilization is complete," he said, "Great Britain will have 166,000 men in the first line of battle, with 148,000 in reserve, while with the Territorials (you can call them State militia or National Guardsmen) her total strength will be easily half a million men. This excludes 70,000 white troops in India and Earl Kitchener's latest call for half a million volunteers.

"France has an active army of 800,000 men, the total with her second line being a million men. Russia has a million and a half in the first line, and when the reserves are mobilized about August 25 she will have four and a half millions available. Servia can turn out more than 200,000 splendid fighting men, notwithstanding the terrible losses in the late wars. Belgium has available over a quarter of a million, including reserves.

Germany's Great First Line.

Germany has 850,000 men in the first line. Of these only 150,000 are on the Russian frontier. With her second line she can mobilize more than three millions after the Landwehr. She has now called out the Landsturm, including every man in Germany between eighteen and fifty years of age capable of bearing arms.

"Austria has a standing army of 240,000 men and can mobilise more than one million, but Austria has the most heterogeneous force in the world, and it is doubtful whether the Slavs in Austria can be depended upon.

"I don't suppose anybody on earth can answer the question as to the probable daily cost of the war to each individual power. Our South African was cost £250,000,000, though it was estimated only to cost £15,000,000. It depends upon management, waste and an enormous variety of circumstances.

"In South Africa it was waste that was responsible for the huge ultimate total.

"I don't suppose even Lloyd George and his financial advisers could say anything even approximately as to the probable cost.

"If the Boer war cost England above £200,000 a day, Sundays included, as it did, what will this war cost England, France, Germany, Austria, Russia, Belgium and Servia, all already engaged?

Belgium's Loss Already $300,000,000.

"As to the dislocation of trade, already the loss to Belgium is nearly £60,000,000, because of the destruction of her bridges, railways and the stoppage of all commerce.

"Germany's loss, I should say, is already £200,000,000 at least. Germany's loss will go on increasing at an enormous rate, while Belgium's loss will stop.

"The pay of British soldiers is much more than that of any other nation, because the army is a voluntary one. Privates receive 25 cents daily. France is paying the wife of each volunteer 25 cents daily, with 10 cents added for each dependent child under sixteen. Comparatively speaking, Belgium pays the next highest daily wage to its soldiers.

"English territorials while they are in the ranks receive the same pay as the regulars. The volunteers now called up will also receive the full army pay.

"The Prince of Wales' splendid fund to assist the wives and families of soldiers, which on first day amounts to $1,250,000, will be disbursed entirely through a local committee of women, reaching every country and village. This is the only possible way. The great failure of former funds has been because they weren't so distributed.

PLAN TO IMPROVE THE QUALITY OF SHEEP AND SWINE

As the distribution of pure bred stallions and bulls, 125 and 414 of which respectively have been located in different parts of the Dominion, has now been completed for the current year, it is announced that the Live Stock Branch of the Federal Department of Agriculture will undertake a further distribution of pure bred rams and boars during the months of August, September and October next, to associations of farmers organized in districts in which the services of satisfactory breeding animals in these classes are not already available. Applications for rams and boars, a large number of which have already been received, should be made at an early date, as it will not be possible to consider those that are not made prior to October 1st. Farmers desiring to secure the services of such stock should arrange to organize an association in their district and forward their application to the Live Stock Commissioner, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, from whom application blanks and all information with respect to the conditions under which pure-bred sires are distributed, may be obtained. It is understood that all applications shall be reported upon by officers of the Live Stock Branch, and that favourable action as regards any application shall be subject to the approval of the Live Stock Commissioner. Letters addressed to the Department do not require postage.

Chemong Park Regatta To-morrow

Promises to Be the Best Ever Held At This Resort

The annual regatta at Chemong Park to-morrow afternoon promises to be the best ever held at this popular summer resort. Being a half holiday in the City, a large number from town will have the opportunity to attend. Splendid arrangements have been made to carry the people to the Park. Buses will leave Gibbs' livery and Akey and McMillan's, and autos from Banks', commencing at one o'clock, and a half hour service will be given. Steamers will run excursions from Sturgeon Point and Stoney Lake, which insures keen competition in the events among the various contestants from these three resorts.

The prizes this year are away ahead of anything given at any previous regatta. The war canoe race will be an exciting event, St. Paul's, Y. M.C.A. and Chemong entering canoes. The sailing races for the Kawartha Lakes Challenge Cup, and the Chemong Cup ought to provide plenty of excitement.

The 57th regimental band will be present throughout the afternoon and evening, and will furnish music for the dancing. The committee desires to state that only music for the waltz and two-step will be played. Those going out in the afternoon and desiring to remain for the dance may secure lunch at the Park.

FARM BUILDINGS WERE IN DANGER

Fire on Farms Near Keene Looked Serious For a Time

KEENE, Aug. 12.—What has nearly proved a disastrous fire, has been raging at the farms of Messrs. Daniel McCarthey and Frank Walsh, since Saturday. The neighbours and men from the village fought heroically all day Sunday, to keep the fire from reaching the buildings on the farms. The rain that came on Monday morning helped materially to check it, but there is yet grave danger of it causing serious loss. The fire was caused by a neighbouring farmer burning brush a couple of months ago, which has been smouldering since.

RIGID CENSORSHIP.

Advices from London state that an increasingly rigid censorship is being imposed on all despatches. The French Cable Company is now the only direct line to Europe, and it has given notice that all messages on its lines is subject to a minimum of 48 hours' delay.

Germany is using about 30,000,000 gallons denatured alcohol for fuel annually and France, about 12,000,000 gallons.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

OTTAWA HAD EASY GOING TO WIN THIRD

Our Pets Played Usual Good Game But the Senators Never Looked —Even Ladies' Day Did Not Help

SOME OF THE INCIDENTS

Crowds—10.
Cost Price—2.
Interest—
Dyment.
Mr. Miller.
Strength of the belligerents.
All-round tight little contest.
Lightning double plays.

They won in three yesterday, alright. After a bunch of tough luck on the holiday, and umpiring that drew down loud wails and worse from the crowd, Our Petes went back at the pirates from Ottawa, known among regular sporting editors, as the Shagmen, and put up a dandy little fight for the third game of the series. And it all took place before a numerous gathering of our mothers, our sisters, and delightful visitors who idolize Our Petes until after Labour Day, and whom the Spaulding experts in the red stands persist in calling Janes. After witnessing the prodigious efforts to please the gallery of queens in the main stand one went home impressed with the fact that had it been any other team, but Ottawa, the tables might have been turned. But the Shagmen refuse to loosen up, even the slightest, and Our Petes put into action the words of Sir Edward Grey "If they will have it, they shall have it," and of course the little old ball game went a-glimmering about the end of the first echo. Mr. Miller made a decided attempt just before the bats were looked up, but the bacon was under the Senators' arms and it remained there.

Mr. Belting had everything. It is true that his control was a trifle shaky that his curve ball was not breaking as sharply as usual; that he had several passes and wild pitches chalked up against him, and that he was hit somewhat freely. But beyond these trifling defections he was there with the old pepper.

If he had not been so anxious to win the game he would have had more elusiveness on the ball. At any rate there was no doubt that Mr. Belting was in there with the very much mustard specialty.

Then there was Mr. Kelly, whose thirst for victory was so strong that it caused him to make several wild pegs, is ball was as straight as Mr. Belting's, but its linear direction called forth too much acrobatic stuff from Mr. Byrne, Mr. Fox and somebody else, was it? Really Mr. Belting and Mr. Kelly should not try so hard. Eagerness is all right in its place, but why should a battery monopolize all of it, when a spoon or two to the fielders at times might help the defensive attack?

Mr. Lush got no free advertising yesterday. He had his share on the holiday, when some of the belligerent citizens began to look around for a telegraph post that needed the finishing touch of a blue-suited form dangling to it. The bunch possibly couldn't trust themselves at the Park after their narrow escape from a serious crime on the preceding day.

Mr. Miller romped into the calcium's glow when he was sent in as a pinch hitter and came through with a rally that promised to break up the game. Our Petes had been going dismally from the first innings when they chalked up a run to maintain their record of getting the jump. But for seven innings they demonstrated how to hand the said jump to the Senators. Then comes the ninth innings, with the score ten to one, when Mr. Miller's rally began. Mr. King had grounded to short, but the ball hopped badly and the thousand-dollar boy missed it. The fair ones had a notion to wait. Women are hopeful creatures, or are they like men, just plain, curious? Mr. Fox and Mr. Kelly hit the ball, sure enough, but the pirates grabbed it. Mr. Miller takes a healthy swing at it and effected a clean single to centre, giving him a perfect batting average. Mr. Blount lined neatly to right, and Mr. King scored. Mr. Welch whipped the ball to centre and Mr. Miller landed gently on the plate. Mr. Dolan's fly was nabbed by Mr. Rogers.

But why relate further details. Had the strenuosities of Our Petes resulted in victory one might elucidate, but when their best is a 10—3 touch, it is better to think of the war than the uncertainties of baseball.

BASEBALL

It's only reasonable to suppose that as soon as Jack Johnson heard that his esteemed friend, Georges Carpentier, enlisted with the French forces, he got into communication with Kaiser Bill and volunteered his services.

If the umpires don't cease calling out some of the Giants when they are plainly out. King McGraw will sever all diplomatic relations.

An unconfirmed rumour is in circulation to-day that Czar Johnson of the Kingdom of Organised Baseball has declared war on Emperor Gilmore of the Federal Empire. Efforts are being now made to verify this report.

Chief Meyers, the Giants' Indian catcher, is "off" the moving. "The way they slaughter the men of my race in some of those film dramas is too much for me," said Meyers in explanation.

An interesting game of baseball was played at Jackson Park on Monday between the "Crabs and the Snatchers, ending in a victory for the later with a score of 18—14. The batteries for the winners were C. Dybbin, catcher; H. Partridge, pitcher. For the losers, H. Sickler, catcher; M. Martin, pitcher.

Spitball Is Fast Falling Into Disuse In Big Show

The spit-ball is falling into disuse. Very few of the twirlers in the big leagues are using it to-day, and those who do are using it sparingly. The wise pitcher will cast it aside, knowing that even though the use of the moist fling may add to their string of victories it will mean the shortening of their careers.

Jack Chesboro used it back in 1904 when he almost pitched the Yankees into the leadership of the league. But the use of the spit-ball practically ruined Chesboro as a star performer. Ed. Walsh used the spit-ball for several years and his success was phenominal. But the price was high, for Walsh's arm to-day is in such condition that he never knows whether it will serve him the full route or whether a kink will appear and force him to surrender the hurling job to a relief pitcher.

"Jeff" Tesreau used the spit ball to a great extent when he first landed on major league soil. But he isn't doing it with such reckless abandon as of yore. Jeff soon learned that the spit-ball "kinked" the arm, if used freely, and now he throws it only in emergencies.

There are several other pitchers in the big leagues who still throw the spit-ball, but they are throwing it just about a half dozen times during the game. Some of the fans believe they throw it oftener because of the deception practice by the pitcher—of putting the ball up near the mouth, and seeming to lubricate it. Batters are not fond of spit-balls. They hate to see them coming. So the pitchers who have discarded the use of the dampened twister, very often bluff at pitching one.

The passing of the spit-ball comes as good news to the infielders. In the years when the spit-ball was generally used errors were frequent on account of the spit-ball. A pitcher would gloss the ball freely with saliva and slippery elm or tobacco, a batter would hammer it to the infield, the infielder would grab it and start to throw, only to find that the slippery ball had glided from his fingers. Quite often when the infielder was able to get the ball away in the direction of the base the ball would take a wild slant and result in a horrible error.

Odds Favour American League In World's Series

NEW YORK, Aug. 11.—It seems pretty early to be talking about the world's series. But it's not so early at that. Only two months remain before the champion representatives of the two big leagues enter upon the conflict for the supreme honours of baseball. It is exactly two months for the first clash will be on Thursday, October 8, according to present plans of the powers that be.

World's series discussion is one of the most popular little pastimes ever invented, and it is really inconsiderate of the two leagues to keep us in doubt this long as to the nominees for the big stake. Both pennant races are considerably closer than were those of a year ago, and it will not be possible to foretell with any degree of certainty the ultimate winner until several more weeks have elapsed? The result of the two league campaigns may be open to conjecture even down to the final week of the season.

With the situation thus undetermined as itis; there can be little disect argument as to the probable outcome of the big series. A general inclusive statement is not entirely out of order, however, so here goes for a would-be prophecy in the form of an offer to wager. The American League will win the world's series again. There's the proposition and the odds should be at least 2 to 1, judging strictly on form shown by the first division clubs in the two circuits.

Instead of breaking behind the strain of putting up with poor pitching in a good many games, the Athletics have done just the reverse of late. The pitching has tightened. The youngsters, Pennock, Bush, Wyckoff and Shawkey, who pitched consistently poor ball during the earlier weeks of the season, have found their best strains are going along in fine style now, buoyed up by the knowledge that their opponents are afraid of the Athletics and are therefore lacking in that confidence so essential to the waging of a successful fight on the diamond. The Mackmen are beginning to look more and more like pennant winners every day.

The Red Sox, strengthened by the acquisition of Pitcher Vean Gregg and First Baseman Hoblitzel, are playing a strong game in all departments, as are the Senators since Walter Johnson found himself, and also the Detroit Tigers with Cobb back in harness. All of these clubs have first class pitching staffs, much better apparently than any in the National League teams, not even excepting that of the Giants. All four are hitting the ball well now against opposition of the other teams and all four are running the bases in a style not compared with by any club in the National League except the Giants.

McGraw's New York team has the most talked of hurling staff in the country, yet on this season's work there is only one star in the bunch, old Christy Mathewson. Rube Marquard has uncorked a few sensational feats, such as pitching that twenty-one inning game in Pittsburg, and Jeff Tesreau has been sensational in spots, but Al Demaree is having his worst year as a big leaguer, and could hardly figure as a first rater at present.

The Giants are the most likely winner on the National League pennant, being as they are out in front, but they are probably the worst team in the first division to pit against another champion in a world's series. In their last three starts in post-season events, the Giants have had good pitching only from Mathewson, and there is no reason to believe it will be otherwise if they get in the big show this year. In fact it is reasonable to suppose they will show worse work on thepart of Marquard and Tesreau.

The Chicago Cubs can offer Jim Vaughan and Tommy Chenny as first rate pitchers, but the rest of the team is so erratic that there is no telling how it would stand up under worlds series fire if it should get into the big series. The Cardinals are in the same boat with only Doak and Sallee looming prominently on the mound, and the remainder of the integers on the team are mostly ncertain quantities.

The Boston Braves probably would put up the best fight of all if they should get in the series. Rudolph, James, Tyler and Strand form a capable quartette of slabists and their support is made up of a peppery lot of hustlers all imbued with the spirit rediated by Tyers at second base and Maranville at short. That's about al that need be said of the personnel of the Braves. The personality of the manager is the real factor. George Stallings has a way of making tigers out of the lambs on the baseball field, and probably would engineer one of the games t fights ever made, should his men reach the championship event.

"MAGNIFICENT BUT NOT WAR"

German Prisoner Tells of Suicidal Attack on the Belgian Position at Liege

LIVES WERE THROWN AWAY

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—The Tribune publishes a despatch from Holland with a graphic story of fighting at Liege, given by a German prisoner. He said: "As we pressed forward, our ranks became thinner and thinner. Shells burst among us, killing and wounding, and such wounds were far worse than death itself, while the rifle fire of the Belgians mowed down our men in dozens scores, hundreds. Our officers, reckless in their bravery, led us, urged us encouraged us to throw away our lives. We marched straight toward the mouths of hostile artillery. I was magnificent, but not war. If we broke and run, it was because a further advance into the jaws of death was a sheer impossibility. We were required to hurl ourselves repeatedly at lines which seemed unbreakable.

LONDON WAITS FOR NEWS OF THE FLEET

LONDON, Aug. 11. — Once more the question: "What of the fleet?" is on everybody's tongue. The summary order of the Admiralty to the North Sea fishing fleets to stay in port yesterday revived the report that a naval engagement was imminent, and lent colour to the announcement from Copenhagen a few days ago that the German fleet from Kiel had left and was on its way up the Cattegat to the North Sea. The attack of the German submarine flotilla still further supported the belief that the Germans are preparing to attack the British fleet, though whether by isolated flashes of submarines and destroyers at night or whether by diversions created along the coast with the object of splitting the British fleet into sections and then taking a chance of overpowering any one of them, is not known. The general tendency among naval men is to believe that the German high seas fleet will avoid any full trial of strength with the British fleet, but will attempt to harrass and to reduce it by surprise attacks at night.

Hope For Decision

A Municipal Delegation Contested With Monaghan Officials Over Sewer Right of Way

His Worship Mayor Buller, Alderman Johnston, Alderman Anderson, the City Solicitor, G. N. Gordon, and R. H. Parsons, the City Engineer, appeared on behalf of the City, before the Provincial Board of Health. Mr. F. D. Kerr appeared for the Township of NoNrth Monaghan.

The object of the hearing was to hear the objections of the Township of North Monaghan to the extension of the outfall sewer along Park Street through the Township of North Monaghan to the River. This will connect with the new sewage disposal plant which the City intends to erect, under the direction of the Provincial Board of Health. The case was argued at considerabe length by the Solicitors for the Towaship and the City, and judgment was reserved.

When City Solicitor Gordon was seen to-day he said that he had no doubt that the City would succeed on all points of its contention, and that Monaghan would not be entitled or allowed to connect any sewers with the new out-fall sewers of the City, nor that there would be any reservation in the subsequent right of the Township to connect to any of the City's sewers. Mr. Gordon further stated that the Chairman of the Board intimated that the City would likely be asked to pay the costs of the application.

If judgment is given as the City Solicitor hopes to get, it will be very satisfactory to the City, because the residents of the Township of North Monaghan will not be entitled to connect with the sewer where it runs through the Township, and will sooner or later require to be annexed to the City, if they desire to have the privileges and benefits of sewers, water works and electric lighting.

BONFIRE CAUSES CONFLAGRATION

The Fire Brigade received a call to Collins' store, at the corner of Hunter Street and Driscoll Terrace, yesterday afternoon, to a fire in a shed which had been caused by a child lighting a bonfire. A sleigh and some boards were burnt, but the flames were extinguished when the Brigade arrived.

WM. MOHER.

On Friday, July 31st, there passed away at his late residence, Lot 6, Con. 7, Douro, one of the oldest and most respected residents of Douro Township, in the person of Mr. Wm. Moher.

The late Mr. Moher was 86 years of age, having been born in Ireland in 1828. He was one of the pioneers of Douro Township, having settled there since coming to Canada with his parents in 1832.

He always took an active and intelligent interest in public affairs, having been Reeve of Douro for several years, and License Commissioner for East Peterborough for over thirty years.

Mr. Moher was twice married, his first wife being Miss Joanna Tierney of Douro, who predeceased him in 1884. The only surviving child of this marriage is Mr. W. F. Moher of Peterborough, Ont., two members of this family, Mrs. Edward Foley of Rochester, N.Y., and Dr. T. J. Moher of Cobourg, Ont., having passed away within the last twelve months.

In 1872 Mr. Moher was married to Miss Nora O'Shea of Norwood, who survives him. The children of this marriage, four sons, Mr. Frank Moher of Red Cliff, Alta., Stephen Moher of Edmonton, Alta., Albert and Vincent, at home, and five daughters, Sister M. Josephine of St. Joseph's Hospital, Peterborough, Ont.; Mrs. M. J. Leahy of Douro, Ont., Mrs. P. Crennan of Lindsay, Ont., and Misses Zita and Eleanor at home, are left to mourn the loss of a kind and loving father.

The funeral, which was very largely attended, took place on Monday, August 3rd, to St. Joseph's Church, Douro, Ont. The pallbearers were the four sons of the deceased, Messrs. Wm. P., F. J., Albert and Vincent, and two grandsons, Messrs. M. J. Leahy and P. Crennan.

The Cheese Board

While no cheese was sold at the Cheese Board, this morning, the outlook had brightened immeasurably since last week. Instead of announcing that they could not buy anything at all, the buyers this morning gave very reasonable offers for the cheese that was for sale. Mr. Gillespie opened the bidding at 12c., and Mr. Thompson raised the figure to 12 1-16. Mr. Morton then bid 12 1-8c, and Mr. Gillespie raised that to 12 3-16c. This was the highest offer, and is the average price of the three last sales that have taken place on the Cheese Board.

The representatives of the factories however did not think the price was sufficient one and refused to sell. As 12 3-16c. was the final bid no cheese changed hands this morning. One reason why there was no sale made was that since the meeting a week ago, four factories sold to Mr. Morton, off the Board altogether. About 600 cheese were sold off the Board from Daisy D, Orrsond, Killarney and Norwood. The price given for the cheese was 12c, a figure 7-16 of a cent higher than Mr. Gillespie's bid, this morning. That is one reason why the representatives of the factories did not sell this morning. Aside from that all agree the factories claim that the quality of cheese alone warrants the refusal to sell at 12 7-16c.

The Board therefore adjourned until a week from to-day, but before the meeting concluded a resolution was passed expressing the intention of the factories to sell their cheese on the Board.

BUILDING LOTS.

Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald is offering for sale some beautiful building lots on Benson and Geraldine Avenues. This property lies within two minutes' walk of the Street Railway and ten minutes' walk of the heart of the City. The City water, gas, light, and sewer services are installed, the property being already completely surrounded by beautiful homes. The site is an ideal one, with a gentle south-easterly slope, and being considerably elevated above the City and not in the immediate vicinity of any manufacturing industries, the air is always pure, healthy and invigorating. Nearly all the lots are already beautifully wooded with foreign and domestic shade trees, and for anyone contemplating the erection of a home there are certainly no lots in the City that offer equal advantages.

Copies of Registered Plan No. 148, which covers the property, may be seen, and all other information may be had at the offices of Mr. R. J. Kidd, J. T. O'Connell and Co., C. J. Carroll and Co., also at the office of the owner, Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald, Ontario Land Surveyor, 485 George street. 'Phone 686.

GERMAN CHANCELLOR WAS FOR PEACE

LONDON, Aug. 11.—During the war crisis I was received by Foreign Minister Von Jagow, by Assistant Zimmerman, and by Baron Sturm, chief of the English department of the Foreign Office. I also had talks with Russia Ambassador Swerbeneff. I was shown by Bethmann-Hollweg a copy of Germany's threat to Austria to tear up the Triple Alliance negotiations with Russia, after Russia's partial mobilization. Kaiser Wilhelm did everything for peace. Despite the protests of Baron Von Moltke, his chief of staff, he delayed the mobilization decree.

The causes of the war, apart from the traditional race hatred and remote historical grounds were two. For neither of them was Kaiser Wilhelm guilty. The first case was the incredible folly of the Austrian foreign Minister, Count Berchtold, in refusing to negotiate with Russia direct after July 23, and after Russia had mobilized the districts of Kief, Odessa, Moscow, and Kasan. All four districts were mobilized against Austria.

Bethmann-Hollweg, in his zeal for peace, practically issued an ultimatum in Austria. He ordered her in imperative language to resume negotiations and declared that otherwise Germany would desert her.

Berchtold then climbed down, started direct negotiations with St. Petersburg, but the mischief was done. Russia had been mobilized all her army and ignored the Kaiser's warnings, which compelled Germany and Austria to mobilize also.

MAY BE A FOREIGN LEGION FROM CANADA

OTTAWA, Aug. 11.—There may be a foreign legion with the Canadian contingent when it leaves for the seat of war. The Militia Department has received an offer from the Servians in Detroit, who say there are thousands of Servians in Canada and the United States who would like to join Canada's forces and fight under her auspices. Prayck and Russian reservists in Canada are said to be anxious to join.

CANADA'S FIRST CONTINGENT IS NOW FULLY ENROLLED

Ontario and Western Canada Are the Heaviest Contributors — Wealthy Men Made Large Contributions

RAINBOW HEARD FROM

OTTAWA, Aug 13.—The enrolling of volunteers, which ended last night, so far as the first contingent is concerned, is reported as being very heavy in the west and in central and western Ontario. One regiment in Winnipeg has 850 men and 30 officers.

The single cavalry squadron to go will be from Edmonton, but the artillery will be mostly from Eastern Canada. While the winter in the war zone is not nearly so severe as here the men will be clad in woollen khaki and not the lighter material like canvas which was used in South Africa.

There are plenty of Ross rifles of the latest make ready now to equip the first contingent, and by the time a second contingent would be ready there will be enough rifles on hand. The ammunition used is the same as that used throughout the British army, but it will all be supplied by Canada. The amount required will depend, of course, on the amount of real service the men will see.

The patriotic spirit of many of Canada's wealthy men is still being manifested every day in a remarkable manner. J. K. L. Ross, of Montreal, besides offering to equip the Fifth Royal Highlanders, has offered the naval service department the free use of his private yacht, Albacore, together with the crew. The Department has accepted the offer and the yacht is being used at Halifax in connection with the examination of vessels arriving and leaving. C. B. Gordon, of Montreal, has also offered the free use of his yacht, with the crew, for the rest of the season, if it is needed for any purpose. Other prominent men have sent word that they are anxious to assist in any way possible.

The Naval Service Department at last was able to speak yesterday afternoon to the Rainbow through the wireless station at the coast, and learned that the Canadian cruiser was all right, and the fears for her were unfounded. The Department is not revealing her location.

The work on the Niobe at the Halifax navy yard is being rushed night and day. The fitting of the machinery and the guns is being proceeded with as rapidly as the work can be properly done. A number of mechanics were taken from the I.C.R. shops at Moncton to help on the Niobe. Three hundred ex-Imperial navy men have been sent to man the cruiser. The names of others who have offered have been kept and more may be sent down later.

The Naval Department has sent out orders to the holders of all licenses for amateur wireless stations to dismantle completely their stations and take down all aerial wires at once. They are required to worry the department as soon as they have complied with the order.

Since the recent regulations came into force, no amateur wireless stations have been allowable unless licensed so that the police will now step in wherever they see an amateur wireless station of any kind.

The Finance Department is in splendid position at the present time to handle and store the gold that will be brought here for the Bank of England, under the arrangement just announced. Large new vaults in the East Block had just been completed and brought into use, and having lately had to handle millions of dollars' worth of gold each year, the Department has a number of men who have expert knowledge of the handling of the yellow metal. The golden stream is already beginning to flow this way from the United States, and a very large amount will soon be stored here.

It being obviously essential to secure during the continuance of the war an uninterrupted supply of coal for domestic use, one of the first matters to receive attention by the Canadian military authorities upon the outbreak of hostilities was the protection of the coal supply of the Dominion. As a matter of fact, plans for the protection of all the principal coal depots on the Pacific as well as on the Atlantic had been prepared in peace time and the necessary guns and troops required in the carrying out of those plans assigned to their several positions.

The heaviest and most modern ordnance in the country has been posted in carefully selected positions at the various coaling stations and coal ports, and they are in charge of some of the best artillery men in the Canadian service.

Ample magazines of ammunition have been supplied and forces of infantry detailed to support the batteries, and altogether nothing has been left undone to guard the coal depots from attack.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The Brazilian chamber yesterday approved the declaration of a moratorium for 30 days. It may be continued, if necessary, for four months.

Pol Plancon, the opera singer, died yesterday in Paris. Plancon was a bass singer and made his Paris debut in the part of Mephistopheles, in 1883, with which part his name has been closely associated.

Mrs. James Schermerhorn, aged 52 years, of Belleville, was yesterday morning found dead in bed from the effects of chloroform. The unfortunate woman owing to nervousness used the drug to induce sleep.

Edward P. Amory, secretary of the Western Railroad Association, was found dead in a pool of blood in his office in a Chicago office building late yesterday. There were two deep cuts in his head. The police believe he was murdered.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians Convention for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in session at Fredericton, N.B., passed a resolution expressing loyalty to King George and hope that victory would follow the British armies in the European war.

BELGIUM REFUSED TO YIELD.

Germany Has Again Tried to Secure Free Route to France.

LONDON, Aug. 13. — The Daily Mail says it is learned that on Monday afternoon the fruitless assault by the Germans on the Liege forts the German Government again approached Belgium, through Holland as intermediary, pointing out that Germany had no quarrel with Belgium and no desire to be at war with her, and asked that the Belgian Government reconsider its refusal to allow the German army to traverse Belgium in order to save useless expenditure in blood and treasure.

The Belgian Government, according to the newspaper, made reply, again refusing the German request.

How To Stop Stomach Torment

Sound Advice From a Well-Known Physician.

Men and women who suffer from what they call Dyspepsia, Indigestion or just plain "stomach-trouble" usually seek regular relief in the form of some pepsin pill or tablet, or other artificial digestant. This, experience teaches me, is a serious error. In the cause out of ten, the distress is caused by the development of acids in the stomach,—formed by the fermenting of the food. Instead of a digestant being required, something should be taken to dissolve or neutralize this acidity, when normal digestion will follow as a matter of course. This acid matter is distinctly poisonous and unless it is dissolved, digestion merely carries the mass of fermenting food from the stomach to the intestines, where the poisons is absorbed by the blood and carried all over the body.

If all the great army of people who suffer after nearly every meal would make it a point to take a teaspoonful of Bisurated Magnesia in a quarter glass of water after each meal there would be no formation of acidity and consequently no distress or discomfort. Sour, acid, gassy stomach, heartburn, belching, bloating, etc., would soon be a thing of the past. "Bisurated Magnesia" is a physician's prescription. It is inexpensive and can be obtained at any drug store. It is prepared for just such trouble and the best proof of its efficiency is that it will stop the sharpest, biting stomach distress in five minutes from the time it enters the stomach, simply by neutralizing the acids that have been formed there. Its action is absolutely harmless.

ADVANCE OF THE GERMANS ON PARIS.—The central and main army of the Germans is moving southwest from Luxemburg to cross the Meuse at Stenay. It demands the surrender of the French fort at Longwy, and is said to have suffered a reverse at Spincourt. Statements in despatches show that Germans are entrenching along the Aisne river which is only 120 miles from Paris, and they are thought to be preparing the way for the main army crossing the Meuse at Stenay.

ARE MOVING IN SILENCE

News of Southern French Advance Is Rigidly Suppressed

GERMANS LOSE TWO CORPS

LONDON, Aug. 13.—The strict censorship and consequent dearth of despatches from Southern Alsace seems to indicate that movements of the utmost importance are in progress there. A Basle despatch says the Germans are reported to have sustained terrific losses in the attempt to dislodge the French from their position back of Muhlhausen. The 112th and 149th Regiments are reported to have been annihilated and several prominent officers also fell.

A Berlin despatch declares that the German troops near Muhlhausen have captured ten French officers, five hundred men, four guns, ten wagons and many rifles.

According to the report German territory has been cleared of the French. It is also stated that at Lagarde the German troops made more than one thousand prisoners, about one-sixth of the two defeated French regiments.

The French Minister of War explains that the engagements on the Franco-German frontier are no more than outpost skirmishes.

"The best denial that can be given to the report that the French lost 20,000 men at Altkirch," says the Minister, "is that the total effective French troops did not reach that number."

It is further explained that the advance of the French infantry on Muhlhausen was to cut the centre of German communication, and it is added that this was successfully carried out.

The communication concludes:

"We are placing in upper Alsace a considerable number of troops."

Several hundred German prisoners passed through the Champigny station, near Paris, yesterday on their way to Poitiers, where they will be interned. The soldiers seemed quite unconcerned as to their fate. The German officers in the party, however, were sulky.

Combined for Immediate Attack.

NISH, Servia, Aug. 13.—The imminence of a big battle between Austrians and the combined forces of Servia and Montenegro, at Visegrad, in Bosnia, is indicated in an official statement given out yesterday by the Servian War Office. The statement says that the Austrians have entrenched their positions at Visegrad, and that the Servian and Montenegrin forces have combined for immediate attack in force.

Italy To Be Neutral.

PARIS, Aug. 13. — Tommaso Tittoni, Italian Ambassador to France, issued and had posted at the Italian Embassy and in the Italian quarters of Paris yesterday a signed notice stating that: "Italy has proclaimed and will maintain the strictest neutrality. Therefore there is no need for Italians to be alarmed. They may continue to reside in France in full security."

Austrian Ambassador to Leave.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Arrangements have been made for the departure to-day, of the Austrian-Hungarian Ambassador, Count Ambrozdorff-Pouilly-Dietrichstein, who has been in England for 18 years as secretary, Minister and Ambassador respectively, and who is one of the most intimate friends of the British royal family.

WOMEN RUNNING CARS.

Paris Is Almost Paralyzed By Lack of Men.

PARIS, Aug. 13.—The withdrawal of thousands of men from every field of labor has seriously altered transportation and other conditions in the French capital. The underground railway is running only on certain lines and then only on a much reduced service.

The work of the conductors, ticket punchers and other employes, who have been called to the front, is being done by their wives and sons.

Some of the notorious "Syndicalistes," which have caused so much trouble in the past are holding enthusiastic meetings in the Bourse De Travail (labor exchange), and are organizing themselves to help in the public service in such directions as the establishment of soup kitchens and the providing of men to lend a hand wherever the labor supply is short.

Is Not a Spy.

HALIFAX, N.S., Aug. 13.—John L. Ferguson, an American citizen, arrested at Mahone Bay, N.S., suspected of espionage when plans of the harbor were found in his possession, was released later. It was shown that Ferguson, who is a student of Dartmouth College, was employed in making maps of Nova Scotia for the Government. Ferguson originally came from Spokane, Washington.

Renewed Vigor in Old Age

This Letter Brings a Message of Cheer to the Aged—Results of Using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

New, rich blood is what is most needed in the declining years to keep up energy and vitality. That Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a wonderful help in maintaining good health and prolonging life is attested by the writer of this letter.

Mr. Stephen J. Leard, North Tryon, P.E.I., writes: — "At seventy-five years of age my heart gave out and became very irregular and weak in action and would palpitate. My nerves also became weak, and I could do nothing but lie in bed in a languishing condition, losing strength and weight. In that condition I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and am cured. If I had obtained this treatment I would now be in the box with the roof over my nose. At eighty-one I have an energy which means go, and I am writing this letter so that old people like myself may prolong their health and strength by using this great medicine." 50c a box, 6 for $2.50. AIM TO GO PAST LIEGE

Germans Are Moving to North and South of City

CONFLICT AT TIRLEMONT

BRUSSELS, Aug. 13. — Large forces of Germans are moving north and south of Liege into the interior of Belgium and a great battle between the invaders and the allies' armies defending this country is imminent on Belgian soil.

Military experts believe it will require the remainder of the week for the concentration of opposing forces, and that the prospective battle will take place perhaps on Saturday.

Meanwhile there is sharp fighting at many points between detachments of the German advance and the Franco-Belgian defenders.

Official announcement is made that a general engagement is taking place at Tirlemont, Belgium. The German army attacked the Belgian position at daylight yesterday, and the fighting has been continuous. The conflict is a serious one, according to the War Office.

A thousand German cavalry, with quick-firing guns mounted on horses, attacked a regiment of Belgian lancers. The latter retired on account of their inferiority numerically.

The Belgians lost two officers and a small number of men, killed and wounded.

This engagement is believed to be the beginning of the attack directed against Brussels, as Tirlemont is only about 25 miles east of Brussels, on the River Geete. The Belgians are said to be stoutly resisting the German attack. It is reported that the allied forces are pressing on to the aid of the Belgians already engaged there, and sharp fighting is reported at Tongres, 20 miles east of Tirlemont. Military experts are agreed that the German army operating against the Belgians and French in the Belgian-Luxemburg district numbers a million men.

An official announcement from the Belgian War Office declares that the Germans have met defeat along the entire line of battle except at one point. Everywhere else they have been forced to retire.

The effect of this defeat will have a tremendous bearing on the result of the entire war if later advices corroborate the facts that it does not develop that the retirement has been merely temporary to await reinforcements.

The Germans appear to be commencing a fresh phase of the war. Their attack through Central Belgium having failed, they are entrenching along their Meastricht-Liege front and are employing a number of peasants on the road south through the Provinces of Liege and Luxemburg, foreshadowing an attempt to force their way to the south of the River Ourthe and towards the Upper Meuse in France.

The main body of the German Horse is moving forward along the whole front of the allied armies, and it is believed that the Germans have determined to try to put through their original plan of invading France by way of Brussels and Lille. The main German army of more than 200,000 men is believed to be feinting out the Belgian defence line with its cavalry. The Germans are now crossing the River Meuse on the north of Liege.

King Albert has started for Belgian army headquarters at Louvain. Details of Belgian movements are lacking, but it is reported that French detachments are operating on all sides with the Belgian troops. The British expedition is still believed to be in the vicinity of Namur.

The Germans who are installed in the convent of the Sacred Heart are reported to be accumulating vast quantities of flour in event they should be besieged.

Behind the cavalry there is moving an infantry force, the strength of which is unknown. All the despatches telling of German cavalry operations state that infantry follows the horsemen.

Terrific artillery firing from the direction of Tongres, to the north of Liege, has been heard at Maestricht, says the correspondent there of The Brussels Telegraf.

RUSSIANS SUCCESSFUL.

Even German War Staff Admits Heavy Losses on Frontier.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—A Berlin despatch to The Daily Telegraph says the German staff admits heavy losses on the Russian frontier.

A despatch from St. Petersburg to The Paris Matin, says:

"The Austrians have suffered a check on the Dniester river. Four regiments of Austrian Infantry and eight regiments of Uhlans were routed. The approaching battle will probably be a decisive one."

Corriere d'Italia of Rome has a despatch from its Trieste correspondent that an overwhelming force of Cossacks was cut to pieces by two brigades of Austrian cavalry, which had crossed into Russia near Reitgeral.

Operator Told to "Beat It."

MONTREAL, Aug. 13. — When the wireless operator on the Mount Royal, 160 miles east of Cape Race, innocently started to give the position of the Mauretania to the German cruiser Kirlsruhe, the Mauretania operator broke in with the terse fresh "Beat it."

CRUISER SUNK?

H. M. S. Essex Believed to Have Vanquished German War Vessel.

ISLE OF SHOALS, Me., Aug. 13. —It is asserted that foreign naval ships engaged in an encounter off here last night, during which one of the war vessels is reported to have been sunk. A wireless message received would seem to indicate that the defeat came to one of the German cruisers Stuttgart, Dresden or Karlsruhe, which have been reported to be reconnoitering in the waters all along the Atlantic coast for the past week. The message was sent in cypher, and read "Umbago is sunk." This is believed to be the code word for one of the battleships that engaged in the conflict. The British cruisers Essex and Suffolk are off this coast.

The first shots were heard at 6.10 and lasted for twenty minutes. Again at 6.20 it was continued for seven minutes. But for the interval from the first firing of shots to the second there was no interruption in the firing. It was described as a steady fire, and seemed about 15 miles away.

Reports from defences along the coast developed the fact that mortars had been discharged at Fort McKinley at Portland, Maine, nearly forty miles away and in a northerly direction, but too far, it is believed, for the sound to carry to Portsmouth. The operator at the Portsmouth Navy Yard, who is authority for the receipt of the code despatch, reports that the wind is blowing off shore.

This accounts for the cannonading not having been heard at the Portsmouth Navy Yard, about eighteen miles southwest of here.

France Takes Montreal Trucks.

MONTREAL, Aug. 13. — Ten La Haye motor trucks, built for service in the Montreal road department, which were ready for shipment from the factory, have been commandeered by the French Government for use in the army, according to information received yesterday at the City Hall. The trucks cost $4,200 each, but as they are not yet paid for, the city will not be the loser.

CHAPTER XIX

The Unknown Race

An almost irresistible repugnance, a compelling aversion, more of the spirit than of the flesh, instantly seized the man at sight of even the few members of the Horde which lay within his view.

Though he had been expecting to see something disgusting, something grotesque and horrible, his mind was wholly unprepared for the real hideousness of these creatures, now seen by the ever-strengthening light of day.

And slowly as he stared, the knowledge dawned on him that here was a monstrous problem to face, far greater and more urgent than he had foreseen; here were factors not yet understood; here the product of forces till then not even dreamed of by his scientific mind.

"I—I certainly did expect to find a small race," thought he. "Small and possibly misshapen, the descendants maybe of a few survivors of the cataclysm. But this—!"

And again fascinated by the ghastly spectacle, he laid his eye to the chink in the wall and looked.

A tenuous fog still drifted slowly among the forest trees, veiling the deeper recesses. Yet, near at hand, within the limited segment of vision which the engineer commanded, everything could be made out with reasonable distinctness.

Some of the Things (for so he mentally named them, knowing no better term) were squatting, lying or moving about, quite close at hand. The fire by the spring had almost died down. It was evident that the revel had ceased, and that the Horde was settling down to rest—glutted, no doubt with the raw and bleeding flesh of the conquered foe.

Stern could easily have poked his pistol muzzle through the crack in the wall and shot down many of them. For an instant the temptation lay strong upon him to get rid of at least a dozen or a score; but prudence restrained his hand.

"No use!" he told himself. "Nothing to be gained by that. But, once I get my proper chance at them—!"

And again, striving to observe them with the cool and calculating eye of science, he studied the shifting, confused picture out there before him.

Then he realized that the feature which, above all else, struck him as ghastly and unnatural, was the colour of the Things.

"Not black, not even brown," he said. "I thought so, last night, but daylight corrects the impression. Not red, either, or copper-coloured. What colour, then? For Heaven's sake, what?"

He could hardly name it. Through the fog, it struck him as a dull slate-grey, almost a blue. He recalled that once he had seen a child's modelling-clay, much used and very dirty, of the same shade, which certainly had no designation in the chromatic scale. Some of the Things were darker, some a trifle lighter—these, no doubt, the younger ones—but they all partook of this same characteristic tint. And the skin, moreover, looked dull and sickly, rather mottled and wholly repulsive, very like that of a Mexican dog.

Like that dog's hide, too, it was sparsely overgrown with whitish bristles. Here or there, on the bodies of some of the larger Things, bulbous warts had formed, somewhat like those on a toad's back; and on these warts the bristles clustered thickly. Stern saw the hair, on the neck of one of these creatures, crawl and rise like a jackal's, as a neighbour jostled him; and from the Thing's throat issued a clicking grunt of purely animal resentment.

"Merciful Heavens! What are they?" wondered Stern, again utterly baffled for any explantaion. "What can they be?"

Another, in the group close by, attrated his attention. It was lying on its side, asleep maybe, its back directly toward the engineer. Stern clearly saw the narrow shoulders and the thin, long arms, covered with that white bristling hair.

One sprawling, spatulate, clawlike hand lay on the forest moss. The twisted little ape-like legs, disproportionately short, were curled up; the feet, prehensile and with a well-marked thumb on each, twisted a little now and then. The head, enormously too big for the body, to which it was joined by a thin neck, seemed to be scantily covered with a fine, curling down, of a dirty yellowish drab colour.

"What a target!" thought the engineer. "At this distance, with my .38, I could drill it without half trying!"

All at once, another of the group got up, shoved away a burned-out torch, and yawned with a noisy, doglike whine. Stern got a quick yet definite glimpse of the sharp canine teeth; he saw that the Thing's fleshless lips and retreating chin were caked with dried blood. The tongue he saw was long and lithe and apparently rasped.

Then the creature stood up, balancing on its absurd bandy legs, a spear in its hand—a flint-pointed spear of crude workmanship.

At full sight of the face, Stern shrank for a moment.

"I've known savages, as such," he thought. "I understand them. I know animals. They're animals, that's all. But this creature—merciful Heaven!"

And at the realization that it was neither beast nor man, the engineer's blood chilled within his veins.

Yet he forced himself still to look and to observe, unseen. There was practically no forehead at all. The nose was but a formless lump of cartilage, the ears large and pendulous and hairy. Under heavy brow-ridges, the dull, lack-lustre eyes blinked stupidly, bloodshot and cruel. As the mouth closed, Stern noted how the under incisors closed up over the upper lip, showing a gleam of dull yellowish ivory; a saliva dripped from the doglike corner of the mouth.

Stern shivered and drew back.

He realized now that he was in the presence of an unknown semi-human type, different in all probability from any that had ever yet existed. It was less their bestiality that disgusted him, than their utter, hopeless, age-long degeneration from the man-standard.

What race had they descended from? He could not tell. He thought he could detect a trace of the Mongol in the region of the eye, in the cheek-bones and the general contour of what, by courtesy, might be called the face. There were indications, also, of the negroid type, still stronger. But the colour—whence could that have come? And the general characteristics, were not these distinctly simian?

Again he looked. And now one of the pot-bellied little horrors, shambling and bulbous-kneed, was scratching its warty, blue hide with its black claws as it trailed along through the forest. It looked up, grinning and jabbering; Stern saw the teeth that should have been molars. With repulsion he noted that they were not flat-crowned, but sharp like a dog's. Through the blue lips they clearly showed.

"Nothing herbivorous here," the scientist thought. "All flesh-food of—who knows what sort!"

Quickly his mind ran over the outlines of the problem. He knew at once that these Things were lower than any human race ever recorded, far lower even than the famed Australian bushmen, who could not even count as high as five. Yet, strange and more than strange, they had the use of fire, of the tom-tom, of some sort of voodooism, of flint, of spears, and of a rude sort of tanning—witness the loin-clouts of hide which they all wore.

"Worse than any troglodyte!" he told himself. "Far lower than De Quatrefage's Neanderthal man, to judge from the cephalic index—worse than that Java skull, the pithecanthropus erectus, itself! And I—am with my living eyes beholding them!"

A slight sound, there behind him in the room, set his heart flailing madly.

His hand froze to the butt of the automatic as he drew back from the cleft in the wall, and, staring, whirled about, ready to shoot on the second.

Then he started back. His jaw dropped, his eyes widened and limply fell his arm. The pistol swung loosely at his side.

"You?—he soundlessly breathed. "You—here?"

There at the door of the great empty room, magnificent in her tiger-skin, the Krag gripped in her supple hand, stood Beatrice.

CHAPTER XX.

THE CURIOSITY OF EVE.

At him the girl peered eagerly, a second, as though to make sure he was not hurt in any way, to satisfy herself that he was safe and sound.

Then with a little gasp of relief, she ran to him. Her sandled feet lightly disturbed the rubbish on the floor; dust rose. Stern checked her with an upraised hand.

'Back! Back! Go back, quick!" he formed the words of command on his trembling lips. The idea of this girl's close proximity to the beast-horde terrified him, for the moment. "Back! What on earth are you here for?"

"I—I woke up. I found you gone!" she whispered.

"Yes, but you didn't read my letter? This is no place for you!"

"I had to come! How could I stay up there, alone, when you—were—oh! maybe in danger—maybe in need of me?"

"Come-" he commanded, in his perturbation heedless of the look she gave him. He took her hand. "Come, we must get out of this! It's too—too near the—"

"The what? What is it, Allan? Tell me, have you seen them? Do you know?"

Even excited as the engineer was, he realized that for the first time the girl had called him by his Christian name. Not even the perilous situation could stifle the thrill that ran through him at the sound of it. But all he answered was:

"No, I don't know what to call them. Have no idea, as yet. I've seen them, yes; but what they are, Heaven knows—maybe!"

"Let me see, too!" she pleaded eagerly. "Is it through that crack in the wall? Is that the place to look?"

She moved toward it, her face blanched with excitement, eyes shining, lips parted. But Stern held her back. By the shoulder he took her.

"No, no, little girl!" he whispered. "You—you mustn't! Really must not, you know. It's too awful!"

Up at him she looked, knowing not what to think or say for a moment. Their eyes met, there in that wrecked and riven place, lighted by the dull, misty, morning grey. Then Stern spoke, for in her gaze abode questions unnumbered.

"I'd much rather you wouldn't look out at them, not just yet," said he, speaking very low, fearful lest the murmur of his voice might penetrate the wall. "Just what they are, frankly, there's no telling."

"You mean—?"

"Come back into the arcade, where we'll be safer from discovery, and we can talk. Not here. Come!"

She obeyed. Together they retreated to the inner court.

"You see," he commented, nodding at the empty water-pail, "I haven't been to the spring yet. Not very likely to get there for a while, either, unless—well, unless something pretty radical happens. I think these chaps have settled down for a good long stay in their happy hunting-grounds, after the fight and the big feast. It's sort of a notion I've got that this place here, is some ancient ceremonial ground of theirs."

"You mean on account of the tower?"

He nodded.

"Yes, if they've got any religious ideas at all, or rather superstitions, such would very likely centre round the most conspicuous object in their world. Probably the spring is a regular voodoo hangout. The row, last night, must have been a sort of periodic argument to see who was going to run the show."

"But," exclaimed the girl in alarm—"but if they do stay a while, what about us? We simply must have water!"

BABY HAD DYSENTERY

Had Two Doctors, But No Result

WAS CURED BY THE USE OF

DR. FOWLER'S
EXTRACT OF WILD STRAWBERRY

Mrs. Martin Farraher, Dogherty Corner, N.B., writes: "I can very strongly recommend Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for Dysentery and Summer Complaints. My little girl, at the age of two years, had the dysentery very bad. We had two doctors, but with no result. My mother brought me a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and when half the bottle was used the little girl was running around playing with her dolls with great delight and joy to the family, for we did not think she would ever get better."

Imitators have even gone so far as to imitate our wrapper in color and style, and have adopted similar names, such as Strawberry Compound, Extract of Strawberry, Wild Strawberry Compound, etc., which preparations they have been trying to sell as the genuine, at a bigger profit to themselves, but unfortunately not to the consumers, who sometimes have had to employ medical aid afterwards.

Do not be led into taking a substitute for "Dr. Fowler's" and thus endanger your life.

Price, 35 cents. Manufactured only by the T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

PILES

Do not suffer another day with itching, bleeding or Protruding Piles. No surgical operation necessary.

Dr. Chase's Ointment will relieve you at once and in a few days will make a permanent cure. 60c. a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To prove merit a sample box will be sent you free if you mention this paper and enclose 2c. stamp to pay postage.

TO CHECK A COLT

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs S. M. Moore, Shortreed, B.C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

French Army Is Splendid Type of Fighting Machine

Third Strongest In Europe and Possessed of Wonderful Wartime Spirit—New Conscription Law.

THE huge size of modern armies is in itself a problem that makes the nations hesitate before employing them. Napoleon once declared that he doubted if any man could successfully conduct the operations of an army of 200,000 men, and added, with the characteristic egotism of genius, that if that feat were possible he alone among living generals could perform it. But armies have enormously increased, and war has developed marvelously along scientific lines since the day of the first Napoleon. Problems are far more intricate now than then. New methods of transportation have removed old difficulties and raised fresh ones, and today it is the nation that can begin to fight the quickest that wins those initial advantages which often lead to ultimate victory, even over a superior force.

The fighting strength of France is about 3,000,000 men—an army only smaller than those of Russia and of Germany. She has some difficulty in keeping her active regiments at full strength, but her powers at a pinch have astonished the world more than once. She has shown her astounding elasticity and ability to recover from most crushing reverses, while her troops have ever been imbued with patriotic fervor and the fierce spirit of war. The French army must be confessed a magnificent fighting machine, albeit the French spirit of militarism is a curse to that great country, and a grave stumbling block in the way of her true progress, according to some.

On a peace footing her army is about 500,000 strong, or more than three times as large as it was forty-four years ago, when she suffered defeat in her memorable struggle with Germany. She has also improved mightily in her knowledge of military science since those days. It is said that France is behind other powers in her employment of smokeless powder and that her small arms lack uniformity, but time may prove this assertion erroneous, and, whatever else she lacks, her field evolutions and strategic powers are beyond all question unsurpassed by any army in Europe. France is, of course, rich compared to her immediate rival, Germany, by virtue of her enormous agricultural resources.

Tried to Fool France's Enemies.

As we have said, despite her system of conscription it is not easy for her to keep her regiments full, and she lacks her great rival's astounding power of quick motion and concentration, but it is possible that she insists on these defects too obviously, and in that case we may assume that France is not unwilling to be supposed a little more behindhand in her military affairs than is the fact. The nation that underrates her in time of war will as certainly rue it, for when of late her strength had occasion to be put forth nothing appeared that might tend to show her a shadow weaker than her fellow powers.

France now demands three years' active service from all her male citizens; then her soldiers pass into the active reserve, which position they occupy for ten years. During that time they are twice called into the field and each term of service lasts for a month. Her warriors then pass into the territorial army, in which they serve for six years and during which period they go upon active service for one fortnight. They then pass into the territorial reserve, where they remain until reaching the age of forty five. Henceforward a Frenchman is exempt from military duty, but until his forty-fifth birthday he attends a muster roll once a year and is at any moment liable to active service in the event of war.

This rule was abolished for some time, and a two year active service system was adopted. To meet the increase of the German army, following upon that of 1912, France returned to the three year enlistment system, under which she will keep three classes with the colors instead of two. The effect of this law is to increase the peace strength of the French army by one-half. Great as is the sacrifice involved, it is nevertheless cheerfully made by the French people. A fresh attempt was made by executive order to adjust the longstanding differences between the war and navy departments as to who should have charge of the coast defense of France. The great trouble in the past was the division of responsibility. The new order did not remove it. After the fall maneuvers, held near Toulouse, a great number of officers of high rank were summarily placed on the retired list owing to the inefficiency displayed by them. This energetic proceeding testifies to the determination of the French to be ready at all times for action.

The reservists are divided into different classes, according to the number of years which have elapsed since they quit active service. In all cases the practice is to summon them back to the colors, with the latest to leave service first and the others in order.

To sum up, the army of France is today among the most magnificent the world has ever known.

In July of the present year, before the outbreak of the war, Senator Humbert made an exposure in Paris of the unpreparedness of the French war establishment in the immediate proximity of the German frontier. It was not taken very seriously in France.

French Made a Bluff.

General Keim of the German Army league, who is an expert on the ins and outs of sentiment molding, said in Der Tag that the true inwardness of M. Humbert's revelations was a desire to pave the way for fresh French military armaments. The senator's declaration that the republic's army was not equipped to cross either the Moselle or the Rhine gave the whole game away, according to General Keim, and illustrated clearly that the exposure was a parliamentary bluff for the purpose of arousing the country to the need of fresh sacrifices for military expenditure.

The bluff was timed, says General Keim, in order to enable President Poincare to proceed to Russia with fresh assurances for the czar that France was prepared to do still more when the time came to enable the partners in the dual alliance to crush their mutual German foe.

General Keim asserted that instead of being numerically inferior to the German army, it [illegible] France, with 900,000 troops under arms, was vastly superior. Her artillery also was in no respect less effective than Germany's. In one or two directions it was even superior.

An amusing incident throwing characteristic light on the unerring thoroughness of the French intelligence service was learned. A German frontier cavalry regiment near Metz was recently alarmed early in the morning and was ordered to carry out a make believe war maneuver consisting in occupying a certain strategic point on the adjacent frontier.

Found the French Ready.

The regiment executed the order with brilliant dash and with the greatest punctuality, but the officers were astonished to find as they approached the spot that a full regiment of French cavalry was also riding toward the same point from the other side of the frontier. The two regiments arrived at the border line practically simultaneously. Both the German and the French officers considered it a huge joke and, dismounting, mingled for agreeable conversation and exchanged smokes for a matter of fifteen minutes.

The French had prompt knowledge of the maneuver and met it.

The death warrant for the French soldiers' famous red trousers was signed in the chamber of deputies in July. In the future the army of the republic will go to war clothed in a neutral shade of gray blue, which, it is asserted, will make the wearers invisible to the enemy at 500 yards instead, as at present, being plainly discernible at 1,500 yards. The change is expected to take seven years and does not affect the present situation.

M. Messimy, the minister of war, in urging the necessity for the measure was supported in his argument by citing the example of the British army, which adopted khaki in the Transvaal, and the experience of the wars in the Balkans.

In military aeroplanes the French army outclasses any other. The number of machines available for war use is put as high as 1,000, with aviators of experience to man them.

For a century France has adhered to the belief of Bonaparte that the artillery, properly supported by infantry, is the most effective arm of the service. Napoleon himself was an artilleryman, and the handling of the big guns was a favorite study with him. It will be recalled that his placing of the guns in the streets of Paris during the revolution did much to make him the master of France.

In all of the wars in which France has been engaged since the era of the first Napoleon—in the Crimea, in Austria, in the unsuccessful contest with Germany in 1870-1—Frenchmen have distinguished themselves by their handling of artillery. Their batteries are noted for their mobility and the ease and quickness with which the ammunition is handled. In addition, the placing of the batteries in time of action has been made a special study at the French military schools. Various foreign observers have certified their belief that in this branch of military work France leads the world.

Indeed, it was asserted that the overwhelming defeat of the Turks in the recent war in the Balkans was due in some degree to the fact that their field guns, of German manufacture, were outclassed by the artillery of the allied Balkan powers, which was made in France. French military writers exulted openly over this assertion and declared that in the test of war the French guns would outmaneuver and outshoot the Kruppa.

It must not be forgotten that French officers and men have been tested in actual warfare in the north of Africa. The French colonies in Algiers are held only by the tenure of arms, and it was for their protection that France came so near going to war with Germany over Morocco. The tribes of the interior, near akin to the "first class fighting men" of whom Kipling wrote, have kept Frenchmen busy for many years. The campaigning on the desert is much harder than anything French soldiers are called upon to face in defense of their beloved fatherland or when invading the lands of their country's European foes.

Above all, the motive animating Frenchmen in a war with Germany is the desire to recover Alsace and Lorraine, torn from France by the victorious Germans in 1870-1. The cry of "La revanche!" heard in France at intervals for forty years has never been stilled, and it puts new life into the French soldier to know that he is battling for the redemption of the lost provinces.

Skin Trouble On The Scalp

Skin Dried and Cracked and Hair Fell Out—Cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Eczema is annoying and distressing at any time, but doubly so when it gets into the scalp and causes the hair to fall out. Here is a grateful letter from a lady who was cured by using Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Mrs. Hector Currie, Tobermory, Ont., writes:—"I was cured of a disagreeable skin disease of the scalp by using Dr. Chase's Ointment. The trouble started with itching and pain in the scalp, the skin would get dry and crack, and at times would bleed, and the hair would fall out. I tried three doctors without benefit, and suffered for three years. Reading in the almanac about Dr. Chase's Ointment, I began its use, and am now completely cured. The hair has grown again, and I am as well as I ever was. You are at liberty to use this letter, for I am glad to recommend so excellent a treatment.

Dr. Chase's Ointment has no rival as a cure for itching skin disease.

THE BIGGEST FISH CAUGHT THIS YEAR

In the Kawartha Lakes—Weighed 21 Pounds, 4 Ounces

YOUNG'S POINT, Aug. 12.—On Monday, "Civic Holiday," Messrs. Arthur Lyon and Jos. Watt, of Toronto, accompanied by their guide, Mr. Robt. Dever, landed a lunge which weighed twenty-one pounds and four ounces. This is the largest fish caught in the Kawartha Lakes this season. This fish was caught in the river below the village. That makes three large fish caught here in the last two weeks. One 21 lbs. 4 oz., another 18 3-4 lbs., and 15 1-2 lbs. The other two were caught by Mr. Robert Godfrey.

Miss Katherine McCauley, of Rochester, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Fred Young.

Miss Irene Young, of Rochester, is home on a visit.

Mr. Harold Young, of Toronto, is home for a few holidays.

Quite a number of tourists are around the village, and everyone seems to be enjoying their holidays.

Same Importance.

"That looks like a man of some importance."

"Yes, I should say so. He's just been pardoned for good behaviour. He's a bank watcher, if you please."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Taming A Shrew

With an Interruption That Brought a Climax.

By Martha McCulloch-Williams.

Pretty Kitty Clyde was not really a shrew. She had merely been born imperious and had grown up absolute monarch of an adoring family.

Until she was rising eleven Douglas Norton had been also of her subjects. Fate whisked him away then to inherit an uncle's fortune and go racing about the world, thereby giving Kitty her first realizing sense that things could happen otherwise than according to her will.

The process was unpleasant. By a curious mental alchemy Kitty unconsciously stored the unpleasantness as a grudge against the absent Douglas.

So when he came home ten years later and fell openly and instantly a victim to her charms she was in two minds as to what to do with him, and she yielded in favor of the mind that advised her to do something unpleasant.

He was a dear fellow, suiting her exactly in some of her moods. In others—but in those others nobody suited her, least of all herself. Those other moods would probably have made her send Douglas about his business if he had not had the lucky misfortune to have the Ackroyds for friends.

The Ackroyds, whom Kitty loathed, gave up days and nights to warning Douglas against her. The warnings were not wholly disinterested. Though the two Miss Ackroyds were quite old enough to be his mother, there was Lena Shotwell, their niece, over in Kittredge town, for whose establishment they were most anxious.

Given the facts, the temperaments and the situation, the resulting engagement follows logically. Kitty excused herself to her conscience for it with the special pleading that it would chagrin the Ackroyds and that if she finally broke the engagement the making of it would save Douglas from worse.

Of course she would not think of marrying him for years. Meantime she would revel in the delicious future. Then her people were so happy over the prospect. That really meant a lot to her.

Dimly at the bottom of a very warm heart she felt that, on the whole, she had not made them as happy as she might have done.

So altogether she was not ill content with the estate in life wherein she now found herself until Douglas obstinately insisted upon her naming the day.

"Go away! The role of impatient lover does not fit you in the least," she said to him with the most fetching pout. "You know you'd be dreadfully upset if I agreed to anything so insane. We can be married when we are too old to care for tearing about. When you are thirty-five I shall be thirty-two. That will be quite time enough to do the Darby and Joan act. Until then—well, we shall stay as we are."

"We will not!" Douglas asserted, seizing both her hands. "Understand, I'm going to be a married man before the year is out"—

"I dare say you can get Lena Shotwell—or somebody like her—all on a sudden this way," Kitty interrupted, trying to pull away her hands.

Douglas held them tight. "I'm going to marry you—nobody else," he said. "Make up your mind to the fact, ladykin, and give up gracefully while there is time."

"Of all impertinence!" Kitty flashed out at him. "Let go my hands so I can take off your rubbishy ring! I won't marry you—now, never nor next day. I won't even speak to you ever again if you hold me a second longer."

"What a peaceful home we shall have!" Douglas murmured, letting go her hands, but catching her in his arms. He pressed her close and went on, with his lips against her pink ear: "Little darling, I ought to want you to be sensible, but the fact is—I don't. It is ever so much more thrilling to take you thus in spite of yourself. You have never even let me kiss your hand. No matter when we married, this would have to come some time. You know you need mastering, but I'm too generous to ask you to admit it. Come along. I want you to hear me tell daddy all about it. Mother Clyde has already agreed with me that the wedding had better be on your birthday."

Then Kitty forgot herself, her years, her grownup estate. She screamed. He did not pay any attention. She became so angry that she tried to claw his cheek, but none of her efforts or shrieks availed.

He lifted her as if she were only five years old and carried her into the sitting room, where her father rose in affright. Mrs. Clyde, pallid, but more composed, stood beside him, her hand laid detainingly upon his shoulder.

"It is hard to bear, mighty hard," she whispered. "We—we ought to bear it for the child. Spoiling her so is our work. But for heaven's sake keep still! Her whole future depends on it. Douglas is the man of men for her, and she will throw him over if she has the least chance."

"Daddy! Oh, dear daddy!" Kitty panted, trying to reach out appealing arms. Douglas pinioned them fast and went close to Major Clyde, saying, with a laugh that was not quite easy: "Major, this girl you gave me is behaving so badly! I think you might throw in one of old Flossy's pups to even up the trade."

At that Kitty screamed afresh. The major's breath came hard, his face grew apoplectic, but his wife's hand, closing and unclosing convulsively, warned him not to interfere.

He tried to assume a judicial air and say, "The case admits of argument," but at the second word the door opened to admit Miss Alicia Ackroyd, who usurped and abused privileges of intimate neighborliness.

The Ackroyd house stood just across the road. The two sisters had been on watch in the front windows ever since they saw Douglas ride through the Clyde gate.

They had heard the screams and had made their diversion. "Somebody must be killing somebody over there. I'm going to find out who," Miss Alicia said to Miss Patricia, not even stopping to snatch at a bonnet as she sped through the front door and down the walk.

After one startled "Oh!" she stood still, staring at Douglas, who had loosed his hold of Kitty, but kept her hand. Kitty had been in a white rage. Now she flushed brilliantly and looked at the intruder with her most infantile smile. "Dear Miss Alicia, did I really frighten the neighbors?" she asked. "I'm so glad. Do say I did. We have just had an impromptu rehearsal. Douglas, wretch that he is, insists that I can't act, that he is not depriving the stage of a great ornament in marrying me, and I was bound to prove him in the wrong."

"Oh!" Miss Alicia said again, this time with a mighty different inflection, yet one that still lacked something of conviction. Miss Patricia, fully bonneted, here panted in.

When the stir of settling her ended Miss Alicia returned to the charge. "You ought to have called in a bigger audience, dear Kitty," she said in the suave voice that always meant mischief. "But do tell me what the play was. I don't seem to recall"—

"Of course you don't. I belong to the new school," Kitty said brightly. "The new school exists, you know, to prove that until it came nobody ever played Shakespeare quite right. Maybe it's because of my name, but I've always felt that I could give a new rendering of Katharine, you know, in 'The Taming of the Shrew'"—

"She did do it and was most convincing," Douglas interrupted gratefully. He had been going hot and cold, wondering if there were any escape from the valley of humiliation open before them. He knew that only by a miracle could the Ackroyd tongues be stopped.

"So convincing!" he went on. "I see I must marry her right away. Miss Alicia, Miss Patricia, will you come to the wedding? It's to be just three weeks from now."

"You are a wretch, an ingrate!" Kitty said to him half an hour later when the Ackroyds had reluctantly taken themselves away. "I saved you and in doing it trapped myself beyond escape. What punishment do you not deserve, sir?"

"Nothing short of imprisonment for life," Douglas said. "Kitty, darling, you showed yourself a genius and a heroine. In reward you shall go on having your own way."

"I don't want it—except sometimes," Kitty answered, racing away to kiss the major and Mrs. Major and at last to pet old Flossy's precious puppies.

A CONVENTIONAL CASE.

And So the Eager Suitor Decides Not to Be Eccentric.

A proposal was imminent, and they both knew it. He talked politics for awhile, but that topic was soon exhausted. Finally he reached for her hand.

"Dearest!"

She said nothing.

"You know that I love you."

More silence.

"I want you to be my little wife."

Her silence must have given him a slight chill. He switched off to practical talk.

"I get $25 a week, Mabel, and I feel sure that you think well of me. How about it?"

The girl looked at him steadfastly.

"George," said she, "I like you well enough, but I'm going to talk to you frankly. Listen. You want me to marry you on $25 a week. I have no interest in the home. I play bridge for money. I smoke cigarettes. I require expensive clothes and continual excitement. I can't cook. I won't learn. I know very little that would be useful. Now, under these conditions do you still want me?"

The young man smiled indulgently.

"Certainly I want you," he answered. "Why should I have a wife any different from so many other men's wives?"—Philadelphia Record.

Outvoted.

A well known surgeon was imparting some clinical instruction to half a dozen students who accompanied him in his rounds.

Pausing at the bedside of a doubtful case, he said:

"Now, gentlemen, do you think this is or is not a case for operation?"

One by one the students made their diagnosis, and all of them came to the conclusion that it was not.

"Well, gentlemen, you are all wrong," said the wielder of the scalpel, "and I shall operate tomorrow."

"No, you won't!" exclaimed the patient as he rose in his bed. "Six to one is a good majority. Gimme my clothes."—London Tit-Bits.

Identified.

Observing an unfamiliar shrub by a country roadside, a student of botany stopped to make an examination.

"Are you acquainted with this flower, young man?" he asked of a passing yokel.

"Yep," the boy laconically answered.

"To what family do you think it belongs?"

Indicating a nearby house with a pudgy thumb, the boy answered, "Higgins'."—Puck.

WHAT THIN FOLKS SHOULD DO TO GAIN WEIGHT
Physician's Advice for Thin, Undeveloped Men and Women
Thousands of people suffer from excessive thinness, weak nerves and feeble stomachs who, having tried advertised flesh-makers, food-fads, physical culture stunts and rub-on creams, resign themselves to life-long skinniness and think nothing will make them fat. Yet their case is not hopeless. A recently discovered regenerative force makes fat grow after years of thinness, and is also unrivalled for repairing the waste of sickness or faulty digestion and for strengthening the nerves. This remarkable discovery is called Sargol. Six strength-giving, fat-producing elements of acknowledged merit have been combined in this peerless preparation, which is endorsed by eminent physicians and used by prominent people everywhere. It is absolutely harmless, inexpensive and efficient.
A month's systematic use of Sargol should produce flesh and strength by correcting faults of digestion and by supplying highly concentrated fats to the blood. Increased nourishment is obtained from the food eaten, and the additional fats that thin people need are provided. Leading druggists supply Sargol and say there is a large demand for it.
While this new preparation has given splendid results as a nerve-tonic and vitalizer, it should not be used by nervous people unless they wish to gain at least ten pounds of flesh.

Much Married.

The following, taken from "Evelyn's Diary," refers to a Dutchwoman who lived in the seventeenth century: "Toward the end of August I returned to Haarlem. They showed us a cottage where, they told us, dwelt a woman who had been married to her twenty-fifth husband and, being now a widow, was prohibited to marry in the future, yet it could not be proved that she had ever made away with any of her husbands, though the suspicion had brought her divers times into trouble."

KAISER IS HUMANE.

He Has Changed Assault Tactics Says Doctored Despatch.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—The following despatch emanating from the Kaiser's press agency now operating at Amsterdam has been received here:

BERLIN, Aug. 12.—(Via Amsterdam.)—Kaiser Wilhelm himself interfered to prevent the carrying of the Liege forts by storm. When the news reached him that the German losses were heavy, consequent on the necessity of assaulting modern steel fortifications with infantry, he sent word to the front to change the tactics.

He directed that the assaults in force be stopped and that the lines of communication be immediately restored so that the heavy siege artillery, which was still in the rear, could be brought up. The Kaiser took this step through humane feeling.

HOW TO DESTROY THE DANDRUFF GERM

BY A SPECIALIST.

That the dandruff germ is responsible for nearly all the diseases to which the scalp is heir, as well as for baldness and premature grey hair, is a well known fact, but when we realize that it is also indirectly responsible for many other diseases as well, we appreciate the importance of any agent that will destroy its power. We are therefore, particularly pleased to give herewith the prescription which an eminent scientist states he has found after repeated tests, to completely destroy the dandruff germ in from one to three applications. It will also almost immediately stop falling hair and it has in numerous cases produced a new hair growth after years of partial baldness. This prescription can be made up at home or any druggist will put it up for you: 6 ounces Bay Rum, 2 ounces Lavona de Composee, one half drachm Menthol Crystals. Mix thoroughly, and after standing an hour it is ready for use. Apply night and morning, rubbing into the scalp with the fingertips. If you wish it perfumed add a drachm of your favorite perfume. As this preparation is not a dye, it is unsquelled for restoring grey hair to its original colour.

5th—Miss O. A. Shaw, B.A., M.A., of Foxboro, at $750.

—Carried.

Word was received here last week that Bruce Fraser, son of Mr. Thos. Fraser of Outlook, Sask., formerly of Hastings, was drowned in the Saskatchewan river on Monday, the 20th inst. Besides his father, he is survived by his sister.

Miss Maye Long and Miss Florence Hopkins spent a couple of days at the formers home in Dummer last week.

Mrs. Irwin of Waterous, Sask., is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Wm Robson.

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Lawlor returned home on Saturday night and left on Tuesday for their cottage at Stoney Lake, where they will spend the remainder of their holidays.

For Freckled, Tanned, Red or Wrinkled Skin

Just beneath that freckled, tanned or reddened complexion there's an exquisitely beautiful skin of youthful clear and delicacy. If you could only bring this complexion to the surface, discarding the blemished one! You can in the quickest, safest, most natural manner imaginable, that we at any drug store an ounce of ordinary mercolized wax, apply nightly like cold cream, removing it mornings with warm water. The wax absorbs Nature by gradually peeling off the imperceptible particles of cuticle and half-dead surface skin, causing no discomfort whatever. Cutaneous defects like pimples, blotches, liver spots, moth patches, freckles, of course, disappear with the old skin. Nothing else will accomplish such wonderful results in a short time.

Fine lines and open, deeper wrinkles often appear at this season. In such case nothing is better than a face bath made by dissolving 1 oz. powdered saxolite in 1-2 pint witch hazel. This is remarkably effective.

TRADE ROUTES CONTROLLED

Britain Is Mistress of the Seas Says Admiralty Bulletin.

LONDON, Aug. 13. — The Official Press Bureau of the British War Office and Admiralty says:

"Of the 26 German army corps the bulk has been located, and it is evident that the mass of German troops is concentrated between Liege and Luxemburg.

"The number of German troops known to be on the western side of that country proves that in the eastern theatre of war, the Russo-German frontier, so far as Germany is concerned, is comparatively lightly guarded—unless by reservists.

"The Admiralty has sent out cruisers which will ply the Atlantic for the purpose of protecting trade routes. The French Government also has sent out warships to search for the German cruisers known to be in the Atlantic, and said to number five.

"The enemy's ships," says the official admiralty report, "will be hunted continually, and, although some time may elapse before they are run down, they will be kept too busy to do much mischief.

"A number of fast merchant vessels, fitted and armed at British arsenals, also are patrolling the routes and keeping them clear of German commerce-raiders. With every day that passes, British control of trade routes, especially those of the Atlantic, becomes stronger."

Tried To Wreck Train.

WINDSOR, Aug. 13.—Two different attempts to wreck fast passenger trains were made early yesterday morning. The Chicago-New York flyer was going through Jarvis at 50 miles per hour at four a.m., when it struck a pile of ties placed on the rack. Passengers were badly shaken.

Two hours later, at daylight, and a short distance farther along the rack, flyer No. 6 hit another obstruction placed on the track, but did not leave the rails.

Railway officials and the police notified the military authorities.

Just Try This When Hairy Growths Appear

(Modes of To-day.)

A smooth, hairless skin always follows the use of a paste made by mixing some water with plain powdered delatone. This paste is applied to the hairy surface 2 or 3 minutes, then rubbed off and the skin washed, when every trace of hair will have vanished. No pain or discomfort attends the use of the delatone paste, but caution should be exercised to be sure that you get real delatone.

SIEGE GUNS AT WORK.

Bombardment of Liege Is Resumed With Vigor.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—The struggle between the Belgians and the Germans for the Liege forts recommenced yesterday. The forts are being fired upon with the heavy, siege artillery which the Germans have brought to the front, and are returning the fire of the Germans with vigor.

The German troops are in movement with the evident intention of crossing the River Meuse. Convoys have been started proceeding toward Engis, a town to the southwest of Liege.

The German advance is being greatly retarded by the Liege forts, as they dominate the routes taken by the Germans, and also the intervals between the forts, thereby preventing the progress of the artillery and transport wagons.

Moving Against Namur.

ROTTERDAM, Aug. 13.—Advices from Maastricht say that a strong German column, supplied with ample heavy artillery, is moving against Namur, and that an assault on this Belgian fortification is about to begin.

The allied army in the vicinity of Namur and is expected to resist the German attack.

The German column marching against Namur will encounter nine forts circling the city, similar to the twelve forts that have worked such havoc at Liege.

Namur is only one-fifth the size of Liege, and the forts are closer together than the ones at the northern city. The ground between the forts and the city of Namur is better for defensive purposes than at Liege. The names of the Namur forts are: St. Heribert, Malonne, Suzelee, Emines, Cognelee, Gelbressee, Maiseret, Andoy and Dave.

German Losses at Liege.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 13. — The German losses at Liege are now placed at 4,500 killed, 12,000 wounded and 3,700 prisoners.

Limit of Courtesy.

Japan's new prime minister, Count Okuma, has a wooden leg. It replaces a limb which was blown off by the bomb of a political assassin. In connection with that outrage a story is told which goes far to support the claim that is made for Okuma that he is the best-mannered man in Japan. After the explosion, which had killed his servants and horses, besides shattering his leg, he was lying in his office in an agony of pain, yet he was able to say smilingly to a foreign statesman who was taking leave of him, "Excuse me, sir, for my impoliteness in not seeing you to the door."—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Modern Diana.

Lady Grace Mackenzie is on her way to East Africa, where she is going on a big game hunting expedition at Nairobi. A hundred or so native carriers and bearers will join this modern Diana, and with five white people the expedition will penetrate into the interior. Lady Mackenzie will take with her a doctor, a secretary and two white hunters. There will be a phonograph and dictaphone equipment to secure permanent records of jungle life. The trip will occupy nine months, and Lady Mackenzie expects to visit districts never previously seen by a white woman.

National Forest Timber.

In 1905 the timber sold from the national forests aggregated 96,000,000 board feet, which brought the government no more than $85,000. In 1913 more than 2,000,000,000 feet brought in contracts amounting to $4,850,000. Not all this money was received in any one year, because national forest timber is sold on contracts which range from one to twenty-five years, and it is paid for as cut.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—Notwithstanding the efforts of the English, French and Dutch to cause a renewal of exports from the United States, the trade here remained sluggish today, although the financial and military prerequisites were near at hand. Prices for wheat recovered only in part from a break of 2½c. Despite comparative firmness at the close, the market showed net declines of 1c to 2c. Corn finished 1c to 1½c above last night; oats up 1-8c to ¼c, and provisions at an advance of 5c to 30c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 12.—The wheat market opened 1½c to 1¾c lower for October and December, oats ⅛c higher, and flax 2c lower to ¼c higher, trading was quiet and prices weakened in sympathy with the United States markets, the export difficulty embarrassing the market.

The range in prices at noon was 1¾c to 1¾c lower for October and December wheat, ⅛c for oats and 2c to 2¼c on flax.

There was a good demand for cash wheat from Ontario millers, but offerings were few. Winnipeg wheat opened ¼c to 1¾c lower, and closed ⅝c to 1¾c down.

Winnipeg cash wheat closed 1¾c to 1¾c lower for contract grades. Cash barley was quoted 53c to 57c.

The weather over the west has greatly improved.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 13.—Owing to the light offerings of both oats and the very strong cable advices received, which in some cases bid as high as 55c per bushel here for them a much stronger feeling developed in the spot today, and prices scored a further advance of 1c to 1c per bushel with a fair demand for each. There was no change in flour, but the undertone to the market is strong. Demand for rolled oats is good. Mill feed is active and strong. Hay has advanced $1 per ton. There was an increased demand for hay from the west and fairer volume of business was done. Cheese is strong but trade is rather quiet. Eggs stayed and prices for strictly fresh advanced 2c per dozen. Dressed hogs 50c per 100 pounds higher. Lard ¼c to 1c per pound up.

The supply on the market for sale this morning consisted of 1200 cattle, 1000 sheep and lambs, 1100 hogs and 700 calves.

The feeling was stronger and the indications are that prices will rule higher next week. The supply today was much larger than usual on Wednesday, but it consisted principally of common cows and bulls for canning purposes, for which there was an active demand from local packing concerns and for shipment to the Buffalo market. Sales of bulls were made at $5.25 to $5.50 and cows at $3.75 to $4.50 per 100 pounds. The trade in butchers' cattle was fairly active.

Farm and Dairy Market Report

Toronto, Monday, Aug. 10.—Wheat is now the dominating factor in the grain market, and owing to increasing quantities and may now be had at $1.25 a bag. Imported goatstongue, quoted 6½ to 6¾c a lb. Reports to hand indicate that the crop will be a fairly liberal one, especially in Eastern Ontario.

It is predicted that with the cutting off of the Austrian supply of beans has resulted in a scarcity of beans for canning purposes. Prices are now quoted at $2.40 a bus. Hand picked, $2.50.

LIVE STOCK

There is a continued active demand for everything in the cattle line that is well finished. Practically every animal is required for local demand, although some of the best cattle are going forward from time to time to the United States. The removal of the war on cattle prices from there altogether favourable, though not very marked, is to a substantial measure. It may will have any great influence on cattle prices in Canada, but the scarcity is noted on fresh meat. Argentina and Australia too are in a better position to supply our needs than is Canada. A great diversion of exports to the scene of war from other countries might indirectly affect our market.

A shipment of first class steers sold last week for $8.90, several shipments sold as high as $8.85. Quotations now are: Choice heavy steers, $8.35 to $8.65; handy steers, $8.25 to $8.50; butcher steers, good, $8 to $8.25; com. to med., $7.25 to $8; heifers, $7.25 to $8.25; choice cows, $7 to $7.50; com. to med., $6.50 to $7; bulls, $6 to $7.50; feeders, $8 to $7.50; stockers, $5.50 to $7.25; canners and cutters, $3.75 to $4.50.

Milkers are in fair demand at $70 to $90 for choice; com. to med. $40 to $70; springers, $60 to $100. Calves are quoted $5 to $10.50, according to size and quality.

Spring lambs continue in active demand in spite of increased receipts at $9 to $10.15. Other quotations are: Wether lambs, $7 to $10.15; buck lambs, $6.25 to $7.25; light ewes, $5.25 to $6.50; heavy sheep and bucks, $4 to $5.25; culls, $3 to $4.

Hogs are in steady demand at $9.60 to $9.75 f.o.b.

MILL FEEDS

Mill feeds are in active demand and firm in price. Local quotations are: Bran, $23; shorts, $25; middlings, $26 to $27; feed flour, $30 to $35. Montreal quotes: Bran, $23; shorts, $25; middlings, $28; feed flour, $30 to $32.

HAY AND STRAW

So far quotations on hay and straw remain steady at the prices established some weeks ago. It is freely predicted that if the war be long continued there will be a large demand from Europe and consequent higher prices. Wholesale dealers are quoting No. 1 hay here at $14 to $14.50; No. 2, $13 to $13; new baled hay, $13 to $13.50; baled straw, $8 to $9.50. At Montreal No. 2 hay brings $15 to $17 in car lots.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

War has had the effect so far of curtailing shipments of butter to England. There has been, however, a more active trade with the west, several carloads going forward from Montreal in the past week. On the whole the situation is now in and receipts are declining steadily. Cheese factors are refusing to sell, expecting higher prices.

Cheese exporters find business at a standstill. Banks will not accept their bills of exchange and, while there is a good demand, cheese cannot be forwarded. With the clearing of German steamers from the seas a renewal of trade at satisfactory prices may be expected. At Montreal cheese is quoted nominally up to 13¼c for finest western and 13¾c for finest easterns.

POTATOES AND BEANS

New potatoes, the only kind on the market, are coming in increasing quantities and may now be had at $1.25 a bag. Imported goatstongue, quoted 6½ to 6¾c a lb. Reports to hand indicate that the crop will be a fairly liberal one, especially in Eastern Ontario.

It is predicted that with the cutting off of the Austrian supply of beans has resulted in a scarcity of beans for canning purposes. Prices are now quoted at $2.40 a bus. Hand picked, $2.50.

CARING FOR THE LAWN.

Cut the Grass Quite Long and Never Use an Iron Rake.

Grass should be cut "long" so that the roots will be protected after the cutting. This means, says the department of agriculture's landscape gardener, that the lawn mower should be set just as high as it will go.

Lawns should be cut frequently, and in ordinary cases where the cuttings are normal they should be left where they fall, notwithstanding the contrary opinion of the energetic person who follows up his cuttings by raking with an iron rake. Lawns should never be raked with an iron rake except to prepare them for the sowing of grass seed for such raking harrows up the soil. Neither should they be swept.

If the diligent caretaker of a lawn must follow up the cutting by some other operation only a wooden rake should be used, and this should be employed so as not to disturb such of the grass clippings as have sifted down around the roots. These grass clippings that settle around the roots afford them a very important protection and will do much to keep the lawn in fine condition when there is lack of rain later in the season, for they will hold the moisture and act as a shield from the sun. In fact, the grass cuttings are generally needed about the roots and should not detract from the looks of the lawn, for they soon shrivel, dry up and work their way down so that they are no longer noticed. Grasses are naturally coat climate plants and are liable to be harmed by the hot sun about the roots.

The Way to Win Votes.

Lord Beaconsfield's skill in picking up stray votes was well known. An illustration of it is given in a book by Henry W. Lucy.

At the time that the imperial titles bill was pending there was a certain pompous little Irishman, Dr. O'Leary, who seemed manageable and was desirable. One evening in the lobby Disraeli laid a hand familiarly on his shoulder.

"Dear Dr. O'Leary, the resemblance is most striking," he said. "I really thought I saw again my old friend Tom Moore."

The vain little gentleman was captured.

Boiler At Armouries Blew Out

Robert Northcote Was Seriously Injured By a Piece of Flying Metal—Steam Had Been Put On To Discover a Leak

CELLAR WINDOWS GONE

Robert Northcote, Murray street, was seriously injured this morning at the Armouries when the boiler, which heats the building, burst without a moment's warning.

It appears that Northcote, who is a plumber in the employ of the Higgins Hardware Store, had made a fire and was preparing steam for the purpose of discovering a leak in the boiler, when, apparently through an overcharge of steam the boiler burst, blowing every window out of the cellar and flooding the place with water. Northcote, who was standing near the boiler, received a fragment of metal fall on the side of the face and was in addition badly scalded on the hands. He was taken to Dr. McPherson's Surgery and treated, and subsequently conveyed to the Nicholls Hospital, where he now lies in a somewhat critical condition.

Regulations Substituted

In the Special Fishery Laws For the Province

By a recent order-in-council, certain clauses in the Special Fishery regulations for the Province of Ontario have been rescinded and others substituted. The substituted clauses prohibit the sale and export of black bass, maskinonge and speckled trout, wherever procured. However, provision is also made, that any person from a foreign country, fishing in the waters of the Province, may, by paying for an angler's permit, when the same is accompanied by him, take with him the lawful catch of two days' fishing upon leaving the Province.

GRAIN ROUTES ARE CAREFULLY GUARDED

It is stated that the Dominion Construction Company of Belleville, contractors for the Canadian Pacific Railway, have issued notices to their employees that a new line will be commenced within thirty days between Bethany Junction and Belleville to complete the low grade grain route from Port McNichell to Montreal.—Lindsay Post.

Both the local lines are busy now with grain for export. The G.T.R. has two shunters working to-day. As the C.P.R. line is a through grain route, two detectives, one each on night and day shift, guard the bridge. This was occasioned by the recent attempt to blow up the C.N.R. bridge.

HOLIDAY PARTIES OUT OF GERMANY

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 13. — The British Official Press Bureau in reviewing the operations on the Continent, insists that German attempts to penetrate the French-Belgian line have uniformly failed. The statement follows: "An engagement has occurred north-east of Hasselt between Belgian cavalry supported by infantry, and the German second cavalry division supported by a battalion of infantry and twelve guns. The fourth cavalry division is reported to be moving towards Jodoigne, but no German infantry is known to be on the left bank of the Meuse except those above mentioned. A battalion of Germans is reported to be entrenched near Vise. The Germans are planting heavy batteries north of Liege, and have constructed a temporary railway between Vise and Hamburg, parallel to the frontier of Limberg in the Netherlands. The Germans are throwing up the entrenchments all the way to Liege. The German cavalry is moving eastward, through the Ourthe Valley. The French retreat from Mulhausen in Alsace was well carried out in the face of the fact that the opposing German forces were in the proportion of four Germans to one Frenchman. The German artillery proved far inferior to the French, and their shrapnel seemed only indifferently well aimed. The German artillery is not proving as effective as had been expected."

GERMAN REPORTS TELL OF VICTORY

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—The German Wireless Telegraph Co. has given out a despatch from Berlin to the effect that all of Alsace-Lorraine and all other German territory is now clear of the French and Belgian troops. It declares that one hundred French officers and three thousand men were captured in the fighting in Luxemberg to-day, and their casualties in killed and wounded were very heavy. No mention is made of the situation in Belgium.

FIGHTING VESSELS AT VANCOUVER

VANCOUVER, Aug. 13. — The Canadian cruiser Rainbow with the Gunboat Shearwater, arrived safely at Esquimalt this morning. The sloop of war Algerine is expected to arrive this evening.

Recruits Will Begin Drill Here

Rifle Practice and Manoeuvring Under Local Officers Until the Order Comes From the Canadian War Office

BATTERY STILL RECRUITING

The local militia will take on a more war-like routine beginning today, when all the recruits and volunteers will be drilled during the day in the Armouries. Col. Young, Commanding the 26th Field Battery, received word this morning that the enlistment of volunteers for the expeditionary force is to continue, instead of being closed last night as was at first intended. Col. Young's first orders were to enlist volunteers until Tuesday night and send in the list so that it would reach Ottawa yesterday. But now that the order is supplemented by word just received, and recruiting, enlistment and training will proceed from this date. Besides that, from this date the volunteers will be allowed pay and subsistence allowance at the authorized militia rates.

The same thing exactly applies to the 57th Regiment. They drilled yesterday and drill was held again this afternoon at the armouries and will continue until the contingent is ordered to entrain for Quebec. Just when they will be ordered to Quebec is not known by the ocal officers as yet. In the meanwhile the recruiting will continue and the soldiers, in uniform, will be put through a comprehensive drilling that will round them into shape before they entrain for Quebec. On the plains of Val Cartier there will be further instructional drills and manoeuvres before the militia leaves for the fighting across the sea.

Rifle Practice.

Rifle practice is held every afternoon at the ranges for recruits and members of the Regiment. Shooting at all ranges is practiced and the men will have acquired considerable skill with the rifle before they leave the City. All of these instructional exercises are being carried on quietly but effectively, and the whole contingent of volunteers will soon be on a war footing.

The orders to the Commanding officers of the local militia read in part as follows:

"The commanding officers will assemble the volunteers for the Overseas expeditionary force at the local corps headquarters for instructional purposes from this date. Pay and subsistence allowance will be allowed at the authorized militia rates".

Col. Young said to the Examiner, this morning, that the extending of the time for the enlistment of volunteers was very probably an indication that a larger force than at first announced would be called from Canada to serve the interests of the Empire on foreign battle fields. If that is so that will mean that a larger force of local militia than heretofore expected will be found with other Canadian soldiers in the thick of the fight in Europe.

Will Spend The People's Savings

Germany Will Thus Settle Financial Difficulties

BERLIN, via London, Aug. 13. — The Norddeutsche Allgemine Zeitung declares that Germany has successfully conquered the financial difficulty which followed her mobilization.

"The Reichsbank," the newspaper adds, "came up to expectations and all the great banking institutions in Berlin and the provinces followed it. In the public interest no moratorium is desirable or necessary. The people's savings of 20,000,000,000 marks (about $7,500,000,444) will be taken first. All fears are unfounded that the mobilization will interfere with the harvest."

AUSTRIAN CAVALRY WERE CUT TO PIECES

LONDON, Aug. 12.—Another despatch from Rome to the Central News says the Corriere D'Italia, publishes a telegram from the frontier stating that an Austrian cavalry brigade has been exterminated on the Austro-Russian frontier.

The Austrian cavalry men are said to have attacked the Cossacks, who were accompanied by artillery. They were unable to hold their own and tried to get back across the frontier but rain had fallen and men and horses were caught in the marshy grounds and shot down until not a man remained alive.

GROCERY TRADE UNITED TO PROTECT THE PUBLIC FROM ITS SELFISH SELF

Rush of Money To Grab Supplies Was Promptly Blocked By All Branches of Grocery Trade in Ontario---The Poorer Citizens Would Have Felt the Pinch

GROCERS NOT SELLING IN BULK LOTS

The organized grocery trade of the Province is trying to protect the public against itself. There may be many consumers who will doubt this assertion, but it can be easily proved. In Peterborough alone during the past week almost every family that had a little money to spare displayed a thoughtless selfishness that is essentially human. Because the world was perturbed by war, and markets were reflecting unsettled conditions, the dear public said to itself, "Safety First," and began a raid on the grocery stores.

The Examiner has interviewed many grocers, big and little, and they all tell the same story. Had they filled the orders presented to them many of their staple lines would have been completely exhausted. Throughout the city you heard expression reflecting upon the business dealing of the grocery trade, and yet it can be clearly shown that with few exceptions the whole grocery trade has been fighting against the buying public, but in the interest of the same panicky public.

Unadulterated Selfishness.

For simon pure selfishness look for the man who has money, and therefore is in a position to buy. Every grocer in the city can relate instances of citizens buying hundreds of flour, sugar, large quantities of tea, and other goods. Somebody started the buying movement, and those who had the price followed it. The same old human frailties rose to the surface and it was a mild case of everybody for himself.

One Example.

Scores of instances were related to The Examiner. There are families of two persons who have sufficient supplies, to last them over a year. A family of three adults and two children bought six hundred pounds of flour, two bags of sugar and a big supply of tea, and the winter's coal. The order was sufficient for an entire year. At one grocery shop there was a run on flour which was not observed by the proprietor until he saw the goods going out. He then found that his clerks had more orders than he could fill, and had to pay a new price for additional requirements.

Organization Counts.

The wholesale grocers refuse to sell in large quantities to the retailers and it is positively stated that the sugar refineries, for instance, refuse to sell the wholesalers in what would be considered bulk lots. The whole chain of the grocery trade stands firm against the buying public, and the consumers can believe the statement or not.

Chance for Poor Man.

Mr. E. F. Mason was one of the grocers seen today, and he stated that he was selling to the poor man at the some price as to the wealthy. And this is how it happens. Acting upon the feeling that the poor man of average means should receive first consideration now and that his money is as good as anybody's, the store offers no particular advantage to the man with money. At least for the time being the woman who asks for $1.00's worth sugar receives as much in proportion to the money she exchanges as the woman who asks for 100 pounds.

No Need to Worry.

Without going into the details of price changes, Mr. Mason asserts that there is no need of the public becoming panicky. In sugar, again, the refiners state that supplies are ample, but there must be no selfish hoarding. The wholesalers take the same stand, and of course, the retailers are following the same policy. Hence, the very dear public might as well fall in line.

The Examiner has no desire to give further instances of the grasping buying attempts which have been reported. They display a side of the human character, the existence of which everyone realizes and does very little to conquer, and horrible examples never did much good anyway. But the families living largely from hand to mouth have some reason to congratulate the grocery trade for the brake which it put upon the general public.

40,000 TO 50,000 PAIRS OF BOOTS FOR SOLDIERS

Dominion Government Places an Order For Canadian Contingent.

MONTREAL, Aug. 12. — The Ames-Holden factory will today start work on an order received from the Dominion Government for between 40,000 and 50,000 pairs of boots to be used by the Canadian contingent which will leave this country in a couple of weeks for Europe. The order will run well over $100,000.

It was also stated that a rise in the price of footwear could be expected shortly as hides, along with other commodities, had experienced quite an appreciation in values lately.

Injuries Received Were Fatal

Young Man Seriously Hurt in a Runaway Accident Died Two Days Later

NEAR BUCKHORN

As a result of injuries received in a runaway accident in which a waggon loaded with heavy lumber passed over his body, Edward Roy Windover, of Catcheacoma, passed away at Mr. Eastwood's Hotel, Buckhorn, on Thursday evening last. The late young man was taking a load of lumber from Lakefield to Buckhorn on Tuesday of last week, when near Buckhorn, the horses took fright and ran away. He was thrown out and the heavy wheels of the waggon passed over his body. He was removed to Eastwood's, where every care and attention was given. Three doctors and a trained nurse attended him, but his injuries being internal and of such a serious nature little could be done to save his life.

He was twenty-three years of age, and his death is keenly regretted by a wide circle of friends. His parents, four brothers, and one sister are left to mourn his loss.

The funeral took place on Saturday.

THE WHEREABOUTS OF MRS. SEWARD AND GLADYS SEWARD

They Are Probably Safe in Some Part of Germany, Most Likely Dresden

Many persons in Peterborough are interested in knowing of the whereabouts of Mrs. Lewis Seward and her daughter, Miss Gladys Seward, who are known to be in Germany. A paragraph in the Toronto Star quotes Mrs. Oscar Bracken, (Miss Lulu Seward), Sunnyside Avenue, as stating that Mrs. Seward, before the war, was in Italy, and that Miss Gladys was in St. Petersburgh.

It will be remembered that a little more than a year ago Mrs. Seward went to Germany to stay a year with her daughter, who is studying the piano with brilliant success, under Mr. Harry Field, at Dresden. The latest news heard from Mrs. Seward was through a private letter received in Peterborough, written from Budapest, Hungary. The letter stated that Miss Seward had just joined her mother there on her return from Russia, and would soon return to Germany.

It is probable that both have returned to Dresden and that they have suffered no serious inconvenience or personal harm.

A Pathetic Side Of War

German Families Turned Out of Their Homes in Belgium to Start Anew in Another Land

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The Bruges correspondent of the Times records pathetic scenes in the Grand Place, beneath the historic Bruges belfry, whose chimes have charmed so many Canadian visitors. One side of the square is turned into quarters for women and children of German refugees who are being driven from their Belgian homes into Holland to make a new start in an unknown land. Their men are imprisoned on the opposite side of the square. Many are rich and carry money and jewels on their persons. Some are the poorest of the poor, and all are wretched. They have a hunted, despairing look on their faces, for many have been chased for spies as a bank holiday crowd chases a rabbit.

Belgians Liberal.

The second barrack square contains the actual German prisoners and war-like German civilians. Belgian officials treat them well. They soon get fresh linen and boots from the Belgian State. They are now wearing sabots and get the same rations as Belgian soldiers. Broken by hunger and fatigue they spend the day writing postcards home.

Germans buy chocolates, cigars, and cigarettes.

Belgians are showing magnificent magnanimity. Already captors and captives are the best of friends.

The whole thing is very puzzling to those honest German souls, mostly peasants. It was Belgian bayonets, they say, that paralyzed them before Liege.

COBOURG'S PATRIOTIC CONTRIBUTION.

In this time of Imperial trial and sacrifice the splendid spirit of Canadian loyalty and consideration is in conspicuous evidence. Not only do we have the receipts of moving picture theatres at home devoted to the war fund or what is the same thing, to the purpose of relieving, caring for and adding to the comforts of those who go to the front, but in Cobourg we have the managers of the Horse Show, to be held from Aug. 18 to Aug. 23, giving the whole net proceeds to the soldiers of the district who go to the war. According to a notice printed elsewhere the show promises to be of unusual merit, and it is hoped will attract a large attendance and a correspondingly large amount for the purposes to which its proceeds will be devoted.

WHAT ABOUT THE SEA?

It is a matter of interested wonderment as to which part the battle fleets of Britain and Germany are playing in the present war. As far as any news of either is concerned they are doing nothing. It is probable that this situation will not continue long. The people of Germany have made immense sacrifices in the building of a navy at immense cost, and it would not be unnatural that a German clamour should arise for some compensation, in the way of making it useful for the sacrifices the people have made, a compensation that cannot come from hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of warships lying idle in harbours. Besides, in self-protection to her merchant marine which British superiority on the sea makes practically as useless as the idle German war fleets, she must soon move. While Germany is, in naval matters, rather placed between the devil and the deep sea—between their powerful navy bottled up and useless in home ports and putting to sea to run the danger of being smashed by the greatly superior British fleet—a clash will not probably be long delayed. If the Germans win a decisive point or two on land, they may get the idea of invincibility in their heads and be tempted to try conclusions on the sea. If they meet with considerable reverses, they may in sheer desperation try even matters by encountering the British fleet in a death grapple.

WASTE THAT MIGHT BE USED.

In domestic economy, in personal expenditure and in general employment of the means of living; and, perhaps in industrial and commercial enterprise, there is an immense waste of resources, in many cases equal to what is actually, properly and effectively employed. In household administration in many homes, there is perhaps as much waste by carelessness and unskilful methods as is put to effective use. One can, in walking a wood see enough fuel, from fallen trees and limbs, going to waste to furnish fuel to the poor families of a large city.

We see cows grazing in "pasture" fields that seem to be as bare and brown, and devoid of grass as a wheel-pounded highway; and it takes a pretty lively play of immigination to fancy how cows can, under such circumstances, produce the milk delivered daily at our doors.

While this condition exists, and while dairymen have to otherwise provide provender for their cows, there is daily wasted in this city enough cool, succulent grass, to feed a large herd of milch cows. We have throughout the whole city, perhaps, a hundred acres of lawn well watered and, taken in large, cut every day and the large quantity of cool juicy grass allowed to wither on the ground or, raked together and thrown aside unused for any immediate or considerable good purpose. Dairymen say that a hundred pounds of such grass is more valuable as a milk-producing food than many more its weight of hay. If some enterprising dairyman should organize a grass collecting service he would receive a large reward.

This matter of the lawn grass and the evidences of waste in other directions mentioned, are not cited so much for the practicability of utilizing the grass, as to impress a lesson which our citizens would do well to heed. Without being pessimistic we are convinced by the logic of stern facts that hard times are before us. The prices of the means of living are high now, and threaten, if a turn does not speedily come, to be higher. At the same time there threatens increased lack of employment and lessening of income. Under such circumstances —with such an outlook—the severest economy, the most diligent avoidance of waste, a general return to, or assumption of, the simple life are indicated. Till one tries to be economical one can't appreciate the value of even small savings. It was from the small savings stored away by French peasants that France was able to pay in a few years the immense war indemnity of thousands of millions imposed by Germany at the close of the Franco-Prussian war, without borrowing a dollar abroad.

Even those of us who have more means than the average, can, by practicing perhaps a new economy, have something more to help those of our fellow-citizens the coming winter, or perhaps sooner, who from lack of employment or any cause are short of the necessaries of living.

In the splendid rush of the Dominions beyond the seas to the imperial centre, to the help of the Motherland, we have an example of unity of interest and purpose, whose spirit is imposed upon every citizen in relation to the stay-at-homes, his fellow-citizens. Some of us go a-field to fight the battle of Empire. All of us have a battle at home—to protect our fellows and stand by them to our best ability in time of trial and need, as others are standing by the Empire and the forces of civilization and human enfranchisement it represents, in their time of need.

NEWFOUNDLAND'S OFFER.

The offer of Newfoundland to supply five hundred seamen for British service is no idle one. This gallant little colony has not had sufficient financial resources to offer warships, or even maintain anything approaching an army, but it has in its population the finest seamen in the world. If an expeditionary steamer is to be sent to the North Pole or the South Pole it is to Newfoundland the promoters go to seek their crews. These people—hardy, skilful and supreme in emergency initiative—have been technically trained for years. They have a naval vessel and corps of instructors supplied from the Royal Navy permanently located in the harbour of St. John's. There they are taught the work of a war vessel, and every winter a certain number of them put their training into practice by shipping on a British cruiser for a trip to the West Indies. They are also given land gunnery practice. Thus it is that our little sister colony is now able to offer the Empire fully trained men sufficient to equip a cruiser of the first class. It is just a kind of service that Britain is only too glad to have and has gratefully accepted. It would seem like a fair exchange for them to man one of Canada's cruisers, and Canada to send a force of artillery and guns to fortify their chief port. — Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

THE FRENCH-CANADIAN PRESS.

The French-Canadian press, by its utterances, leaves no doubt of the enthusiastic loyalty of the French-Canadians to Great Britain in the present war. Recalling the fact that on more than one occasion this country was saved to Great Britain by the devotion to her flag of the people of Quebec, nothing else was to be expected, but it is nevertheless gratifying to have the French-Canadian press repeating with fervidness the declarations of a "united Canada" make by such men as Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. R. Lemieux. Take this from La Patrie of Montreal:

> The unanimous desire of the Canadian people is to aid England to the full measure of our strength, and the best means of aiding her is assuredly to do for her that which she herself considers to be the most useful.

Or this from La Presse, the most influential of our French-Canadian newspapers:

> All Canadians understand to-day that when Great Britain is at war our Dominion is also.
>
> Strong in this vital conviction, all citizens of the country are simply united patriots, ready to defend the soil, first, against possible invasion, then to place the surplus of their entire strength at the disposal of the United Kingdom, which, after having exhausted the means of honourable conciliation, has just declared war on Germany and her ally, Austria-Hungary.
>
> In taking urgent measures to meet the situation, the federal government can count on the support of the mass of the people. Sir Wilfrid Laurier guarantees the assurance of that when he declares that "the sentiment of party spirit ought to be suspended."
>
> Manifestations of loyalty and devotin to the Empire, which burst forth from every town in our land, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, point out spontaneously that Canadians, without distinction of origin, possess only one heart and one mind in the hour of danger.

What is true of the French-Canadians is true of the Boers in South Africa and the Ulsterites and Nationalists of Ireland. Germany faces an unbroken Empire, so far as Great Britain is concerned, and ample demonstration of this fact will be afforded as the war proceeds.—Brantford Expositor.

HENRY V TO HIS STORMING PARTY

Once more into the breach, dear friends once more,
Or close the wall up with our English dead!
In peace there's nothing so becomes a man
As modest stillness and humility:
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger;
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard favour'd rage;
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon; let the brow o'erwhelm it,
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.
Now set the teeth, and stretch the nostril wide;
Hold hard the breath, and bend up every spirit
To his full height! On, on, you noble English,
Whose blood is fet from fathers of warproof!
Fathers that, like so many Alexanders,
Have, in these parts, from morn till even fought,
And sheath'd their swords for lack of argument.

William Shakespeare.

FAMOUS SIEGES.

The defence of Liege is becoming one of the great events of history. It will recall to ancient mid-Victorians the glorious defence of Lucknow. Old people, some not so old, will remember the defence of Plevna by the Turks in 1877. All but the babes and sucklings keep in mind Mafeking, Kimberley and Ladysmith, the snags that stopped the Boer rush to the sea.

At Plevna, Osman Pasha held the Russians from July to December. The heroism of the besieged was without avail in the ultimate issue, except that when Osman capitulated through lack of provisions and ammunition, and the Russians had won the city only at enormous cost of life.

Another stubborn resistance, equally futile in the end, was that of Paris in 1870 against the German investment. The gay Parisians lived on rats and leather soup before they surrendered.

We are hoping that the siege of the Liege forts will rank rather with those of Lucknow, Mafeking and Ladysmith. Even should the Germans now possess themselves of the shell-carred scene, as is probable, one week's delay may be fatal to their plans. To hold out for that length of time in 1914 against the concentrated mass and charge of Germany's machine is as good a testimonial to the fortifications and the defenders as a half year's resistance in the slower days of old.

Canada's Hearty Co-operation Is Not Compulsion

We Spring to Empire's Defence Without Command or Compulsion and Even Without Request

It is at once the distinction and the glory of the British Empire that no one of its self-governing Dominions is under any compulsion except such as its own free choice determines and its own honour dictates. At this moment of Imperial crisis there is no power that can compel any one of the nations of the Empire either to do or not to do whatsoever its own responsible Government and Parliament freely resolves. The War Office, even under the iron-willed Kitchener, cannot call out one company of Canadian troops until Canada gives authority. The Admiralty, with the dashing Churchill as First Lord, cannot command the Canadian fleet, not even the "Rainbow" and the "Niobe," except by Canada's leave. King George, himself, even with the advice of his Ministers in London, is under obligations to recognise and to respect, and does recognise and respect to the full, the supremacy of Canada's responsible government in all Canadian affairs.

This is the distinction of Britain and the British Dominions. Other nations cannot understand. Even people of the United States, with one-sided and perverted stories not yet quite forgotten of what happened before 1776, do not see clearly. They do not know that, not by poetic license, but by the unwritten but inviolate terms of the British constitution, Canada makes good Kipling's affirmation of Canadian autonomy.

> "Daughter am I in my mother's house,
> But mistress in my own."

Never was that principle of national self-government so conspicuously illustrated, or so splendidly justified as in this very hour. Without command, without compulsion, without constraint, indeed without request, and—what? An army mobilises by the order of the Canadian Minister of Militia; a million bags of flour go by order of Canada's Government; a half-million bushels of oats, the gift of a Province; two equipped regiments of infantry at the charge of two Canadian citizens; several quick-firing batteries furnished by an unnamed Canadian; a whole people, the millionaire and the milkman, the man in the street and the man in the church, the native-born and the alien, each in his place, and all with their hearts serving and sacrificing for the cause they have made their own. What despot ever commanded an answer so prompt, a devotion so loyal, a sacrifice so complete? History does not know its like. Not elsewhere in any nation can it be matched except among those peoples that have learned freedom at Britain's knee.

And—greatest gift of all, sacrifice unequalled, devotion to the fullest measure—fathers who hate war and all its vaunted glory, and mothers who love their sons more than their own lives, bid them go into the death struggle which is none of their making and from which they may never return.

What Canada is doing is being done also by Australia, by New Zealand, by war-swept South Africa, and by colonial Newfoundland. And why? Because Britain is free and believes in freedom, and trusts her Dominions to the utmost limit of free self-government, and now leads her free-born sons from overseas to "make the bounds of freedom wider yet."—The Globe.

CRESSWELL'S WORK WAS TOO GOOD FOR OTTAWA

Local Boy Had Little Trouble in Disposing of the Senators Yesterday — The Shagmen Were Loose in the Field

SHAUGHNESSY OFF COLOUR

Cresswell was in fine form yesterday, and the Blountmen took the last of the Ottawa series. Several of the recent games have presented rather ragged stuff in what is termed bad innings, but they had nothing on Ottawa in yesterday's fracas for the Champions travelled as loosely as some of the alleged cars that rattle their owners about town. Shaughnessy, himself, muffed two flies that did not appear to be exceedingly difficult, and the rest of the Senatorial crew in spots showed anything but first division class. Combined with a shaky defence, the visitors could do nothing with Cresswell's delivery. Shag apparently threw up the sponge in the seventh innings when he sent Frank Dolan in to finish the game. In the meantime the Blountmen had been active with their bats, and with six innings gone had counted up a reasonably safe lead. Shaughnessy called in his battery and substituted Frank Dolan and Powell with the former Peter in the box. This conceded the game to the locals, and the rest was easy going. Cresswell surprised the natives by refusing to jam. He landed stoutly on a couple, but the best he could get was a fielder's choice. The features of the game were Shaughnessy's muffs and the local boy's steady mound work.

The play:

First Innings.

Ottawa — Cresswell opened by walking Mitchell. Rogers grounded to King, and Nill was passed. Shaughnessy lifted to Fox, and Powers rolled to King.

Peterborough—Blount and Welsh fanned, and Dolan lifted a foul to Cosy back of first base.

Second Innings.

Ottawa—Lage struck out. Dolan dropped a hit over second. Smykal flew to Rooney. Roberts scratched a hit to King. Mitchell doubled to centre, scoring Dolan. Smykal attempted to make home but was one when Kelly tagged him with a diving try.

Peterborough — Rooney walked. Byrne slashed a hit over short. King hit to centre scoring Rooney, but Byrne was out at third after a fine peg by Shaughnessy. Fox singled to right scoring King. Kelly flew to Rogers, and Cresswell grounded to Nill.

Third Innings.

Ottawa—Rogers flew to Welsh. Nill drew a pass. Shag and Powers grounded to Byrne.

Peterborough—Blount lined a single to right. Welsh popped a balloon hunt in front of the plate, stood and watched it bounce into Lage's hands. It was scarcely necessary to throw him out at first. Dolan lifted a foul to Lage, and then threw the bat to one side connecting with Rooney's underpinning. This is big league stuff. Rooney came through with a single to centre, scoring Blount. Mitchell handled Byrne's grounder poorly, but caught Rooney beyond third.

Fourth Innings.

Ottawa—Lage, Dolan and Smykal lifted them in the air.

Peterborough—King walked. Fox sacrificed. Kelly grounded to third and Cresswell flew to centre.

Fifth Innings.

Ottawa—Roberts out to Blount. Mitchell gazed at four wide ones. King had to get back of first for Rogers' fly. Nill fanned.

Peterborough — Shag dropped Blount's fly. Lush gave Curly the benefit of a balk. Welsh beat out a rather slow hit to Mitchell. Dolan walked. Blount scored on Rooney's sacrifice fly to left. Byrne forced Dolan. King singled to right and two came home when Powers failed to hold the fly. King out on an attempted steal.

Sixth Innings.

Ottawa—Shag breezed a liner to centre. Powers scratched a hit to King. Lage popped to Kelly. Shag scored on Dolan's sacrifice fly to Blount. Smykal flew to King.

Peterborough — Powers catching and Stewart in right. Fox was safe when Smykal's throw pulled Dolan off the bag., Fox stole. Shag dropped Kelly's fly, leaving second and third occupied. Cresswell lined to third and Fox was caught cold. Blount flew to centre. Cresswell stole second and Powers' threw to centre field. Kelly scored easily. Welsh walked. Dolan dropped a hit into right scoring Cresswell. Welsh was caught moping off third.

Seventh Innings.

Ottawa—Shocker batting for Roberts fanned. So did Mitchell. Cresswell then hit Rogers. Nill flew to Blount.

Peterborough — Dolan pitching. Rogers at first, Shocker in left. Rooney dropped a hit over short. Byrne hit to Dolan who threw high to Rogers. King forced Rooney at third. Fox forced King at second.

Eighth Innings.

Ottawa—Powers singled to right, but died at first, three flies being smooth going for Cresswell.

Peterborough—Kelly grounded to Dolan. Cresswell stuck one into Mitchell's mit. Blount singled and scored on Welsh's double to right. Dolan grounded to short.

Ninth Innings.

Ottawa—Smykal grounded to Fox. Bullock batting for Shocker popped to Kelly. Mitchell walked. Rogers singled to centre, but Mitchell was nabbed at the plate.

Former Resident Of Alsace Writes Letter On Native Province

Peterborough, Aug. 11th, 1914.

Dear Sir.—Will you kindly permit me as an Alsatian to give you a few informations regarding our province, whose population is so anxious to be French again. Alsace-Lorraine has an are of 14,518 square kilometers (1 square mile 2,5893 square kilometers) and a population of about 1,871,702. Amongst them are 85,000 regular German soldiers. The most spoken language in Alsace-Lorraine is German and French. In the school here the high German is learned and the French is prohibited. All the signs on the stores have to be in German, no French being allowed under heavy penalty. After the Franco-Russian war, Alsace-Lorraine became a German province, under the administration of a Prussian governor-general, who had to rule with an iron fist. All the officials of the railroads, even the brakesmen, the letter carriers, the officials of the custom house, policemen, ministers, school teachers, were Prussians. Only in the last years they took a few Alsatians, because they were kicking about it. The Prussian king, then Emperor William I, with his adviser Bismark, through whose fraudulence the war with France got stirred up, advised him to put only Prussian officials in the annexed provinces and to rule with an iron fist, so the people would get Germanized in a very short time. But his advice failed. The population was not used to such a slavery and tyranny. They were a free people under the French government, and so many left their country for France and all over the world, rather than to be ruled by such a despot. The province has no constitution like all the other German provinces. They expected us to be good German citizens but at the same time burdened us with heavy taxes and by-laws and a whole lot of exception laws, which do not exist in any other German province except in Prussian Poland. All the young men are forced to serve in the German army for two and three years active service; it makes no difference who he is. Then the parents have lost their claim on the boys. They belong as soon as they are 17 years of age, to that crazy despot who calls himself William II, by the grace of God, King of Prussia and Emperor of Germany and maintainer of peace. Many a time his life was in my hands when I served my time in the Imperial guards at Wiesbaden, where I had to serve three years, and where I was attached for one year to the guards of the Imperial sleeping apartments. It would have been very easy for me at that time to administer him a so-called "blue bean" from my revolver, which he deserved, but it would have been of no use. Then as soon as one is gone, there is another of that despotic race of the Hohenzollern, who multiply themselves as fast as rabbits, and who take his place. I had to serve three years, one year more than all the other soldiers, because I had left the country after I was 17 years old, without permission of the military government, and for that I had to serve one year longer. As soon as a young man is 17 years old he belongs to the military government. He can not leave without permission of the commander. Then when he is 20 years old he has to join the colours. After this awful horrid time of active service, of whose horrors and maltreatments I could write volumes, he belongs again to the military government till he is 45 years old. They can enlist him every year if they like for a short time of two weeks up to ten weeks, no matter if he is married or if he has to leave a good position; as soon as he gets the order he has to leave, and they mostly take the young men from our province so they can Germanize them quicker, but this kind of a Germanization is a failure in our province. Most of the boys join anti-German societies and French-speaking circles. They can never force us to love them. We have too much love for France. There is French blood in our veins. Decades of German rule and Teutonic education have been unavailing in loosening the ties of blood which bind us to France, and the hope of an eventual re-union has never died. Our ancestors served in the glorious French armies of the Valois, 1328-1500, under the Bourbons, 1500-1784, during the Revolution, 1784-1804, under the first empire, 1804-1815, under the Restoration, 1815-1830, under Louis Philip 1830-1848, under the second republic 1848-1852, under the second empire 1852-1871. They fought shoulder to shoulder with the British in the Crimean war, 1854-1856 and in Italy, 1859, and some of my cousins are serving now under the third republic and are fighting again shoulder to shoulder with the British against the invading Prussian army. My two brothers have to fight in the German army against their cousins in the French army. I, too, would have to fight for Germany but I am here in a free country under the protection of the British flag, and I do hope that the German emperor and his whole army will be annihilated by the combined forces of Briton, France and Belgium. We all in our province are fraurophile Alsatians the day will come when our province will belong again to France with the help of the British soldiers, and then it will stay French forever. Defeated in 1870-1871, France will be victorious in 1914. As I have seen in some Toronto papers, the French troops are already in our province and the commander in chief of the army General Joffre, issued a proclamation at Mulhausen as follows: "After 4 years of sorrowful waiting, French soldiers once more tread the soil of your noble country. They are pioneers in a great work of revenge. For them what emotion it calls forth and what pride to complete the work which they have made at the sacrifice of their lives. The French nation unanimously urges them on and in the folds of their flag are inscribed the magic words, "Right and Liberty. Long Live Alsace. Long Live France!" Indeed those words, Right and Liberty, are magic words to us. We never had this under the German government. Down with the emperor. William the murderer, down with the Crown prince, down with the whole Hohenzollern dynasty. Long live Britain and France.

Thanking you, Mr Editor for permitting me a space in your paper I remain.

Very very truly,
EMILE BAUMER,
559 George Street.

Hackenschmidt, Carpentier, Johnson And Others In War

(By Hugh S. Fullerton.)

Five prize fighting champions either are under arms in the European armies or will be. England, France and the other embattled nations have given the fighters a chance to engage in their profession; and the fighting is starting with no discussion of weights or purses.

Jack Johnson, heavyweight champion, has been drawn into the army of France. Johnson, when he fled from the United States to escape punishment for violation of the Mann Act, renounced his American citizenship and became a citizen of France. By his own act he made himself subject to service in the French army. No sooner had war been declared than Johnson announced his intention of joining the colours. Further, in a burst of enthusiasm, he announced that he would present all his motor cars to the French Government for military purposes. The fact that he could not escape service and that his motors were subject to impressment may have had something to do with it.

Georges Carpentier, heavyweight champion, and the idol of the French sport followers, was a member of the reserve and immediately upon the declaration of war he cancelled all his fight engagements and joined his regiment. Bombardier Wells, the British heavyweight; Freddie Welsh, the lightweight champion and Charles Ledoux, the bantam champion of Europe, all are subject to military service.

The war has summoned a score of French and English prize fighters, while in both Russia and Germany the wrestlers are in the army. Geo. Hackenschmidt is with the regiment somewhere on the Russian frontier, and the German wrestlers who have visited America are all under arms. The prize fighters are not inexperienced in war. Carpentier was an active member of the French reservists, and Wells saw service in India before he became heavyweight champion of Great Britain. Ledoux has answered the call to arms. Neither Johnston or Welsh has had military training, but they will have the chance to learn now.

There are a dozen or more of the British fighters who are subject to the call to arms and four of those who have been fighting in England during the last two years are members of the navy.

It looks as if the war will wipe out this generation of boxers —and perhaps produce better ones.

Baseball "Failures" That Have Made Good in Fast Company.

In the last few years more than one baseball player thrust back into the bushes without even an option on his future services being retained has returned to fast company and performed in so masterly a manner that the manager who failed to see his good points when he held first claim on the man has been made to look like a genuine baseball joke.

Jake Daubert of the Superbas, the best first baseman in the game today, was thrown overboard by the Naps, and even the shrewd Connie Mack failed to see the possibilities in Joe Jackson's club swinging. Harry Davis and Dan Murphy were turned down by the Giants and then went to Philadelphia and assisted in making the Athletics world famous. Jean Dubuc and Otto Stanage were cast into the discard by the Reds only to turn up later as stars. Heinie Wagner, for a long time the American league's cleverest short fielder, once was cast adrift by the New York Nationals, and after being returned to the tall grass Dick Rudolph of the Braves and Pierce of the Cubs fought their way back among the featured men in the majors.

Bill Killifer of the Quakers and Bob Bescher and Jeff Tesreau of the Giants went to the National organization and made good after they had been forced to walk the plank in the American league.—St. A. Geowy in Leslie's.

BRITISH NAVY UNIFORM.

Blue For Sailors Does Not Go Back Beyond 1748.

When we get accustomed to some long-established fashion we are apt to think that it is founded on the nature of things, something that has always been so, and must forever remain so. 'Let me give an example—blue is the chief and predominant color in naval uniforms, and no doubt most people will say, "Of course it is." They will argue that blue is the obvious color for the dress of a sailor because the sea is blue, says the writer of "Sub Rosa" in The Daily News and Leader (London), and is described as "the azure main." The phrases "navy blue," "bluejacket," and ultra-marine all show that we accept the idea that blue is necessarily the color for those who have to do with the sea. Let no one suppose that I question the appropriateness of such a choice, but there was a time when our naval officers dressed themselves up in all sorts of gay colors.

Before 1748 there was no naval uniform, and the captain of a warship dressed himself and his officers as he liked. There were naval "suits" in those days — for instance, Captain Windham and the officers of the Kent, a ship of 70 guns, wore (in 1746) gray and silver, faced with scarlet, togethed with check shirts and petticoat trousers! Now at or about that time there was a club of sea officers who met every Sunday evening at Will's coffee house in Scotland Yard, for the purpose of watching over their rights and privileges. It is the fixed view of nearly every naval man that Alfred the Great founded the navy, and that it has been going to the dogs ever since. On one memorable Sunday night the assembled heroes determined that "a uniform dress was useful and necessary for the commissioned officers, agreeable to the practice of other nations." So they formed a committee, and it waited on the Duke of Bedford, who was at the head of the Admiralty, and His Grace brought the question before King George II.

The monarch agreed with the proposal, and in the end Mr. Forbes, then admiral of the fleet, was summoned to attend the Duke of Bedford. He went and found the room decorated with all sorts of different naval dress, and he was asked his opinion as to the most appropriate. The admiral's view was that the uniform should be red and blue, or blue and red, as these, he said, were the national colors. It was then that the duke remarked with some complacency that the King had determined otherwise, and he went on to say: "Having seen my Duchess riding in the park a few days ago, in a habit of blue faced with white, the dress took the fancy of His Majesty, who has appointed it for the uniform of the royal navy." Probably the duchess little knew when she ordered that riding habit that her choice would have so great and so lasting a result.

Lucky Name for Sailors.

Among many English seafaring men there is a tradition that no man saddled with the name of Hugh Williams will ever die at sea—a tradition based on one of the most remarkable series of coincidences ever recorded in the logs of those who go down to the sea in ships.

Perhaps the most remarkable instance of this immunity of the Hugh Williamses from death at sea occurred in 1889, when a coal barge was caught in a storm in the North Sea and went down.

There were nine men on board, and all were lost except two, who were uncle and nephew, and each of whom was named Hugh Williams.

In August, 1820, a pleasure boat collided with another vessel and went down. There were twenty-five persons on board, most of them children, and all were drowned save one, Hugh Williams, a lad of six.

In 1785 a Hugh Williams alone survived out of 61 and in 1664 only one man—Hugh Williams—was saved out of 80.

TWO GERMAN CRUISERS OUT OF HARM'S WAY

The Goeben and the Breslau Are Locked Up in the Dardanelles

UNEXPECTED ENDING OF THEIR MOVEMENTS

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The inglorious end of the exciting and dramatic career of Germany's two swift Mediterranean cruisers is recorded as parallel to the German miscalculation before Liege.

British naval men, knowing the superior speed and power of the Goeben, thought she at least would show fight. Instead the officers and men presumably have the mortification today of seeing her put quietly out of harm's way in the Dardanelles by British officers who head the Turkish naval service, with Rear-Admiral Arthur H. Limpus as their chief.

The Goeben was one of the best German men-of-war, and was sent to the Mediterranean against the advice of the German naval officers, to advertise the skill of the Colman Vulcan Shipbuilding Company, who were seeking orders. Germany now possesses only four completed battle cruisers.

The Breslau, which is also to be disarmed, is only two years old, and is the swiftest light cruiser under the German ensign.

No Englishman underestimates the growing strength of the German navy and the qualities of her seamen, and this ignominious end to Germany's naval forces in the Mediterranean was most unexpected.

Are Invading Bosnia In Three Columns

Combined Armies of Servia and Montenegro Are On the Move

BELGRADE BOMBARDED

NISH, Aug. 12.—A combined Servian and Montenegrin invasion of Bosnia from Plevlje (Tashlija), northwest of Novibazar, has begun in three columns. Gen. Radomir Putnik, chief of the Servian general staff, being ill, Gen. Jankovitz, of the Servian army, has taken supreme command of the forces.

Servian artillery is engaged in the bombardment of Gorashda, on the River Drina, 29 miles to the southwest of Sarajexo, the Bosnian capital. Servian troops already have captured the Bosnian town of Vardishta, at the junction of the Rivers Drina and Limvo. Some unimportant encounters are reported on the Servian frontier at different points on the Rivers Save and Danube.

The combined army won an overwhelming victory over the Austrians opposing their advance to Sarajevo, Bosnia, and inflicted heavy losses. News of the capture of Sarajevo is momentarily expected.

The bombardment of Belgrade, the Servian capital, by the Austrian artillery, continued today, when heavy material damage was inflicted on the city.

Prince George of Servia was wounded by an Austrian shell yesterday. The Prince was standing on the fortress wall, watching the Austrian bombardment, when a shell exploded a few feet away from him and he was struck on the head by a piece of flying stone.

OFFERS TO RAISE A JEWISH REGIMENT

OTTAWA, Aug. 12.—Louis Gurofsky, a broker of Toronto, has written the Minister of Militia, offering to raise a Jewish regiment at his own expense.

He, Gurofsky, asserts that his object is to show the loyalty of the Hebrews and their appreciation of the liberty they enjoy under the British flag. He himself is an ex-sergeant of the Tenth Royal Grenadiers.

WAR SUMMARY

CLOSING IN FOR GREAT CONFLICT

The Intelligence Service of the allies—and no doubt of the Germans also—has been greatly benefited by the operations of aerial scouts. It is authoritatively announced that great masses of the field forces of Germany are now concentrated in Luxemburg and southern Germany, and that the principal attack on France will be made from that quarter. The aeroplane has thus early proved its worth as an aid in locating the enemy. As the two armies come into close contact its value as an addition to the fighting power of the belligerents will be subjected to a like test. The days of surprise attacks in force are over. It is impossible to conceal from the airman flying over a hostile country, the movement of troop trains and the march of troops along the highways. Several days ago French aeroplane scouts reported the building of huge additional landing platforms along the railway lines in the vicinity of Metz and northward. That single observation was of immense value to France in placing her troops in the most favorable positions to meet the German advance. The aeroplane has made good.

GERMAN DISAPPOINTMENTS

The timely discovery of the exact vicinity in which her armies are now being concentrated is thus another adverse factor Germany must face. She has had quite enough of disappointments during the past ten days. The German statesmen never expected that Servia would defy and hold off Austria. They must have been startled when Italy refused to take a place with her allies in the forefront of the battle. The vigorous resistance of Belgium when her neutrality was ignored came as a distinct surprise to them and the ominous mustering of Dutch troops will unquestionably add to her disquiet. Finally and worse than all the other adverse factors, they see Britain not only a belligerent but raising great armies and taking part in continental military operations upon an entirely unprecedented scale The larger developments during the past two weeks have all been adverse to Germany It would be no surprise therefore were the Germans to try to recover their position and restore the belief in their invincibility, so badly shaken during the assaults upon the forts at Liege by pushing forward into France with the utmost vigor and trying to win decisively the opening battles of the war.

Exhibition Board Held Meeting

Will Proceed Only With Improvements That Are Absolutely Necessary

A meeting of the Peterborough Central Exhibition Board was held in the Council Chamber last evening, when several matters of importance were discussed.

The question of the improvements and additions to the buildings was considered, and it was thought advisable to proceed with only what was absolutely necessary this year.

Arrangements are to be made for a special return train to Campbellford on Saturday evening, the last day of the fair.

The prize lists are now in the hands of the Secretary, from whom they can be procured on application.

Those desirous of having booths or space in the building are asked to make application to Mr. Hall at once.

WAR NEWS IN BRIEF

MORE TROOP STEAMERS.

MONTREAL, Aug. 12.—Four more Canadian steamers have been taken over by the British Government — the Empress of Britain, Mount Temple, and Lake Manitoba, of the C.P.R. fleet, and the Saturnia, of the Donaldson Line. They will be used, it is thought, as grain and troop carriers.

ANOTHER DECLARATION.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—War between Great Britain and Austria-Hungary, it is expected in London, will be declared tonight.

ITALIAN'S PICK ACCIDENTALLY CUT FELLOW WORKER

Nicholas Chase, an Italian, working for the City, while engaged in road work, on Hunter Street, this afternoon, received an ugly gash on his left hand, resulting from an accidental blow from one of his fellow-workmen's pick. The wound was dressed by Dr. Sullivan, and afterwards received treatment at the Nicholls Hospital.

KAISER SEEKS AID IN THE BALKANS

ROME, Aug. 13. — The Kaiser is making a supreme effort in the Courts of Turkey, Greece, Bulgaria and Roumania, to have these nations side in with Germany and Austria in the present war. That the Balkans must inevitably be drawn into the war is considered certain here. But is is unlikely that they will line up entirely with the Kaiser. Greece and Turkey must inevitably fight; the latter will range herself on the side of the Kaiser, while Greece will aid England.

GERMANS HAVE GRAVE DIGGERS

BRUSSELS, Aug. 13.—The German army is the only one engaged in the European war having a special corps of grave diggers accompanying the troops in the field. The grave diggers corps was formed during the Franco-Prussian war of 1870. All German soldiers wear around their necks a label bearing their name, rank and regiment.

GERMANS MAY ATTACK ANTWERP

PARIS, Aug. 13.—That the fighting in Belgium has been renewed is admitted at the War Office. The German losses far outnumber the Belgians, it is stated. The advancing troops of the German army have moved in such a way that there is a growing belief that the Germans have planned an attack upon Antwerp. This would give them a port on the North Sea much nearer the English channel than any on the German coast, but the military experts say it would be an impossibility for any German army to take Antwerp.

ITALY EXPECTS TO REMAIN NEUTRAL

ROME, Aug. 13.—Following the official announcement that England had declared war on Austria the cabinet council was held. No announcement was made but it is considered certain that there will be no immediate change in Italy's position of neutrality.

EUROPEANS DIG VALCARTIER TRENCHES

OTTAWA, Aug 13.—At Valcartier camp, the workmen who are engaged in digging trenches and putting up targets, include three camps, one of Austrians, another of Germans and still another of Italians. Despite war there has been no trouble. The majority it is believed, came to Canada to escape conscription and have no idea of returning to become targets on the field of battle.

TRAIN OF HOLIDAYING REFUGEES

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 13.—United States Ambassador Gerard, with a trainload of four hundred United States and Canadian refugees, from Berlin, bound for Rotterdam, to take ship there, passed through here this morning. There is some comment here on the fact that Gerard, who is also acting British representative in Berlin, left that city to go to a foreign port. It is supposed he wished to communicate more effectively with the United States Government.

"DRAKE" IN ST. LAWRENCE.

Big Cruiser Comes Across to Open the Atlantic Route.

MONTREAL, Aug. 12.—The cruiser Drake was reported off the Gulf of St. Lawrence yesterday and her presence will increase the security of British shipping on th Atlantic coast. The Drake is a powerful cruiser of 14,900 tons, a speed of 23 knots, and a crew of 900 men. She is much larger than any German cruisers so far reported on this side of the Atlantic.

"The ocean route is clear from Montreal to Liverpool, and any ship can sail when she pleases in perfect safety," stated R. S. White, collector of customs.

PANAMA CANAL IS READY FOR THE FORMAL OPENING SATURDAY

Four Months Ahead of Time Set—Has Cost the United States Over $400,000,000—Already Selling Passage Tickets

DETAILS OF THE WORK

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13. — More than four months ahead of the date set when the board of consulting engineers in 1906 estimated that it would take until January 1915 to complete the Panama canal along the lines then under way, the United States government finds itself ready to begin business next Saturday in selling tickets of passage to ships of all nations through the new gateway.

It is just ten years since the government advertised its purpose to connect the oceans. It is nearly 400 years since a Spanish engineer first suggested such a project.

For a time the epoch which this triumph of engineering marks will pass unnoticed so far as celebrations go, for it is not until next spring that the great demonstration will be made, but from next Saturday on, the Panama canal will be an accomplished fact, and the world's commerce will gradually accustom itself to this new groove.

What it will mean to the world at large, and to particular nations, and especially to the United States, is a question around which a great deal of controversy has waged, now to be answered by the canal itself

No Charge for Passengers.

After the passage of a government steamer next Saturday, probably the Cristobel, any ship up to 10,000 tons register applying for admission to the Pacific from the Atlantic, of vice versa, may be conducted through the fifty miles waterway upon payment of $1.25 for every ton (net) of cargo. Crew and passengers will not be taxed.

At this nominal expense some two months' sailing time, on a 10,000 miles voyage around the South American continent may be saved, or the expense of transhipment by railroad done away with, if desired.

The canal has cost the United States nearly $400,000,000. That is approximately what de Lesseps, the French engineer, figured it would cost when he undertook the job in 1880, but he spent that and more, in making only a slight impression, and ended in utter failure and financial disgrace.

A year from this time it is figured the government will have to show receipts of some $15,000,000 to pay the operating cost of the canal, which will be about $4,000,000 yearly, and the interest on its huge investment. Whether it will be able to do so this year or for many years is a moot question.

Traffic experts have estimated that 10,000,000 tons of freight will be carried through the canal every year for the first few years, and that later it will be nearly doubled. This, roughly, has been the experience at the Suez canal. Last year nearly 6,000 ships passed through the Suez, with a net tonnage of over 20,000,000. The growth in tonnage in ten years has been more than seventy per cent.

Big Contingent Of Boys To Visit Viamede Next Week

Party of Thirty Coming From Pittsburgh to Stoney Lake—Were Winners in Popularity Contest

RECENT VISITORS

Viamede, the popular Mc Julian Resort, will shortly be invaded by a host of boys from Pittsburgh. There will be twenty-five youths, with five men to look after them. They come as the result of a popularity contest, carried out by the Pittsburgh Post and the Pittsburgh Sun, to decide on twenty-five of the most popular wage-earning boys of Pittsburgh, Allegheny County, and the surrounding territory, who are to be given a trip to Niagara Falls and the "Woods of Canada".

The itinerary of the Post-Sun party of winners will be as follows: Leave Pittsburgh 9.00 a.m., August 18th, pass through Buffalo, and arrive at Niagara Falls 7.00 p. m. the same evening. Leave the Falls on August 20th, 9.50 a.m., by the Gorge route, take passage on one of the Niagara Navigation Company steamers to Toronto. Leave the Queen City at 1.50 p.m., arriving at Viamede that evening.

Everything is to be provided for the boys, such as canoes—one for every two, and bathing suits. They will make excursions to the principal points on the lakes, and will grace our presence until the 27th of August.

Mr. Irvine, the advance agent of the newspapers, visited Viamede last week and made all the necessary preliminary arrangements. He was delighted with our lakes, and is sure the boys will have an excellent time.

The coming of these 'popular boys' should prove a great "ad." for Stoney Lake.

MRS. BURTON GIVES DETAILS

Makes Further Explanation of Her Belief---The Law and Its Spirit---Matter Dealt With By Elder Johnston

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Esteemed Sir,—I desire to thank you for your kind courtesy in publishing my article entitled "The Law and The Gospel Compared," and, dear Sir, I would ask, will it tax your patience too much to extend your kind courtesy a little farther. I believe you will see with me that those who read my article and believe what I said, and have the opportunity to read to-day the reply to my article by Elder Johnston, last evening, that those who are for me will wonder if I have seen my statements to be false and be ready to own myself beaten. No, dear reader, I will not own myself beaten; God is on my side, and who can be against me?

Mr. Johnston says he is not preaching law instead of Gospel, as I accused him of doing, but he is preaching law and Gospel. I wonder who sent him to do that? A command from Jesus is "go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Mr. Johnston further asks why do I not keep the seventh day as Sabbath if I believe the law as I said I did? I think I told him why; but he did not choose to deal with the latter part of my paper; perhaps I did not make myself clear, so I will try and make clear this time what I believe. I am not trying to find an excuse for disobeying the Sabbath command, but I see, yes, and have found the kernel of those commands, and can afford to throw away the shell and think no more of it in the enjoyment of the nut. I would say here, before I proceed further, that this, my reply to the charges made against me, is final. Those who do not agree with me after, must disagree, and be willing to be tossed to and fro in their mind as to whether they must worship on the seventh day or on the first and, according to Mr. Johnston, take the terrible consequences, should they not have the courage to give up the first and worship on the seventh.

Now, briefly, what are my beliefs? First of all, I say, commands are for children, for children under parents, and under school masters, and the sooner we learn the lessons they would have us learn the sooner we shall be free from the bondage of "Thou shalt not." Why do we have to learn that little spells "the"? Because it is the beginning of a greater education, and the "thou shalt nots" of the law are the beginnings of things God would teach us. The law says "thou shalt not kill." Jesus goes farther and says, "he that hateth his brother is a murderer," and so with Jesus as our teacher, we see greater things in the law than we did before. The same thing applies to covetousness and adultery. The desire is sinful and will lead to word and deed. Sin, as Mr. Johnston says, is the transgressing of the law. What law? I reply, the law of love. God is love, and he that loveth not knoweth not God. Do we love God and keep His commandment by loving our neighbours as ourselves? Yes, we do, for if we love our neighbour we will not bear false witness against him; we will not steal anything that is his, because it is a violation of the law of love, it will cause bitterness where there should be brotherly love; it will lead up to the breaking of that other command, "thou shalt not kill," and let me say here that the command which we, as Christians, are called to obey, are the commands of Jesus. The new commands coming from the old, and blessed are they that do His commandments; that they may have right to the tree of life—Rev. 22—14. Now let us for a moment examine the command to keep holy the Sabbath day. Was there a deeper something in this command? Yes, I believe so. I would ask my readers to read carefully the fourth Chapter of Hebrews, verse 3; we read: "For we which have believed do enter into rest, real rest, which Sabbath keeping can never give; "Come unto Me all ye that are heavy-laden and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light" Verse 10, we read: "For he that is entered into rest, he also hath ceased from his own works as God did from His". In Colossians 2, 16—17, we read: "Let no man therefore judge you in meat or in drink, or in respect of an holiday, or of the new moon, or the Sabbath days, which are a shadow of things to come. "A shadow?" What is that? It is not the real thing, is it? Coming events cast their shadows. Well then, if we have the real thing, shall we grasp at the shadow? Shall we say the shadow is the all-important thing? What fools we would be to pursue a shadow. Let us turn now to Timothy, 1st chapter, 1.5, "now the end of the commandment is charity or love out of a pure heart and of a good conscience and of faith unfeigned. From which some have turned aside unto vain jangling. Desiring to be teachers of the law, understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm. "And the Apostle Paul going on to say that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless, the disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, etc., we will turn now for one moment to Romans, Chapter 7, and we read, "we who are born again are to become dead to the law and be married to another; before this we were married to the law, but our first husband now is dead and we are bound to Jesus now by the holy bonds of love, sacred and binding for all eternity, and who, I ask, that has experienced that blessed of all experiences of a mutual love, love going out, and love coming in, who will ever want to be free from it, or seek liberty elsewhere? This is eternal life; love is eternal, for God is love. When this is our experience do we feel like crying out, as we did before we knew Jesus, when we were married to that task-master, the law, "Oh, wretched man that I am?" No, far from it, for love makes the commands easy. Rom. 8: "There is, therefore, now, no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made me free from the law of sin and death." Now, with a quotation or two from the 2nd Epistle to the Corinthians, 3rd Chapter, I will conclude, hoping I have made it clear that I am justified in believing what I do. Verse 6, we read: "Who (meaning God) also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament, not of the letter, but of the Spirit; for the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life. But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance, which glory was to be done away. How shall not the ministration of the spirit be rather glorious? For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious? Seeing, then, that we have such hope we use great plainness of speech; And not as Moses, who put a veil over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of those things which are now abolished. So, dear reader, in concluding, let me say, I could sit here and give you Scripture upon Scripture, and after all, it would only be what I read.

But why am I so confident in what I am writing? I have experienced the things I write about. I was under the law for a length of time, and was brought by its convicting power to despair of ever being able to be good, and by this very despair, was led to seek for help, and found it in Jesus, and that which was hard before and impossible, is now made both easy and possible, because He has given me a new nature and as I said before, as the new man grows, and increases in strength and vigour, the old life and the law, which governed it, dies.

Thanking you, dear Sir, in anticipation of your extended kindness, I am,

Yours respectfully,
Mrs. Burton.

FRENCH FLEET IN FORCE IN ATLANTIC

Searching For the Five German Cruisers—Official Naval Statement

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The official war bureau issued a statement tonight dealing with the naval situation, which for the first time showed that French warships are present in the Atlantic in force.

The statement says:

"A French fleet is searching the Atlantic for the five German cruisers known to be there. The Germans will be hunted continually and kept too busy to do any mischief. Eventually they will be run down and sunk or captured.

"The Admiralty is commissioning fast merchant vessels for equipment as auxiliary cruisers, to keep the sea routes clear of German warships."

THREE BANK OF MONTREAL MEN FOR WAR SERVICE

Mr. Lennox Wallace Cottrell, savings teller in the Bank of Montreal, and a reservist of the British Royal Navy Volunteers, received word yesterday from the Naval Service Department at Ottawa, accepting his offer to serve in any capacity in the present war. Mr. Cottrell expects to leave for Halifax in a few days. The Bank of Montreal will have three of its staff in active service, the accountant, Mr. A. F. Field, and a junior, Mr. Hy Caillard, having already enlisted in the overseas contingent of the 57th Regiment.

BOARD BILL HAS NOT BEEN SETTLED

George Balmer was charged before the Magistrate this morning with obtaining board and lodging by misrepresentation. Gordon Wright, the plaintiff, alleged that the prisoner has boarded with him for three weeks, saying no board, but claiming that a cheque was due him from the C.P.R.

The case was adjourned till to-morrow, for, said the Magistrate, it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove that no cheque was due the defendant.

It appears that Balmer also owes a bill at the White House.

Wilfrid Ireland, a familiar figure, was fined $5.75 for drunkenness, with a promise of a term in gaol should he appear again.

Serious Defeat In The Present Battle May End German Hopes

Kaiser Is Staking All On Crushing Western Foes Before the Russian Invasion Begins

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 13. —A statement given out by the official bureau of the war office regarding the disposition of the two army corps comprising the army of the Meuse, is the most authoritative information available. The position of the main forces of the Kaiser's troops is of far greater importance than the reports of cavalry engaged and other preliminary operations which have been the only news received in the last few days.

The information seems to show that the Kaiser's general staff still holds to the attempt to strike a tremendous blow at France in the hope of crushing her before Russia can move her men over the border in force. The German frontier in the east is only slightly guarded. There does not seem to be any intention of a serious effort against the fortifications on the Franco-German frontier.

Everything is being staked by the Germans on the success of the movement through Belgium and Luxemburg. Thus, the fight there, which will undoubtedly be the greatest battle in history, may be expected to be waged between Metz and Brussels. The battle fronts will be more than 100 miles long and the forces engaged about a million men on each side.

Unofficial opinion here varies as to which side will have preponderating strength in this battle, but it is believed that in regard to numbers, both sides will be about equal.

The disjointed dispatches, telling of cavalry engagements and so forth, must be taken as simply the first getting in touch of the forces. It may be expected that the great battle will be on for several days. It will decide if an army composing a million men in the field can be fed and handled as a machine.

A damaging blow to Germany might not be decisive as between Germany and her western foes, but with Russia almost ready to strike a serious defeat in Belgium or Northern France might well put a sudden end to German hope.

Until one side gains some decided advantage nothing reliable can be expected from either army, as there are no war correspondents in the field, and all telegraph and other possible lines of communication with the world are in the vigorous grasp of thousands of vigilant censors.

It is therefore impossible to indicate the exact nature or progress of the operations. Occasional brief messages from Belgian and French sources claim successes here and there, but none of these is of crucial importance, and as the passing of every hour must obviously alter the face of battle, and probably produce alternating advantages, none of the reports which filter through in the next ten or twelve hours can be of much consequence.

Speculation is even more valueless and would not lead to a clearer conception of what is happening than could be derived from the thunder of many guns which is shaking the houses of Maastricht and other towns in the neighbourhood.

Meanwhile, although absolute silence is maintained regarding the movements of the fleets, great confidence was inspired this evening by an official communication which shows that the North Sea is the only waterway in the world about which the Admiralty is unable to give assurances of safety to shipping. Within a single week the German mercantile marine has practically ceased to exist.

Britain Buys U. S. Sugar

600,000 Bags of Granulated Sugar Purchased by British Importers

YONKERS, Aug. 12.—British importers have contracted for 600,000 bags or 30,000 tons of granulated sugar from the Federal Sugar Refinery in Yonkers. This is practically a month's output of the big refinery. It is to be delivered during August, and the plant will run day and night with its maximum force in order to produce it.

The steamship Minnesota lies at the dock here partly taking on the first consignment and will sail as soon as loaded. It is understood at the refinery that the ship will leave New York harbour on the trans-Atlantic trip and be convoyed by British cruisers to the English shores.

The order is due to the scarcity in Great Britain resulting from the stopping of the source of supply in Europe on account of war.

The National Refinery here is also running night and day with a maximum force on domestic orders. Refiners do not anticipate interference with the ships bringing raw sugar here from Cuba and Porto Rico.

GERMAN OVERSEAS COMMERCE DEAD

LONDON, Aug. 12.—Germany's oversea commerce has been strangled within a week. This strangulation followed instantly on the declaration of war. There were over 2,000 German steamers of nearly 5,000,000 tons gross, afloat when hostilities opened. German sailing ships, mostly of small size, numbered 2,700. These vessels were distributed over seas, world wide. Scores of them have been captured, and others ran for neutral ports, while the sailings of others were cancelled.

The heart of the German mercantile navy suddenly stopped beating What must be the feelings of Herr Ballin and other German pioneers as they contemplate at least the temporary ruin of years of splendid enterprise?

WEDDING BELLS

McMILLAN—PAYNE.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized last evening at six o'clock, at Woodburn Lodge, Dummer, the home of Mr. Nathan Payne, when his only daughter, Dora Luella was united in marriage to Mr. David H. McMillan of New York. The ceremony was performed in the presence of about one hundred and twenty guests, the pastor of Bethel Methodist church, Rev. Mr. Hinton, officiating. The bride leaning on the arm of her father, entered the drawing room to the strains of the wedding march played by Miss Roxie Andrews of Norwood. She was beautifully attired in a gown of cream silk and wore the conventional bridal veil and orange blossoms. She carried roses and lilies of the valley.

The bride and groom were unattended. After the ceremony hearty congratulations were bestowed, after which the guests sat down to a sumptuous wedding repast.

The groom's gift to the bride was a handsome touring car.

Mr. and Mrs. McMillan expect to leave later on an extended trip.

LONDON, Ont., Aug. 13—Because the St. Mary's Kiltie Band is a nationalist organization, the bands of the Seventh Regiment and the First Hussars of this city, refused to participate in the Black Knights of Ireland demonstration here to-day. The committee in charge decided in favour of the visiting musicians, and the local bands dispersed for the day.

Pledges of unswerving loyalty to the British Throne in the present European crisis and of the readiness of Orangmen to go to the front to assist Britain in, as Mayor Hocken of Toronto, put it, her "battle against despotism for the rights of mankind," characterized the speeches here to-day in connection with the celebration of the Relief of Derry, an innovation in Orange circles in Ontario, which was participated in by over 2,000 members of the Black Knights of Ireland from all parts of Western Ontario, including 300 from Toronto.

The speakers included Mayor Hocken, Toronto; Mayor Graham, E. T. Essery, Rev. W. C. Riddiford and Lt.-Col. Beecher, London, Grand Master Sir Knight Lankin, of Toronto; Canon Walsh, Brampton; Rev. Wm. Lowe, Lucan, and Rev. W. R. Knowles, St. Thomas.

A feature of the occasion was the carrying at the head of the immense parade of the green flag of Ireland, signifying a united Ireland in the present crisis.

CANADIAN TRADE WITH U. S. SAFE

No International Regulations To Prevent Export of Goods—No Fear of Stoppage of Foodstuffs

OTTAWA, Aug. 13.—The question has been raised in various parts of Canada as to what effect war conditions in Canada and United States neutrality will have upon the interchange of commodities between these countries. The fear is expressed by many that there will be a cessation of the export from the United States of such materials as are generally regarded as contraband of war. It is contended, for instance, that if the United States should provide Canada, a belligerent nation, with coal, then the former country would be contravening the conditions of neutrality. The same contention is made in connection with foodstuffs, and fear is expressed that in consequence the price of coal and other commodities will rise.

No Prohibition of Export.

The contention is not upheld by authorities in international law at the capital. There is no international regulation, treaty or agreement in connection with the conditions of neutrality which will prevent anthracite coal or any other kind of coal being brought into Canada from the United States. The same applies to foodstuffs and other exports.

The Government of a neutral State is under no obligation to prevent the shipment from its territory of goods — even if they be guns and rifles. Capture during transportation is the only penalty.

How A Nation May Offend.

According to eminent authorities the only manner in which a nation itself may be guilty of contravention of the laws of neutrality is, first, by the construction and equipment within its boundaries of war vessels for the use of a belligerent, and second, by the enlistment of soldiery for service in a foreign army.

NO ONE IS ACTING IN MAYOR'S ABSENCE

With Mayor Bullee out of the City since Tuesday morning and no one acting as his substitute, Mr. J. H. Burnham has been interviewed by the wives of men who have gone to, or have been accepted, for Overseas service. Mr. Burnham pointed out this morning that anything that may be done here is really a matter for Peterborough Council to take up. Many Canadian cities are making civic grants of different kinds, but in this City not even an enquiry has been made as to what may be needed. Mr. Burnham pointed out the necessity of someone acting for the City while His Worship is absent in order that some one may be vested with whatever authority may be needed.

Medical Specialists in England.

What makes a doctor a specialist? Can any physician or surgeon with money behind him take a house in Harley street or neighbourhood and practice as a specialist? He can do so, but it by no means followed that he will be recognized as a specialist by the profession.

To win the professional status of specialist, a man must hold or have held a professorship at a medical school or an appointment at a hospital in connection with the disease or group of diseases in which he professes to specialize.

Further, he must conform to certain rules of professional conduct. He must not take a less fee than one guinea—two guineas is the rule in London, and some charge three or even more — for a consultation, save in extraordinary circumstances. He must not see a new patient except on the introduction of the patient's own medical man. If called to a case the patient's medical man must be present or the specialist will decline to see the sufferer.

DEMAND FOR CANNED MEATS MAY BE LARGE

That the price of pork will not soar extremely high in Canadian markets, as a result of the war, was the opinion of Mr. T. F. Matthews when interviewed by The Examiner this morning. The extra demand, he said, would be for canned meats, which are manufactured in the United States, Argentina and Australia, and which are not manufactured to any considerable extent in the Dominion. Consequently the influence upon pork in Canada would be indirect, and not nearly as noticeable as upon the products of the three countries mentioned.

At present the market is so erratic that no indication of the real effect of the war can be taken from it as yet. This unsteadiness accounts for the high water mark in the price of live hogs having been reached in the past week. But the latest intelligence is the most encouraging. The English market yesterday was firmer, with a slight falling away in prices, and this morning the Toronto market was considerably steadier, and the prices more reasonable. This would indicate that Mr. Matthew's prediction that Canadian consumers will not be forced to pay exhorbitant prices for pork is correct.

Shot At Aviator Over Lake Erie

Special Wire to The Examiner:

TOLEDO, O., Aug. 13. — Aviator Tom Attwood, who is well known here, flew across Lake Erie to Amherstburg, this morning, but returned forthwith when he was shot at by a Canadian Revenue Cutter, which probably took him for a German spy.
